MY DEAR BROTHER KINCAID—You have certainly had a hard struggle to stay by the cause there as you have with a determination that proved your faith in the work there, and also proved that you understood the importance of the field as a great missionary field.

I have said in many ways and in many places that Hot Springs, Ark., is the most important missionary field in the United States to-day. I have been in all parts of the United States and have always been looking after the interest of the Church of Christ. I have held meetings in Hot Springs and have never preached in any community or city where I had the opportunity of preaching to so many people who had never heard our plea as at Hot Springs. I am ready to do anything I can do to help carry on that work. I want to see a good house of worship at that place, and a good home for the members of the Church of Christ who go there in ill health. It is the greatest health resort in this country. I know you, Brother Kincaid, are all right. You are making a great sacrifice for the cause, and so is your wife. You are as honest as the day, and every cent given for that work will be properly accounted for. I hope that all of my friends who may chance to read this will be prompt in sending a good offering to help save the lot, and encourage one of the greatest works in the United States to-day. If friends can send only a dollar, let them send it at once. Send a thousand dollars, if they can spare it for this great work. Then, I hope and pray that they may live to see that they have invested in the best work we have that is in need of help. It is the Macedonian cry. If I had the means, I would send it at once, and never ask any one to help, but I am without means to-day. Will they hear? Will they heed? Will they help in this time of need? Or will they read this letter and lay it by and say: "There it is, call for more money. It is money, money, all the time"? I do not heed every call that comes to me, because I can not, but knowing this field as I do, and knowing these brethren as I do, I make this plea. I am not pastor there. I do not know that I will ever get there again, but if it is the last call I ever made on earth, it would be: "Help the cause of my Master in Hot Springs."

J. V. UPDIKE.

Receipts for the past week, $51; previously reported, $724; total amount received up to date, $775, and $300 in pledges. Send all remittances to T. N. Kincaid, Hot Springs, Ark.

Up the Congo.

twenty-three were absent, some evangelizing in the interior, some absent through illness or domestic reasons. The evangelists are sent out in pairs to the different parts, and are entirely supported by the contributions of the native church. Collections are taken after each communion service and from 300 to 1,000 brass rods (the native currency) are collected each Lord's day. The communion service was conducted by Dr. Dye and one was pleased to see the quiet and reverent way in which the communicants took part. A few members of other churches were present, visitors at Bolengi, workmen on the steamer staff, one or two who had come to Bolengi to avail themselves of Dr. Dye's medical skill, and so on, and one felt the unity of the members of the Church of Christ as here we met, black and white, slave and free man, civilized and savage, at the table of our common Savior and Lord.

The medical work done by Dr. Dye is simply splendid; some of it I had the opportunity of seeing.

The Sunday-school consists of eight classes. After the opening exercises, three classes adjourned to the meadow outside and were taught by their respective teachers, Dr. Dye taking the senior class. Five classes were all too many for effective operation in the school room, and the missionaries will find an advantage when the new chapel is built, for it will be, I believe, more commodious and suitable. Previous to the Sunday-school, Dr. Dye took the teachers for a little while in a sort of preparation class, so that they should not go uninstructed to their scholars.

The evening service took the form of a Christian Endeavor meeting. There are over 50 members and over 100 associates in connection with the Endeavor at Bolengi. Dr. Dye led the meeting. The pledge was repeated by all. After a few opening sentences on the subject for the day, "Preparation for the Heavenly Home," Dr. Dye invited the members to speak, and quickly one member followed another, speaking more or less intelligently on the subject. Nine or ten spoke. Then followed prayers, real Christian Endeavor style, short and to the point, thus allowing a goodly number to pray. Dr. Dye then told the society that I was bound for England and asked the society if they had any messages for the Christian Endeavor Societies in England and America. At once burst forth a spontaneous cry from many lips, "Tell them we want more teachers, more white men." Yes, that I am assured is often the burden of their prayers: "More men to instruct them in the way, the truth and the life." More men to point their fellow countrymen to him who is the way, the truth and the life.

"More men," yes, but let them be the right sort of men, men right with God, consecrated, whole-hearted, unselfish men, "full of the Holy Spirit" and of power; men without cranks and fads, work-withable men, men who, while firm where principles are involved, are willing to sink self and self-interest for the general good.

I leave this message, this appeal, from the Christian Endeavor Society at Bolengi with you to forward to the Christion Endeavor Societies of America, and conclude this lengthy letter by saying how impressed I was with the evident fact that the Spirit of God is working amongst the people of Bolengi, and by expressing my joy at being permitted to spend Sunday with your missionaries at this your flourishing and beautiful mission station at Bolengi, in the heart of Africa.

Learn to Make Your Own Carpet Stretcher and Stretch Your Own Carpets with Ease.

Every housewife wants this simple, effective and costless device by which her carpets can be put down and stretched more easily and with less back-breaking hardships than she ever experienced before in stretching carpets. Scores of people who have used it say: "A person can stretch and tack more carpets in a given space of time, and do it more easily with this simple device, than with anything else invented." It is not like any other device known, and yet any man, woman or boy, who can handle a saw and hammer, can make one in ten minutes as well as a first-class carpenter. You have the material within easy reach, and it will not cost one in twenty anything at all. All the money derived from its sale is devoted to missions in the churches of Christ. A dime will pay for the full directions, postpaid.

Are They Scriptural?

On page 16 will be found an editorial from THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST entitled "The Real Issue," replying to the "Standard's" editorial entitled "An Amended Truism." In the outset, it will be noted that THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST represents the "Standard" as amending its own truism, when the title to our editorial was taken from the fact that our contemporary had changed our truism to suit its own notions, and then answered its own amendment. But this fact, brought out in our editorial, was carefully kept away from THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST'S own readers.

The statement that the "Standard" does not object to federation on the ground of denominationalism, because we said in effect that if federation were permissible for churches of Christ they might federate with Baptist and Free Baptist churches, is entirely unwarranted. We said nothing of federating with the Baptist denomination, if there is such a body. Intelligent Baptists say there are Baptist churches, but no Baptist church. There is not a hint in anything we have said in this discussion which indicates that we hold that churches of Christ should federate with a denomination under any circumstances.

If our contemporary had taken second thought, it would have discovered no ambiguity in our use of the terms "legitimate" and "legitimacy." Political states may recognize each other's political legitimacy, and religious bodies each other's religious legitimacy. But we accept THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST'S amendment and substitute "Scriptural" and "Scripturalness" for "legitimate" and "legitimacy."

Our St. Louis neighbor and critic has worse than wasted its space in taking a column to show that we, according to its own representation, have signified a willingness to federate with two denominations, are in duty bound to federate with others as well. But we have never conceded the legitimacy or Scripturalness of any denomination, and until we have at least inferentially expressed our willingness to federate with any denomination—Baptist or pedobaptist—any attempt to commit us to the principle of federation with denominations is futile.

We take it for granted that as our general statement has not been challenged, that political and religious bodies can federate only when they recognize each other's legitimacy (or Scripturalness, where religious bodies are concerned), THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST agrees that the churches of Christ in the Restoration movement could not federate with bodies that are not churches of Christ; that is, bodies that have no Scriptural right to exist. Now, as it affirms "boldly and unequivocally that we may co-operate [federate] with all evangelical Protestant bodies," we would ask in the interest of that clear understanding of an opponent's position necessary to edifying discussions, if THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST holds that these Protestant evangelical bodies, or denominations, are (1) Scriptural, and (2) churches of Christ. More definitely, is the Methodist Episcopal church, or denomination, with its human creed and sprinkling and pouring. Scriptural and a church of Christ? Are the Presbyterian, Episcopal and United Brethren churches or denominations, with their human creeds and affusion for baptism, Scriptural and churches of Christ? Or, to include the Congregationalists, is a congregation of unbaptized (unimmersed) believers Scriptural and a church of Christ? Any other discussion would be profitless until this question is satisfactorily disposed of.—Christian Standard.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

Mrs. J. L. Moore has visited the following places during January: Brevier, Hamilton, Kidder, Platte City, Laclede, Linneus, Sumner, Moberly (East Side Auxiliary), Auxvasse, Vandalia and Laddonia. She was received and invited to come again by Hamilton, Kidder, Sumner, Auxvasse, Vandalia and Laddonia. This means that there are women there who are willing to hear and give thought to the C. W. B. M. plea. At Platte City she had an enjoyable time with the faithful women, and an offering of $18.34 was taken for their special apportionment and a special gift to the state of $5. This is splendid. Mrs. Moore will go to southeast Missouri in March, and we hope that many new places will be open to the message. She has a fine lantern and illustrates her talk. To see the pictures of actual buildings, surrounded by those working or being cared for in them, carries the message in a double sense. If any churches or societies would like the great work of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions presented to its church, with a view to teaching worldwide missions, Mrs. Moore will gladly visit you. Write the secretary.

I am in receipt of a most complete little book from the author, Mrs. G. B. Longan, of Kansas City. It is called "Parliamentary Rules Made Easy," and its name indicates its import. We thank the author very much.

The March quarterly letters with report blanks will be sent shortly, and we hope for prompt responses. The state year is nearly three-fourths gone, and every auxiliary should look to it that at least the three parts of its apportionment for special is sent with the March offering. Doing this will save a struggle and a rush in May that it may be closed up in time for the convention report, which must be in St. Louis, on June 1. Auxiliaries in the race for a place on the Honor Roll should try to reach a little higher and win a place on the Certificate Roll. This is new and a little harder to reach than the Honor Roll. Write for conditions.

Corresponding Secretary.

Michigan.

We can make use of three or four good preachers in Michigan, who can work for a small salary—men with a clean record.——More than 40 evangelistic meetings have been held in Michigan within the past six months. There is great activity among our churches along evangelistic lines. The most of these meetings are being held by our pastors, who go out to weak churches and hold a meeting for the free-will offerings. Many of our small churches are thus strengthened that would not otherwise be able to secure an evangelist. W. H. Kindred and L. O. Drew have been giving the most of their time to evangelistic work in Michigan.——D. Munro has recovered from his long sickness and is located with the church at Algonac. The work at Algonac is taking on new life and coming to the front in missionary offerings. We need all-round missionary preachers—men who believe that "the field is the world" and that no part of it should be neglected.——James Small, with C. J. Tannar, at the Central Church, Detroit, had 40 additions.——B. W. Huntsman is expected back to his old field in Adrian, March 1, after an absence of two years in Australia.——H. L. Maltman is holding an evangelistic meeting at South Haven, an important field, where we have about 25 earnest Disciples, and where we hope to have a self-supporting church.——V. H. Miller, of Petersburg, held a meeting at Clay Hill, with more than 40 additions.——J. A. Findley, of St. Johns, is assisting J. G. Wilson in a meeting at Waldron.——A. B. Moore, of Alliance, O., has been called to the work at Ionia, and is now on the field.——J. S. Raum has closed his work at Saginaw and is now in a meeting with the church at Yale.——F. A. Higgins is in a meeting at Eau Claire with five additions at last report. Brother Higgins is doing a fine work at Benton Harbor.——J. W. Curch has been called to the pastorate of the Trowbridge Church for the second time and is now on the field.——F. P. Arthur is assisting T. P. Bauer in a meeting at Battle Creek. Brother Bauer is doing a good work at Battle Creek, and that church is destined to become one of our best churches.——The work is moving all along the line and conditions were never better in Michigan than to-day. We expect to be in line for the great centennial campaign, and Michigan missions must come to the front.

Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia.

As the corresponding secretary of Maryland, Delaware and D. C., and your correspondent, I extend the hand of Christian fellowship and co-operation. I shall hope to have many things to report concerning our missions and churches, which are ever actively busy in the Master's service.

Charles M. Kreidler has entered successfully upon his work as pastor of the Twenty-fifth street mission, Baltimore, Md. He has added 32. The other churches of the city are likewise successful. Claris Yeuell has tendered his resignation as pastor of the Randall Street Church. We are looking for some good, earnest, faithful preacher to take his place. The church is located among the multitudes, where possibilities of success are limitless. I recently visited the churches in Harford county, preaching and looking after their interests. There were four accessions. Brother Gaff has resigned and I hear that W. E. Powell, recently of Newport News, Va., has located. He has a splendid field, and a most excellent people with whom to labor. We wish him all success. H. F. Lutz, of Harrisburg, Pa., assisted me in a series of meetings at Downsville, Md. There were 29 accessions, two being by letter. Brother Lutz was called home but the good work continued. This church has had a wonderful growth in numbers and influence. I trust the day is not distant when she may have a pastor located in her own community. Here the multitudes attend the church and the Sunday-school is full.

Mark A. Collins, pastor of our new mission church, Waynesboro, Pa., recently closed a meeting there with six accessions. His work is most encouraging and his people are delighted with him. He is now conducting a series of meetings at Fairfield, Pa. F. D. Kershner writes most encouragingly of his work in Martinsburg, W. Va. The building is not sufficiently large to accommodate the people. Special services are now being conducted. This place was recently a mission of the Hagerstown and Beaver Creek churches. All of the churches—Md., Del. and D. C.—are requested to send remittances to J. Irvin Bitner, treasurer, Hagerstown, Md., without delay. Our missions must be sustained and the work must go forward as never before.

A Triumph in a Hard Field

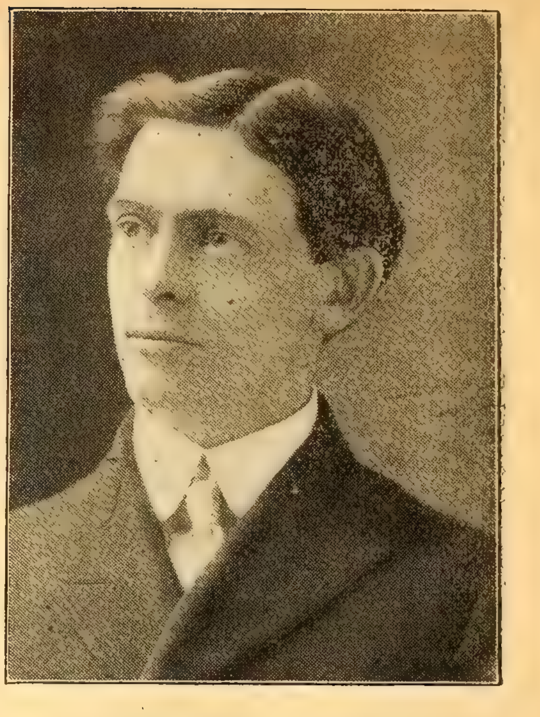
How Persistency and Faith Won at Council Bluffs.

W. B. Clemmer.

J. P. Garmong.



William J. Lockhart.

By the Pastor.

The evangelistic campaign at the First Christian Church, Council Bluffs, Iowa, which was conducted under the leadership of Evangelist Wm. J. Lockhart and J. P. Garmong, of Des Moines, came to a triumphant close Tuesday night, February 6, in a great "fellowship service."

During the thirty days' campaign, 167 persons came forward upon confession of faith and by letter and statement. The numerical additions do not seem so great as many other meetings reported, but there is the feeling here that it has been one of the most successful revivals ever held in our city. There were 100 confessions of faith, 48 by letter and statement, 17 from other religious bodies, and 2 reclaimed.

The greatest good is not in the number of additions, though that is a very large good. To our minds, the most valuable asset of the meeting was in the confidence which this campaign has given the church for future larger work and a genuine desire for evangelism. Council Bluffs is notably not a town beside itself with zeal for religion. Indeed, the religious life of the city is at a very low ebb. The union revival conducted last year by M. B. Williams resulted in fewer actual additions to the churches than this meeting. Our own congregation had no sympathy with evangelism and little faith in the permanent good of the results of religious revivals as generally conducted. It was only after continued pressure of a two years' progressive campaign faithfully persisted in that consent was fnally obtained to make this "experiment." The evangelists came upon the "free-will-offering" plan. The church had no confidence in their ability to pay a reasonable compensation for such services. Therefore the results stand out the more remarkably. The evangelists were amply recompensed above that which they would have received upon any other plan. The church is radiantly happy, the community is speaking the praise of the meeting and of the evangelists and we are in a position to go forward as never before. At the fellowship meeting the new members pledged an aggregate amount of $500 toward the church work for the year.

This work is due to the general conditions in which the church was and to the wise choice in evangelists. Brother Lockhart is endowed with a personality and persuasive power that is unusual. His text is not "Arise and thresh," but, preaching the truth in love both in the church and in the homes daily, his working motto is: "He is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think. People always left the services in good feeling with a desire for more. Brother Garmong is a song leader and personal worker of far more than average ability. He sings the Gospel from the heart to the heart. We take it as a providence of God that we were led to call these evangelists to this work. They were suited to the time and place.

Our prayers for over two years are realized. At the beginning of this time there was a debt of over $1,800, and the congregation in low spirit for any movement. This debt was cleared a year ago. We were wholly out of debt when this evangelistic campaign was begun.

During these two years there have been added 292 members, confidence is established, harmony reigns, former things are passed away, and we shall, I trust, begin the planning for a greatly needed modern structure, upon a new location. We thank God and take courage.

W. B. CLEMMER.

The Evangelist's View.

The meeting just closed is the consummation of plans well laid months ago.

For years Council Bluffs has been known as one of those "hard fields." But W. B. Clemmer and his faithful wife have had confidence that a great victory could be won. They have worked for two years with that end constantly in view. They engaged their evangelist long enough ahead to give both church and evangelist time to prepare for the meeting. They gathered the few about them and inspired them with the same confidence and finally won the official board to believe that larger things could be done. Some few entered the meeting haltingly and questioned the power of God, but all came out of it believing that he "is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think."

One good has been reached by this faithful pastor and helper, but it only gives confidence in the realization of another ideal—the erection of a modern house of worship. Already the people see that it can be done, and a movement to this end is on foot. It is sure to come and I believe soon. Any ordinary church can have anything it wants when it wants that thing enough.

The meeting was not all it might have been, but it was a great victory well earned by a God-fearing pastor and people, and it gives promise of greater things in the future in that name that never fails.

W. J. LOCKHART,

The Bible Schools and Revivals

By J. H. Bryan

It has become an old story that eighty-five per cent of the additions to American churches come directly from the Sunday-schools. And yet it is a rare thing that we hear of a systematic campaign for the increase of the schools. We are just now rejoicing in the splendid reports which come over the wires concerning the successes from evangelists who with the single congregation, or in a campaign like this one recently closed in western Pennslyvania, have brought their hundreds to Christ. But how few are the reports of the great ingatherings into our schools! Yet this is a necessary preliminary to the definite decision for Christ. The reason is not hard to find.

Here is an average congregation. It seldom fails to have a protracted meeting of from three to six weeks each year. Into this meeting the ministers, the singers, the church members and church officers put their best efforts, after a special evangelist with a singer is employed at from $20 to $75 per week to assist in the work. But the congregations are few which have the habit of holding an annual rally for the school if even for a few days. And the number is still less which put in so much as a week, with pastor, people, and visiting evangelist systematically and enthusiastically at work for the upbuilding of the school.

Against this background, the success of the recent revival in the Council Bluffs school is all the more striking. The Bible school had about 125 in attendance. W. B. Clemmer, the pastor, led in the revival and his class, the Queen Esther class, held the first rally day. On Friday and Saturday nights the state superintendent was with them and again on Sunday. The teachers met a week before and set 200 as the mark at which they should aim. This number was apportioned to the various classes, each teacher agreeing to work to secure the number assigned. The result of the day's rally was an attendance, not of 200, but of 258. This rally was continued through a number of weeks. Brother Clemmer's own words best describe the work as it progressed. "After Queen Esther day, we 'humped' the men and on that zero Sunday we had 37 men in a chorus on the platform and 237 in the school. Then we rallied the women and Dr. Poston had 45 on the platform in a woman's chorus and 255 in the school. Last Sunday with no set effort and boom we had 215."

Think of 37 men in a chorus in Sunday-school! Yet this should be no uncommon thing, nor will it be when we come to understand that every Disciple should be a Disciple in fact as well as in name and when we systematically work for this end.

Brother Clemmer understands, too, the value of the school as an evangelistic agency, and followed up this campaign with another, led by Lockhart and Garmong. It is in accord with what I have stated, that when it was with difficulty Brother Clemmer induced his church to send for the Sunday-school evangelist for two or three days, he had no difficulty in persuading these same people to send for the "church" evangelist and his singer to come for a campaign for twice as many weeks.

I hope no one will think I am sour or disgruntled. I have more work to do than I can attend to, but these "drops of ink" are "to make you think" and act.

Some of the Things That Won in the Meeting at Niles, Ohio

The Christian church at Niles, O., has just closed the greatest revival in the history of the city, which has been stirred from its center to its circumference. Pedro and dancing clubs have been broken up. The lid has been put on in the city as never before. All classes of evil doers have been hit hard.

D. D. Burt, Pastor at Niles, Ohio.

There were six things which can be held directly responsible for the success of the meeting.

1. Preparation for the meeting. For three months before the meeting began it was constantly announced from the pulpit. It was the theme in our prayer-meeting and a topic of conversation in the home. And even though there was no visible demonstration from this work people were thinking about it and praying for it.

2. The members of the church rallied unitedly and enthusiastically, and entered the work with a determination to win. When they met opposition from other religious organizations, with Bible or Bible literature in hand, they met them and conquered.

3. Everything was organized in committees, and with scarcely an exception each one cheerfully responded to the work enjoined.

4. We had a splendid chorus choir of young people, accompanied by an orchestra of boys, led by one of the elders of the church. All these, with few exceptions, were in their places every night, and were an inspiration to the audience. Some were not Christians before the meeting began, but every one had accepted Christ before its close. It was a common thing to see one or more step from the choir loft during the invitation, go back into the audience and lead some companion to the front to accept Christ.

5. Our soloist, Miss Ruth Hall, of Wheeling, W. Va., was a power in the work; not only does she possess a rich, well cultivated voice, but she is a young woman of beautiful character, consecrating her talents to this work, in the face of great allurements in the concert and operatic field. She possesses a splendid personality, and is an untiring worker in a campaign of this kind.

6. The evangelist. It is not my aim to unduly heap plaudits, but Herbert Yeuell merits all that can be said of him. He was the man we needed for the place. He is an orator, a fearless and emphatic expounder of truth and a born leader. He understands men. He goes after the sin in the church first, and makes the sinner there feel more uncomfortable than the sinner outside; as a result of this nearly a score of church members, some of whom are among the most prominent, came to the front and re-dedicated their lives to Christ, and renounced all worldly or questionable amusements. In preaching the plain, simple Gospel, Herbert Yeuell hits night after night as the Gospel hits, and the result was that over 75 out of the 260 were from other organizations—Methodist, Presbyterian, Lutheran, Congregational, Evangelical, Baptist and Catholic. From the latter three splendid men, heads of families, accepted Christ, and are among those who rejoice most in, to them, a new-found Christ. Brother Yeuell does not work for converts to make a large showing or big count. He pleads with men to come to Christ, but to make a complete surrender. Out of this number who have come 220 have been baptized into Christ. Whole families have come, and the majority of the 260 are adults. The church has taken on new life, and we are already planning and looking forward to greater things and a still greater campaign next year.

D. D. Burt.

stone was laid in Zion? Is there anything like fidelity to the outlines furnished by the apostle Paul without return to the beginning at Jerusalem and restoration of the original Church of Christ—its commandments and ordinances, faith and worship, name and policy, practice and methods, as known by the apostles? This done, would not our Lord's prayer be answered, and rivalry and strife, conflicting and dicordant teachings, waste and loss in means, labors and souls growing out of the curse of sectarianism, be avoided?

To hold fast the form of sound words and fill out the outlines then given by Paul, there must be one body, and that not a human organization with a human name and human government, but the one body, or Church, of Christ, governed by the One Spirit, inspired by the one hope, under the supreme authority of the One Lord, exercising and standing for the one faith, obedient to the One Captain, glorifying the One God and Father over all. This Timothy must hold fast, grasp, grip close, keep safe. Unsoundness would be disease, ruin, death. Infallible remedy for all error, for all departures, for all antagonisms would be the form of sound words. "Preach the word." "Contend earnestly for the faith." The world drifts; men drift. The church drifts. Away from God it may be, from truth, from the things that can not be shaken. All sorts of false faiths, delusions, shams and quackeries men run after to-day. The old-time religion, the Christian religion, the faith once delivered to the saints, alone abides. Opposed to the gangrene of every Hymeneus and Philetus, hold to the model.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Syracuse, N. Y., Feb. 18.—Herbert Yeuell is here in great meeting; 20 to date; 17 to-day; ours, a down-town church, is a serious problem. Our people did not believe we could get audiences for a meeting. Yeuell's lecture on Saturday did the impossible—packed the church; 1,000 men at Bastable theater to-day; nearly 1,000 at women's meeting; church filled every night. This city of 150,000 is talking the meeting. Perry McPherson is doing good work as singing evangelist.—Wm. D. Ryan, Pastor.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Anderson, Ind., Feb. 18.—Sixty-three added to-day; 234 in seven days; 960 to date; 206 signed the Endeavor pledge today. Crowds and interest were never greater, and since the first week never less. Let a grateful brotherhood praise the Lord with us and pray for us. Brother and Sister Grafton are God's faithful, consecrated servants.—Charles Reign Scoville and De Loss Smith.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Portsmouth, O., Feb. 19.—The Harlow meeting closed to-night with 612 additions in six weeks. Thirty-nine responded to the last invitation, and there were 61 additions the last day, with the largest attendance in the city's history. Meeting a grand success in every way; an assistant minister at work; plans for new building accepted. This makes 913 additions for Harlow here in 10 weeks. Many think the meetings could have continued two weeks longer with 200 more added.—George P. Taubman, Minister.

Arkansas.

Bentonville, Feb. 12.—Two additions yesterday.—J. W. Ellis.

Arizona.

Bisbee, Feb. 6.—One addition recently.—Dan Trundle.

Colorado.

La Junta, Feb. 9.—We have just closed a five weeks' meeting, with 97 additions, 64 by confession. Our membership is now 228. J. T. Stivers was the evangelist.—A. L. Ferguson.

Idaho.

Lewiston, Feb. 13.—We are beginning the third week of meeting; 30 additions. B. D. Chestnut has charge of the music.—H. H. Hubbell, Pastor.

Indiana.

Indianapolis, Feb. 12.—Evangelist James Small closed a 12 days' meeting recently, with 21 additions—10 by confession, 7 by statement, 3 by letter and 1 reclaimed. We continue with home forces; 6 more added.—J. D. Hull, Minister.

Scottsburg, Feb. 13.—Ten additions to date; interest fine. Meeting will continue several days. I preach here half time and at Austin and Zoah each one-fourth time. One confession at Zoah last month and two added at Austin since beginning there. Outlook promising in all the congregations.—C. O. Burton.

Seymour, Feb. 10.—I held a ten-days' meeting at Little York, with thirty-six additions—32 by confession and 4 from other bodies. The church is taking on new life.—Thomas Jones.

Stroh, Feb. 13.—Our 23 days' meeting with home forces closed with 43 additions—36 by baptism, 1 by statement and 6 reclaimed.—M. O. Johnson, Minister.

Gifford, Feb. 12.—This is a new field. Meeting one week old with eight confessions. We continue.—R. M. Marshall.

Columbus, Feb. 11.—I have just closed a good meeting at New Hope Church, near here, with 35 additions.—W. R. Jinnett.

Canton, Feb. 12.—I closed a short meeting, resulting in 17 additions, 15 by baptism.—W. Y. Allen.

Tampico, Feb. 16.—Our two weeks' meeting closed with 23 additions—17 by baptism and 6 by letter. A. W. Crabb was the evangelist.—Daniel Empson.

Illinois.

Decatur, Feb. 13.—Twelve additions recently.—J. L. Thompson.

Fisher, Feb. 12.—Our meeting closed with 17 additions. In 39 months 134 added without outside help.—S. Elwood Fisher.

Pittsfield, Feb. 12.—We are in a fine meeting; building taxed to utmost; 34 added to date; will continue. H. A. Davis is assisting.—W. E. Spicer, Minister.

Stillwell, Feb. 14.—Our nine days' meeting closed with 22 additions—10 by confession, 4 by statement and 8 reclaimed. J. W. Larimore did the preaching and E. E. Tanner had charge of the music.—J. W. Tanner.

Danville, Feb. 16.—Closed 26 days' meeting at the Third Church, with 61 additions. W. T. Shearer was the evangelist.—S. S. Jones, Pastor.

Ipava, Feb. 16.—Meeting 12 days old; 19 confessions. H. A. Northcutt, evangelist; Charles E. McVay, singer.—Jesse T. Craig, Pastor.

Raymond, Feb. 16.—C. J. Upton, of Barnett, closed a week's meeting with 11 additions, 6 by confession.

Shelbyville, Feb. 16.—Our meeting closed with 60 additions—45 by confession. John W. Marshall, evangelist, and Edward O. Beyer, singer, were our helpers.—L. H. Otto.

Iowa.

Burlington, Feb. 12.—Sixteen additions since last report; 227 since Dec. 18.—F. D. Eisenhart.

Cincinnati, Feb. 13.—Fourteen additions in seven days; increasing interest. J. B. Lockhart is the evangelist; R. C. Leonard, minister.—J. H. May.

Sac City, Feb. 9.—We are in a good meeting, with C. L. Organ; 76 additions to date.—Mrs. Lura Cress.

Vinton, Feb. 11.—Two additions yesterday—one by confession and one by statement—A. B. Elliott, Minister.

Woodbine, Feb. 12.—Two additions by baptism yesterday. We are now planning for the simultaneous campaign in Bible school work.—B. Franklin Hall.

Des Moines, Feb. 15.—We have just closed a two weeks' meeting at the East Side Church, with 4 additions, and the spiritual life of the membership deepened. F. L. Moffett, of Centerville, did the preaching.—T. J. Dow.

Goldfield, Feb. 16.—We have just closed a successful meeting, with 15 additions. M. B. Ainsworth and Brother Wake were the evangelists.—A. F. Ainsworth, Minister.

Mt. Sterling, Feb. 14.—Our two weeks' meetings just closed with 8 additions. Charles L. Wheeler did the preaching and Mrs. J. H. Davis, of Oskaloosa, had charge of the music.

Kansas.

Asherville, Feb. 12.—We are in the midst of the best revival in the history of our little church. Twelve have been added in one week, and with every meeting the interest increases. J. W. Garner, of Perkins, Okla., is our evangelist.—A. N. Noell.

Holton, Feb. 14.—Three additions at Rossville recently—2 by baptism and 1 by statement; 10 additions since taking up the work the middle of January.—George M. Reed.

Plainville, Feb. 12.—Held short meeting at Stockton, with W. W. Blanchard. Good attendance and one confession. One addition at Plainville recently. We are planning to begin a meeting here soon.—N. Ferd Engle.

Elk City, Feb. 17.—We are in the second week of meeting, with 13 additions to date. Audiences are large.—J. P. Haner, Evangelist.

Agra, Feb. 15.—Our meeting closed with 57 additions.—J. M. Lowe, Zeandale.

Oxford, Feb. 13.—Our two weeks' meeting closed with 9 additions, 8 by baptism and 1 by statement.—B. F. Stallings.

Missouri.

Brunswick, Feb. 15.—One added last Lord's day—E. H. Williamson, Pastor.

Buffalo, Feb. 12.—Six additions recently, All departments increasing in attendance and interest.—J. Q. Biggs, Pastor.

Herculaneum, Feb. 13.—Closed Sunday night with 32 additions. Organized a congregation, a Christian Endeavor Society, and splendid Bible school. The meeting was held in the Knights of Pythias hall, which had to be given up to lodges three nights each week.—T. J. Head, Mountain View, Mo.

Kansas City, Feb. 12.—Three additions yesterday at the Forrest Avenue Church, 2 by letter and 1 from the Baptists. Our Sunday-school is growing and our audiences increasing.—H. M. Barnett, Minister.

Kansas City, Feb. 12.—Ten additions to the Hyde Park Church since last report, 1 by confession, 9 by letter.—Louis S. Cupp, Pastor.

Eldorado Springs, Feb. 12.—Three additions yesterday at regular services.—John Giddens.

Mt. Vernon, Feb. 10.—We have just closed a short meeting at Belle Rive

Troy, Feb. 13.—One addition recently; 8 additions at Elsberry during the past month.—E. G. Merrill.

New York.

Buffalo, Feb. 15.—Two additions by confession. B. H. Hayden, of the Forest Avenue Church, is in a good meeting with A. Martin, of Iowa.—B. S. Ferrall.

Auburn, Feb. 16.—Our meeting is one week old, with 14 additions—13 by confession. Eight added at regular services since last report.—D. R. Goodrich, Clerk.

Syracuse, Feb. 12.—I began a revival meeting at the Central Church with Evangelist Herbert Yeuell yesterday—one confession. R. P. McPherson is our singing evangelist.—Wm. D. Ryan.

North Tonawanda, Feb. 17.—The five English-speaking churches here held union evangelistic services during the whole of January, the first week being the week of prayer. The pastors did the preaching, and meetings were held at the several churches in rotation. The immediate result was small, but the fact that the churches preach a common Gospel received strong emphasis, and will bear fruit in other ways. During the meeting a religious census of the entire city was taken, every house being visited, and information elicited that will be of the greatest value during the whole of the year.—E. M. T.

Tonawanda, Feb. 15.—Our meeting is 10 days old, with 18 added; good interest and crowded houses. The outlook is promising for a large ingathering. Brother Randall, the pastor, is a most untiring worker. I go next to Chagrin Falls, O.—I. H. Durfee, Evangelist.

Nebraska.

Humboldt, Feb. 15.—Our 16 days' meeting at Filley closed with 32 additions—all adults but two; 17 were men. A. J. Hollingsworth is the student-preacher and is doing good work. This is my first revival meeting, and it has strengthened my faith in man and God.—Bert Wilson.

Omaha, Feb. 11.—The meeting at Florence resulted in an organization of 63 members—39 being by confession. Harry Knowles was the singer. We were assisted by some of the members of the North Side Church, Omaha.—Edward Clutter, Evangelist.

Ohio.

East Liverpool, Feb. 12.—Our three weeks' meeting closed with 36 additions—24 by confession. The church is revived. An Intermediate Christian Endeavor Society has been organized with 30 members.—E. P. Wise, Pastor.

Paulding, Feb. 12.—Two confessions recently; 79 additions since Jan. 7, 75 being by baptism.

Glouster, Feb. 17.—Twenty additions in four nights. This is a fine church.—J. Bennett, Evangelist.

Hamilton, Feb. 17.—The meeting at the Lindenwald Church closed with 42 additions—30 by confession. L. O. Drew, the evangelist, is now in a meeting at Muir, Mich.—W. H. Hedges.

Marion, Feb. 10.—I have just held a short meeting near Delaware. We will organize with about 25 members.—O. D. Maple.

Shreve, Feb. 15.—I have just closed a three weeks' meeting, with 20 additions, 15 baptisms.—L. J. McConnell, pastor.

Warren, Feb. 11.—Our three weeks' meeting just closed, with 110 additions, 91 by baptism. J. E. Lynn, the pastor, did the preaching, assisted by Miss Ida Mae Hanna, as singer.—Clerk.

Oklahoma.

Pawnee, Feb. 16.—Just closed a 17 days' meeting at Blackburn, with 45 additions—35 by confession.—M. F. Ingraham.

Geary, Feb. 11.—I held an all-day meeting at Lahoma recently, with 2 confessions. The church is prospering, and the Bible school doing good work.—R. S. Smedley, Evangelist.

Lahoma, Feb. 14.—C. A. Hill and wife held a successful three weeks' meeting last December, resulting in nine additions.—S. W. Hill.

Texas.

San Antonio, Feb. 12.—Four added yesterday.—D. D. Boyle, Minister.

Waco, Feb. 12.—The Central Church is taking on new life. Five additions yesterday, three by baptism and two by letter. We are planning for a meeting with Homer T. Wilson beginning March 25, and later H. A. Northcutt.—G. Lyle Smith.

Sulphur Springs, Feb. 6.—Three accessions by primary obedience recently; 12 additions since last report.—J. W. Famuliner, Pastor.

Washington.

Toppenish, Feb. 8.—The meeting at Zillah is 12 days old, with 30 additions—23 by confession. The interest is increasing. Morton Rose is the evangelist, E. E. Francis, pastor.—Lydia Horton, clerk.

West Virginia.

New Cumberland, Feb. 5.—Two confessions. A Dorcas society was recently organized, and C. W. B. M. increased from 20 to 34 in last month. We close our first year's work here next Lord's day, and continue indefinitely. Work goes hopefully forward.—Charles C. Cowgill, Minister.

Parkersburg, Feb. 12.—Two added yesterday—one by confession and one by statement.—G. F. Assiter.

Wisconsin.

Grand Rapids, Jan. 28.—Our young church which was organized by Brothers DeVoe and Shields last May, with 44 charter members, is doing splendidly under the leadership of C. W. Dean, formerly of Colfax, Ill. We have had 20 additions since Brother Dean took up the work here, Oct. 15, 1905. Three were taken into the church last Lord's day by baptism; 2 by letter and 4 by baptism to-day; 8 of these last 9 are fathers and mothers or husbands and wives. Five more are awaiting baptism. Our teaching and plea of the pure, simple Gospel is little known in this great missionary field of Wisconsin, and fondly embraced when presented in its simplicity. Our Bible school is growing nicely, we now have an enrollment of 100, and 77 in attendance to-day. There are many good openings here for various kinds of business in this thriving city of nearly 7,000 people, with four good lines of railway and water power. It is the place for our brethren to secure cheap farm lands; I would like to have those looking for same to locate with us.—B. G. Eggert.

Richland Center, Feb. 14.—Splendid meeting; closed with 51 added. Interest intense. We go to Missouri for our next meeting. Have an open date for May.—Lawrence Wright, General Evangelist.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh.

Those who suffer with it know well the miseries of catarrh. There is just one thing to do—have it cured. It can be done. To prove it to you, send your address and the means of a quick and safe cure will be sent to your home free in every way. The idea in giving it to you free is to prove to you that there is a home cure for catarrh, scratchy throat, asthma, stopped-up feeling in the nose and throat, catarrhal headaches, constant spitting, catarrhal deafness, etc., etc., and that the remedy that does it is the invention of Dr. J. W. Blosser, the eminent southern doctor and minister, who has for over 31 years been identified with the cure of catarrh in all its forms.

His discovery is unlike anything you ever had before, as it is not a spray, douche, ointment, atomizer, salve, cream, or any such thing, but a genuine tried-and-true cure that clears out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe the free air and sleep without that choky, spitting feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It will save the wear-and-tear of internal medicines that only ruin the stomach. It will prevent colds and heal up the mucous membranes so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting.

If you have never tried Dr. Blosser's discovery and know that you need such a cure, and want to make a trial of it without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and a thorough free trial treatment and also an elaborately illustrated booklet, "Plain Facts About Catarrh," will be sent you at once, free, so that you can begin to cure yourself privately at home.

Now write him immediately.

Dedications.

Brazil, Ind.

The new church was dedicated just one year from the time of the burning of the old building. F. M. Rains was in charge, and $14,600 was raised or pledged, being six hundred dollars more than was needed. The expense of rebuilding and furnishing has been $20,000, but the value is $25,000 as there was some material left from the old building, while the church and the lot is estimated to be worth $28,000. The arrangements are all modern and complete as this amount of money could make them. There is a main auditorium, a lecture room and thirteen additional rooms that can be used for Sunday-school and other purposes. One of these, including three in the gallery, can be made into lecture rooms. Oak pews in the main auditorium will seat four hundred persons. The lecture room and annexes will bring the total seating capacity up to nine hundred. The choir, reception room, pastor's study and ladies' parlor are part of the equipment. A good pipe organ has been installed, while the basement is complete in all the demands of a working church. The whole building is beautifully frescoed, and the first and second story rooms are carpeted. The lecture and Sunday-school rooms are seated with chairs. The location of the building is very desirable, it being both prominent and central. Edward L. Day is the pastor, and he and his congregation deserve great credit for the way they have carried out this enterprise.

South Bend, Ind.

The Linden Avenue Church has just been dedicated, P. J. Rice, the pastor of the First Church, having charge of the services. This building was the outcome of a Sunday-school work started in the extreme western part of the city by some women of the First Christian Church. It met in one of the homes of the ladies interested but soon the second floor of a dwelling house was rented, and an old organ secured, and the work formally launched. From time to time improvements were made in the equipment, and as one of the results of the work some sixty people have united with the First Church, and thirty-seven members of the school were baptized during the past year. The people of the community were the first to act in reference to a building. Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Hollowell provided a lot, and in October a plain frame structure was begun, the cost complete being about $1,200, independent of material and labor donated. Some $500 were raised at the dedication. George A. Campbell, of Chicago, was present and made a few remarks. It is expected that a good work can be done in this modest but useful building. It is the only church in the community and there is promise of a bright future for it.

Pontiac, Ill.

A very handsome new building has just been dedicated at Pontiac, Ill., which was filled to overflowing on the occasion. J. H. Gilliland, of Bloomington, delivered the dedicatory sermon, and at the afternoon services congratulatory speeches were made by a number of preachers. The new building is of brick, 60x70 feet, and is one of the most modern and convenient in the city. Its seating capacity is 500. Although one of the longest established in Pontiac, our church has not grown as have some others, but lately, under W. G. McColley, who has worked hard and faithfully both in building up the membership and in attending to the details of church erection, we have gone forward and some one hundred new members were added to the church rolls this last year. The cost of the structure, including the organ and furniture, amounted to $16,900. At the dedication service $8,033 were raised, leaving about $1,000 still to be provided for. This has not been achieved without heroism, both on the part of the membership and the preacher, and the congregation deserves the hearty congratulations of the brotherhood.

Kansas City, Mo.

We dedicated another new mission chapel Sunday, January 21, at Mount Washington. W. F. Richardson, chairman of the city mission committee, preached the sermon, and about $500 were raised—enough to provide for all indebtedness. We have a neat chapel, with art windows, furnace, robing rooms, baptistery, etc. I began a meeting there January 29. We expect to open new fields soon.

Frank L. Bowen,
City Evangelist.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

THE WORLD'S IDEA AND THE CHRISTIAN'S IDEA OF TRUE HAPPINESS.

—Luke 6:20-26; 1 John 2:12-17; 2 Cor. 6:10; Phil. 4:4-7.

The world's idea has been, "Eat, drink and be merry to-day, for to-morrow ye may die"; the Christian's is, "Love, serve, worship to-day, for to-morrow is an eternity in which we may reign with Christ forever." The world's surfeiting is the crucifixion of the spirit; the Christian's discipline is the putting off of the flesh.

"Let millions die for me," said Caesar, whose name and fame are execrable. "Let me die for the millions," cried Jesus, whose memory is ever becoming more adorable with the flight of time. All having true discernment are now aware there is more happiness in nobly dying than in cruelly slaughtering—in service than in imposition.

The world may have its pleasures of the chase, the table, the tour, the levee and the play, but we wish for it the higher joy of contemplating the goodness of God, seeing a world saved, catching glimpses of third heaven experiences and looking forward to a promised reunion with our loved and lost for awhile, and seeing Jesus who gave himself for us.

In quest of happiness, the world asks: "Is it good?" The Christian asks, "Is it right?" The world learns through bitter experience that if in seeking its good "a man breaketh through a hedge a serpent shall sting him." The righteous find serene delight in the Christian way and no remorse in their memories and no tremolo weeping through the cadence of the songs they afterward sing.

One of the world's criterions of happiness is to be hail fellow well met with all—universally popular; but the Christian remembers Jesus said, "Woe unto you when all men shall speak well of you!" Popularity is desirable, but not at the expense of a conscience void of offense. The Christian is happier if God alone smiles on him than the worldling can be though every crowd exulting shout his name, but under a frowning providence.

It is well to note that Jesus, whom one of the opposition declared to be a teacher sent from God, never said, "Blessed are the rich because of their riches, nor the wise because of their wisdom, nor the beautiful because of their beauty, nor kings because of their thrones"; but his beatitudes were for the meek, the pure in heart, the peacemakers and those hungering and thirsting after righteousness. Those first things for which the Gentiles seek we may never have, but these latter graces, freighted with possibilities of present and everlasting happiness, all the Israel of God may acquire.

Happily, the world's idea of happiness is conforming more and more to that of the Christian's. It has learned that the authority of the law of Moses is not in the divine ipse dixit, but in its constitutional relation to man's highest good; that an aggressor suffers greater injury than his victim; that unbridled indulgence of any desire of the flesh is suicidal; that there is greater delight in serving than in being served; that 'tis more blessed to give than to receive. We rejoice in the increasing harmony, and trustfully pray that loved ones in the world may yet be saved and share with us heavenly as well as temporal happiness.

THE ISLES OF THE SEA.—Is. 42:4.

Churches of Christ have prosperous missions in Jamaica, Porto Rico, Cuba, Havana, Japan and the Philippine Islands. In the latter are 4 stations and 22 outstations, 6 missionaries, 18 native helpers and a total membership of 718. Beside more waters we are sowing, and the gold in the home granaries is increasing the faster as we sow the more generously.

Steam and electricity have brought what were once distant islands closer to the great stronghold of Christianity today than was Cyprus to Jerusalem and Antioch in the days of Paul and Barnabas. The physical barriers to their evangelization are chiefly gone. Science, God's handmaiden, has opened up the "way"; may we now cultivate the "will" and within a single generation the isles of the sea will be sparkling gems in his royal diadem.

The first Lord's day in March is the day specially set apart as the time for all Disciples, both individually and congregationally, to make offerings for the evangelization of the world. Let us make of this a sacred festival and have joyous fellowship together and with our Lord, in bringing redemption to all who have been in bondage to heathenism, and blend our voices with islanders of unfamiliar tongues singing praises unto him from whom all blessings flow.

A permissible translation of our text is, "The islands shall long for his law." The prophecy is already fulfilled. The cry for redemption is wafted by every ocean wind. The queen of Madagascar, after witnessing the miracles daily wrought among her people by Christianity, exclaimed: "O, Christians, why did you wait so long! Why do you not come faster?" The pathos of some zones is their people know not what they need, but it is God, and blessed is that church or Disciple that tells them and reveals him as their Father.

It will take an eon of island evangelization for the Christian continents to send over the seas men and gold enough to compensate for the blest vision of heaven wafted to them from the lonely sea girt rock of Patmos. Either, "And he shall wipe away every tear from their eyes, and death shall be no more; neither shall there be mourning, nor crying, nor pain any more"; or, "And there shall be night no more; and they need no light of lamp, neither light of sun; for the Lord God shall give them light; and they shall reign forever and ever," has done infinitely more for Europe and America than they have done for the children of the sea.

To those looking for opportunities for garnering heavenly treasures the islands with their millions hungering for the liberty of the truth are far more attractive than Klondike, whose gold burns toward the miner's pick. Floating away in the sea, they seem brighter far to the true priests of the temple with instincts for duty than do gleaming stars drifting in the sky to astronomers, whose telescopes may draw them so nigh that on them they may write their names among the immortals of science! To have had a humble part in adding one little isle to the kingdom of heaven will some day be honor far more exalted than to have reigned over the mightiest empire of earth.

The islands wait for the Servant of Jehovah to bring them an enlightened civilization and dwell in savagery, or at best under dense shadows of ignorance, superstitious fears, destructive sinfulness, suffering lack of all things ministering to real ennoblement, until Jesus comes to them bearing the light under which milk and honey flow, the amenities of virtue, learning, kindness, home and heavenliness flourish, and life has meaning. O, enshrined in the hearts of holy men and women, let us quickly bear this Servant to them that they who have so long sat in darkness may see a great light spring up, and the music of their falling chains and the hallelujahs of the redeemed will thrill our hearts with heavenly joy.

JESUS TELLS WHO ARE BLESSED.—Matt. 5:1-16.

Memory verses, 3-6.

Golden Text.—Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God.—Matt. 5:8.

The Sermon on the Mount, in so far as it represents an actual discourse delivered upon a single occasion, belongs to a somewhat later period than that which we have been considering. The first section of the Galilean ministry, which extended from the return to Galilee until the calling of the twelve, was at an end. Putting John's account with the Synoptics, we have reason to believe that there had been a brief visit to Jerusalem to attend a feast (John 5).

On his return to Galilee to resume his ministry, his fame was spread abroad still more than before. Out of the considerable number of those who had attached themselves to him with some degree of fidelity and continuity, he now chose twelve to be the intimate and constant companions of his ministry and the instruments by which his teaching was to be perpetuated and popularized after his death. Some of these twelve were men who had already received a preliminary call (John 1:35-42 and Matt. 4:18-22.) It was immediately following the call of the twelve, according to Luke's account, that the beatitudes were spoken.

Matthew collects into a single discourse utterances which Luke reports as spoken on various occasions. It is possible that the sayings which make up the discourse were repeated by Jesus to various audiences on several occasions, so that both Matthew's and Luke's settings of the sayings are accurate though they are not in agreement. It is also possible that Matthew, whose whole arrangement of his material is topical rather than chronological, has collected in these three chapters sayings which were not delivered at any one time.

At the beginning of this more systematic portion of his ministry, Jesus lays down with some completeness the principles upon which he proposes to base his kingdom. Those principles were fundamentally in contrast with the principles which were currently accepted as axioms. He therefore begins his discourse with a series of bold paradoxes by which he sets forth the principles underlying true success and blessedness. The paradoxical character of these beatitudes is obvious in all except one or two of them.

"Blessed are the poor in spirit"—for they shall be spiritually rich in the inheritance of the kingdom of heaven.

"Blessed are they that mourn"—for the discipline of sorrow, bringing wisdom and patience and insight into life, leads to more real satisfaction than mere pleasure can give.

"Blessed are the meek"—for victory comes not to the quarrelsome and arrogant, but to those who know how to yield, to be humble and to be content.

"Blessed are they that hunger and thirst"—for in the spiritual realm the blessing belongs to those who are conscious of their dependence and who desire, not to those who are complacent and self-satisfied.

"Blessed are the merciful"—they shall receive mercy, and besides it is even more blessed to be merciful than to be the mere recipient of mercy.

"Blessed are the pure in heart"—for only by moral purity can man be brought into near relations with God, not by any scheme of perfunctory ritual performance.

"Blessed are the peace-makers"—for God loves such and calls them his children; he does not call men his sons by reason of any accident of birth among a chosen people.

"Blessed are they which are persecuted, and reviled"—for the endurance of these evils in the interest of the kingdom of God brings its sure reward. God's messengers have always had to endure hardship, and it should be a source of satisfaction rather than of regret.

In these beatitudes Jesus tells who are the heirs of the kingdom and what are the qualifications for citizenship in it. The qualifications are all internal, spiritual and moral, not formal or technical. He next (verses 13-16) speaks of the responsibilities of those who meet these requirements, and become children of the kingdom. It is not simply a question of meeting certain requirements to secure salvation; there is the immediate duty for all who attain spiritual health to become savers of others. The duty of salt is not to preserve itself but to season and preserve other things. The business of a light is not to make a creditable display of itself as a light, but to illuminate other things. So those to whom the truth has come are not only to be saved by it but also to use it as a means of helping others.

China.

PRESTON BELL HALL.

In the gloaming sits poor China,
Weeping by her ancient wall;
While the glory of our nation
Is in Him who died for all.
In her many gilded temples,
Chant the priests their songs of doom;
In her many crowded cities,
Christ, our Lord, has there no room.

Helpless all her priests to save her,
Helpless all her ancient lore;
Christ must enter, and no other,
And He stands now at the door.
Christ, who died to bring salvation
To a world of sin and woe,
Loves as much the Chinese nation
As the Israelites of yore.

Oh! His love's a wondrous ocean,
Wider than the pathless sea,
Rolling on in peaceful motion,
Making heavenly melody.
On the shore of China's glory,
Break the waters from above;
'Tis the Gospel's sweet old story
Of our Lord's redeeming love.

Like the voice of many waters,
Mingling hope and joy and peace,
Answering faith, to Christ's evangel,
Sings her song of glad release.
And when on His throne of glory,
Christ as King all men shall own,
China's voice with ours will mingle,
In a sweet and joyous tone.

The Bronze Vase.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

[Mrs. Revore, mother of the twins, Raymund and Rhoda, when dying tells them that there is a secret which may or may not have great influence upon their later lives. The secret is in a letter which is in a tin box in the bank of the town. The box is to be opened and the letter read only if either one of the twins makes the other very unhappy. The mother dies, and Raymund and Rhoda are left to the mercy of strangers, their mother's half brother in St. Louis having failed to answer repeated letters from Mrs. Revore. A consultation of the kind-hearted people of the town is to be held to decide upon what to do with the two children. In the meantime they are cared for by Miss Glory Aggency, a maiden lady, who lives with her brother, Mr. Merlin Aggency, who is considered "queer." The consultation about the children is held, but comes to no definite conclusion. This leaves the twins still on Miss Glory's hands, who has absolutely refused to keep them longer. The children visit their old home and bid it good-bye. The furniture is sold to pay some of their mother's debts. Raymund and Rhoda are still cared for by the unwilling Miss Glory.]

Chapter VI.

It was several days after old Mr. Merlin Aggency's escape to town, before either of the twins saw him again. In the meantime they were kept in suspense as to what was to be their future. Mrs. Omer, meeting Miss Glory on the street one afternoon, replied in answer to the old maid's earnest inquiry, "No, I have not been to Kansas City yet, to interview the board of the orphan home. I could correspond with them, but I feel there is much more hope of getting Raymund and Rhoda taken in, if I myself visit these ladies in person."

"I can not keep them after the week is up," Miss Glory warned her. "I do not understand children. I think they are as good as any other ordinary children, but I can not have my home broken up in this way. I have not one word to say against them, but I have a word to say for myself. That word is, Peace. I have no peace while they are in my house."

Saturday was the day set for the public sale of the late Mrs. Revore's household effects. On Friday evening Raymund and Rhoda asked permission to go to the house and once more say good-bye to the rooms they loved so dearly. Mr. Jennings had the key to the house. "You can go in there," he said, begrudgingly, "but, mind you, not a thing is to be took out. I ain't goin' to near git back the money I loaned on that there furniture. Furniture don't sell for nothin', if it's been once used. I wouldn't never have loaned your ma the money if she hadn't been laid on her bed, an' you children so young. I ain't a-complainin'—no man is cheerfuler than me; but I say to the past 'Farewell,' an' now I'm lookin' out for A No. 1, as far as Jennings is concerned." Mr. Jennings' chin-beard quivered with emotion and his little black eyes gleamed with the resolution to have fair play.

"Maybe," said Rhoda, timidly, "you would rather we wouldn't go into the house, Mr. Jennings."

"I don't say that," returned Mr. Jennings, who could not help being a little gruff when he reflected that he would not get all his money back; "go if you want to. Here's the key. They ain't any man more accommodatin', I don't care where you go to find him, than Jennings. Go ahead. Don't mind my feelin's—I'm cut up, and I was peeled first; but I don't 'low to be biled. Take the key!"

They knew he did not want them to take the key, but that he would not like it if they didn't. So with little satisfaction they accepted his offer. But when they entered the familiar yard in which they had played for seven years, they were glad Mr. Jennings had agreed, no matter how unwillingly.

"Now, let's forget," said Rhoda, "that Miss Glory lives just next door."

"We won't look over there," Raymund agreed. "For awhile, this is our home again, and we are going to stay here forever and ever."

They went to the door. "And mother is upstairs waiting for us," said Rhoda, as she unlocked the door; "we mustn't keep her waiting."

"Oh," said Raymund, as they entered the darkened front room, "if she only were!" Rhoda sobbed unexpectedly, then closed her mouth in a very determined manner. They went from one room to the other gazing at the articles associated with all the parts of their lives that they could clearly remember. In the kitchen was the bulgy goggle-eyed stove on which the girl had cooked for her mother. "She never told me I couldn't cook," said Rhoda softly. "I thought I did pretty well."

"It was good enough for mother," said Raymund. "Everything we did was good enough for her. We'll never find anybody else as easy to please."

They went upstairs and into the room where Mrs. Revore had lain so many months. There was the bed freshly made up, and everything they had known so well. "Wouldn't it be fine," said Rhoda, "if you and I could live here and keep house? You could eat my cooking and nobody else need care. Why couldn't we?"

"Because all this furniture belongs to Mr. Jennings," said Raymund.

"Sure enough, if we were rich, we could."

"If we were rich," said Raymund, "the court would have to take care of us. We'd have to have a guardian if we were rich, but there's nothing for anybody to be guardian over but just our two bodies."

Rhoda smiled at him. "Mother said if we learned that secret in the tin box, it might make us rich."

"And unhappy," Raymund added.

"I would think," said Rhoda, "that if anything would pay a person to be unhappy, it would be to have lots and lots and lots and lots—"

"Oh, Rhoda," cried Raymund, smiling, "you are just piling it up! I don't expect we would have all that, if we did know the secret. And besides, mother's wish is for us not to know it unless some time, she said, there comes a great difference between us."

"But nothing will ever come between us, will there, Raymund?" cried Rhoda, flinging her arm about him.

"No, there won't," cried Raymund, kissing her.

After awhile he added, "It is getting late now. Say good-bye to the room."

Rhoda looked at the four walls and the ceiling and said, "Good-bye." Then she added, "Now you say 'Good-bye.'"

"Good-bye," said Raymund, soberly. Then he added, "Now we will say good-bye to the bed."

Rhoda began to weep. They were standing at the bedside. "It seems so empty," she whispered. "Let's"—she did not finish, but knelt by the bed. Raymund knelt at her side, and they sobbed. Soon the girl cleared her throat and said, "Ask God that we are not to go to an orphan home."

Raymund hesitated, then said, "It might be all he can do."

"Well," said Rhoda sadly, "maybe so. Good-bye, dear bed. We may never see you again. We won't go to see you sold—will we, Raymund?"

"Oh, no, no!" cried Raymund. So hey kissed the bed and soon after, left the house. "But I am glad we came," said Rhoda, as if in answer to her own feelings. The next day was the sale before the court house steps. Rhoda and Raymund stayed closed in in Miss Glory's house as the wagon, loaded with their mother's furniture, was hauled by.

"They didn't bring much," Miss Glory informed them, speaking a trifle mushily, as she had slipped her teeth into her apron-pocket, the first station on their route toward the glass on her washstand. "Mr. Jennings lost about $75 on his chattel mortgage. I'd a-thought a man that loved money as much as Mr. Jennings loves it, would know better than to lend on furniture. It never pays."

"He felt sorry for us," Raymund explained. "He told us so. That is why he lent mother the money. And when I am able I will pay him back every cent he has lost. Mother had me to promise."

"No doubt," said Miss Glory drily. And that was all that she did say. The next morning she asked the children if they would go to church.

"We have been talking about it," said Rhoda, "and if you don't mind, we would rather not go. We think when they get to singing the hymns, we would remember how mother loved to sing the very same ones, in her corner seat—and the seat would be empty; we would feel so bad, we would make the others unhappy, just to see us."

Miss Glory was touched and had a feeling which in another kind of woman would have found expression by taking the child in her arms. Miss Glory could not for an instant think of doing such a thing. But she hastily drew a round enameled box from the pocket of her black apron, and opened it impulsively. "Children," she said, "take one apiece. They are cough lozenges, and taste just exactly like candy." And so they did; like that kind of candy that gives one an odd impression that he smells something unpleasant. But Raymund and Rhoda instantly divined the sympathetic impulse which prompted the gift. They each selected an oblong brown lozenge, and said, "It does taste exactly like candy!" Not for the world would they have shown by a screw of the mouth or a tilt of the nose that the morsel gave them a sense of sickening emptiness. "Now, run and play," said Miss Glory; that was her only remedy for the sorrows of childhood. They hastily left the room and as soon as the door was closed Raymund opened his eyes very wide and said, "Let's take 'em out!"

"No," said Rhoda, who was determined to taste Miss Glory's kindness to the last sickening drop.

"I'm going to save mine till I have a cough," said Raymund, slipping the lozenge into his hand, and starting toward the window. At that moment the door opened and Miss Glory said, "Come here a minute, Raymund!" Raymund followed her guiltily, clutching the lozenge, while Rhoda went by his side rather ostentatiously sucking hers. It appeared that Mr. Merlin Aggency had called for Raymund. All three went into the room where the venerable man lay upon the bed. His eyes brightened.

"Come here, boy," he said eagerly. "You understand me, and you understand figures. I am very much bothered."

"What can he do for you, brother?" asked Miss Glory in the gentle voice she always used in addressing the elder.

"Figures are so strange," said the old man rapidly. "They have such power. They must be treated in the right way, or they will not yield to you. Look at 9. Nothing but 3 will divide it. There is no use to try 4—there is no use. Something will be left over. Now, that is what bothers me. Something is left over. Suppose you try to divide 9 by 2. It is no use. Something is left over."

"Wait till you are well, brother Merlin," Miss Glory pleaded, "and all will be clear to you."

"No, I have thought about it a long, long time. Maybe the boy can tell me. Take 5. Divide it into 9. Something is left over. Now this is the question." He sat up suddenly and fixed Raymund with his bright eye. "Something is left over; whose is it?"

"Sir?" said Raymund.

"Whose is it, boy? To whom does it belong? There is something left over. Who has a right to it?"

"Answer him, Raymund," said Miss Glory, desperately, "or he will become quite ill, again."

"You might say it belongs to the next figure," continued Mr. Merlin Aggency. "But we are now supposing that there is no other figure. Is it not 90, or 96 or 99; it is a plain, unattached 9. You divide it by 3. That is all right. But try 4. It is no use. Something is left over. Now, now whose is it?"

"What is left over," said Raymund, grasping madly for a solution to the difficulty, "belongs to whoever the 9 belongs to."

"Ha?" exclaimed the venerable patient. "Why, boy, it is an inspiration! You are right." His face relaxed and the deep smile came about his mouth. "It could belong to nobody else. That is what troubled me. I see it now."

Miss Glory was so grateful to Raymund for calming the distracted mind of her brother that she went to the length of patting him affectionately upon the head. Whereupon Raymund, in remorse at his meditated treachery against the old lady, slyly slipped the lozenge back into his cheek.

Hospital Notes in China.

Doctor. "Well, what is the matter?"

Patient. "Eyes."

Doctor. "What is the trouble with your eyes?"

Patient. "Eyes."

The doctor, after repeating the latter question several times, obtained the answer, "Sore eyes," and finally discovered it was the mother's eyes that were sore.

Doctor. "Well, bring your mother and let me see her."

Patient. "She is not here."

Doctor. "Where is she?"

Patient. "At home."

Doctor. "Have her come to-morrow."

Patient. "I can't. She lives too far. It is 400 li away. I want some medicine to carry home to her."

By this time there was nothing to do but for the doctor to guess at the kind of medicine needed and dismiss his patient.

Another man applied for medicine for "leg." The doctor had to go through with a similar kind of catechism, and found after some ten minutes or more that it was some other person's leg that needed treatment. Such is the experience of a medical missionary in China, and often he has a hundred or more patients to see before dinner.

One old lady was brought to the hospital with a broken leg. Although 75 years of age, she was most contented and happy. She tried to memorize a few sentences about the Gospel, but it was a struggle for her. When she was about well, the doctor said she might go home, but she replied, "I think I'll wait awaile. I don't want to leave this nice place. It is so much better than home."

Another woman came to have her eyes treated. Everything was dark to her. She could not see a thing. The doctor operated for cataract on both eyes. It was gratifying to see her delight over being able to see again. She was exceptionally bright in learning the Gospel stories we told her.

One of the worst sights among the patients this spring was a woman with a great tumor hanging from her upper lip. It was suspended by a mere piece of skin and reached below her chin. She said it had been growing there for nine years. It was one of the easist kind of operations, and in a very short time the lip healed with only the slightest scar.

The Three Filial Daughters.

In the city of Nanking there is what is known as the great bell. It is 18 feet high and at the base 7 feet in diameter, and weighs many tons.

When foreigners first came to Nanking they found the bell two-thirds buried in the earth. The people were superstitious about it and said it could not be taken up. A British naval captain came along one day and told them if they could not get it up he could; whereupon they were moved to try and of course unearthed it. A large tower was built for it where it now hangs.

The legend of the bell is as follows: A great man heated his metal and was desirous of making bells. He could not succeed. After many vain attempts to produce the bells, it was revealed to his three lovely daughters that the one thing necessary to the success of their father's project was for their bodies to become ingredients in the desired bells. Whereupon they became willing sacrifices to their father's enterprise and leaped into the molten metal. Immediately three immense and graceful bells arose from the caldron. One of these continued its course upward to heaven, another came down in the Yang Tsze river, and the other we have before us in the great bell of Nanking.

The bell tower is enclosed by a Buddhist temple. In one of the compartments of this temple may be seen the images of these beautiful and filial daughters. Many women and girls kneel and burn incense at their shrine.

Stage and Forum in Sinim

By William Remfry Hunt.

Theatricals and religion are twin sisters in the Orient. Stage and temple are equally related to hall and forum. This free and unique cohesion in play and devotion is universal among the yellow race. Into their common and aristocratic dramas alike are woven the sacred heroes of classic fame and the most execrated characters of song and history. To those who have learned to think as well as speak in the eastern languages, the contrast and variety afforded in the freedom and originality of these semi-dramatic comic operettas is pleasing, and would win even the man-from-over-the-ocean to consent to the warning, "Trespassers will be persecuted," against any sacrilegious gamesters who might dare to play "plagiarism" or "higher criticism" with the stage and forum in Sinim.

Contemporaneous with home, the artistes of the celestial stage have been through the centuries the public and popular oracular historians of the empire. Public theaters, rather than endowed libraries, seem to suit the taste of plebeian and patrician alike. Nor is there any indication, despite the renaissance in western arts and commercial conquests, that this highly patronized "chair of ancient literature" is likely to be disendowed.

China owes much to the stage. Without the facts and forces operating in its scenic operas as they are enacted every day in some of its 1,700 walled cities, millions of Chinese would be absolutely ignorant of the biography of its worthies, and of the songs, literature and history of the empire. The character and morality of the scene, the proscenium, the auditorium, dressing rooms, etc., will not be discussed in this article. Suffice it to say that in many instances the demonstrations are only a little above barbarism, even though the average student thinks it all but absolutely perfect. To the cultured western auditors, even the Chinese could aptly say with Emerson:

> "Pure content is angel's lot,
> Thine own theatre art thou."

In the compass of this article it is proposed to deal with a few sights which might interest the visitor to the far east, even though that visit might only reach its destination in a day dream or while during some lazy siesta perusing the pages of paper and magazine.

Shanghai is an eastern emporium. It is as wicked as it is modern. By day and by night it is a crowded, hustling, motley mass of human life. Henry Norman describes it as "a magnificent European city, surrounding a broad and crowded river." This magnificence is merely skin deep, and the smells are entirely unique, notwithstanding public gardens, electric lights, theaters, telegraph poles and gay bunting seem to keep up the birthdays of some of the royalties represented in the vari-colored garments and heterogeneous elements that jostle along its streets.

The Chinese theater is a wonderful institution. Chopsticks and bowls are in abundance. Din and confusion are a part of the program. Even the actors seem to play and scream extemporaneously. Occasionally some ancient hero is mentioned; then the gongs and cymbals and the whole bedlam of vibration caused by the striking of metal plates add to such a scene as makes Dante's Inferno a mere illusion. There are plays from the Sung dynasty (1127-1280) on to the Ming dynasty (1368), with all the accounts of the illustrious emperor Hung Wu, who built the Nanking city on its present grand scale. There are always also acts in comedy, melodrama and pantomime, which are favorites of the people in all the cities and million towns of the empire.

It is not an uncommon sight to witness the street orators declaiming against the heterodox creeds of both alien and native systems. Some of these really eloquent Jupiters of the celestial forum are educated men. A keen struggle for existence, unjust social conditions and the terrors of officialdom, keep them low. Among these men are to be found some of the best informed and most generous characters in Sinim. It is among these that the missions have found some of the ablest advocates of the new faith. Shi Kwei Piao was one of these semi-dramatic story tellers. God is able to use a man if he can influence his fellows, whether his training has been in Nanking or Chicago, Athens or London. There is true and high genius in and among the debris of human wreckage. Under the special commission appointed by the Christ we are living the strenuous life in discipling these less favored lands and are digging deep and building high, if haply we shall discover among those we are training in the Gospel some worthy successors of those ancient orators of Athens,

> "Whose resistless eloquence
> Wielded at will that fierce democracy,
> Shook the arsenal, and fulminated over Greece,
> To Macedon and Artaxerxes' throne."

Two Awful Suicides.

Justin E. Brown writes that as he arose one morning recently in Lu Chow Fu, China, his attention was attracted by an unusual commotion just outside the front wall of the mission compound. He soon discovered the cause to be the dead bodies of two women lying on the bank of a little pond directly across the street. Inquiry revealed the fact that these women had been the wives of two brothers who had lost all their money gambling, and had bargained to sell their wives to meet their debts, and to furnish further funds for gambling. The wives had no living relatives, so their only way of escape was through suicide. The crowds that came were moved mainly by curiosity for there was not even a suggestion of calling the husbands to account before the law for their crime. The wife of a Chinaman belongs to him in the same way as does his cow, and can be treated with abuse unless she has relatives powerful enough to make her husband show consideration.

Piles 14 Years

Terrible Case Cured Painlessly With Only One Treatment of Pyramid Pile Cure.

Free Package in Plain Wrapper Mailed to Everyone Who Writes.

"I have been a terrible sufferer of piles for fourteen (14) years and during all this time you can have an idea of how many kinds of medicine I tried. But I found no relief whatever. I felt there must be something that could cure me without having to undergo an operation which might kill me.

"Now, after trying but one treatment of your 'Pyramids,' I am free, free to tell all sufferers of this dreadful disease to try this medicine—the Pyramid Pile Cure. It will cure when all others fail. Sincerely yours, G. Branegh, Schellburg, Pa."

Anyone suffering from the terrible torture, burning and itching of piles, will get instant relief from the treatment we send out free, at our own expense, in plain sealed package, to everyone sending name and address.

Surgical operation for piles is nerve-racking, cruel, and rarely a permanent success. Here you can get a treatment that is quick, easy to apply and inexpensive, and free from the publicity and humiliation you suffer by doctors' examination.

Pyramid Pile Cure is made in the form of "easy to use" suppositories. The coming of a cure is felt the moment you begin to use it, and your suffering ends.

Send your name and address at once to Pyramid Drug Co., 13739 Pyramid Building, Marshall, Mich., and get, by return mail, the treatment we will send you free, in plain, sealed wrapper.

After seeing for yourself what it can do, you can get a regular, full size package of Pyramid Pile Cure from any druggist at 50 cents each, or on receipt of price, we will mail you same ourselves if he should not have it.

Advance Society Letters.

The time has now come to announce the Advance Society prizes; but before I do so—now, quit skipping down to see who got them, and please pay attention—let the little boys quit giggling in the rear—just a word about the society, for the benefit of the new subscribers (may their tribe increase!): These prizes are given to those who have sent in the neatest, most regular and, other things being equal, the fullest, four consecutive quarterly reports. Each report shows that for 12 weeks that member has not failed to read a verse of the Bible every day, memorize one good quotation from a standard author every week, read five pages of history every week, read 30 lines of poetry every week, and keep an account of work done in a note book. There are the five rules of the Av. S. And when you read that somebody has sent in his 20th quarter, it means that for 20x12 weeks (who can multiply that without getting a pencil?) that member has kept the rules. Just think of keeping steadily at this delightful and improving work for 20x12 weeks! Perhaps you've never done so for one week? Do get into line, and become a self-improver. Why, the idea of belonging to a society that doesn't charge a cent for dues, ought to make the neighborhood rush into our ranks! But this isn't telling who got the prizes (don't smile and think receive would be a better word; got is just the word we want; it implies an effort on your part; "receive" may sound more agreeable; but so does "breeze" sound finer than "pie"; yet give me the pie!)

Sadie Pugsley, of Woodbine, Ia., would certainly have secured a prize had she begun in time; but she took up the work on March 26, which did not give her a chance to get in four reports. All who read this will have time before February 11, 1907, to get in four reports, by beginning the Av. S. work immediately. Of course the work is just as beneficial to you, whether you receive a prize or not. Just at the last hour come the reports of Walter S. Whitacre, 1907 Broadway, Mt. Vernon, Ill. He sent his last three all in this big brown envelope. As soon as I saw it, I said to my mother, "Now, this boy took the prize last time, and there's no use looking at his reports with a view to the prizes, for I can't let him take it again." Those may not have been my exact words, but something near it. And then I considered (it's always best to consider) and I saw that Walter had just as much right to the prize as anybody, because nobody is debarred from striving after the prize for good works. So I said, "Well, if he is the best this time, I'll give three prizes, although I promised only two, and that will make everything all right (so many people spell that "alright," as if it were just one word). So I opened the envelope and saw that every report was a regular book, just as last year, all typewritten most neatly, but not bound in cloth and illustrated. There was a letter in it that ran thus: "You will pardon the delay in copying these reports when you learn that I have been sick in bed the greater part of the time during the past nine months. Many times it was very difficult to read my Bible, history and poetry under the circumstances. The habit, however, has now become 'chronic' and I am not liable to forget." (Please observe that liable was just the right word; apt, meaning skillful, would have been altogether wrong.) "I have not worked for a prize, and do not expect it, as I received 'Adnah' last year." (It is modest for Walter to say he received it, and only his due for me to say he got it.) "The habit is worth more than the prize. I like all the stories of yours that I have ever read, and so we had your latest one, 'Stork's Nest,' for Christmas. I trust this will reach you by the 11th, but if it has to change cars as many times as you did in making the trip to Bentonville, it may not reach you by that date." (Came all right, and it was raining hard when it rolled into port.) "With best wishes for the welfare of yourself and family (that includes Felix) I remain, Walter S. Whitacre" (with many kind words about my work with the orphan and missionary, too personal for others to read).

Missionary children in China.

Now, these reports of Walter's—well it is impossible to imagine any in greater taste and elegance, unless they were bound in cloth and illustrated; but, as he says, they should have come in a row during the year, about 12 weeks apart; so I am not going to institute comparisons, but say that the three best kept reports, all excellent in script or typewriting, and all showing splendid Av. S. work, were sent in by the aforesaid Walter, and by Flossie Davis, 1322 Twenty-fourth street, Des Moines, Ia., and by Beulah Shortridge, Glenwood, Ind. I wish I could publish the reports of any of these three, but The Christian-Evangelist would have to get out a big supplement with sideboards to hold them. Grace Everest, Oklahoma City; Lillie Fisher, Dunlap, Mo., and Manie Bayless, Mulkeytown, Ill., all sent in very full reports. I have mailed a copy of "Garcilaso" to Walter Whitacre, and a copy of "Adnah" to Flossie and Beulah. Only two prizes were offered this year, but next year, as now, three prizes may always try again. From time to time I will give you a quotation from these prize reports, which you can memorize, if you care to; this one, sent by Flossie Davis, is from Claude Menuet:

"Friends are like melons. Shall I tell you why?
To find one good you must a hundred try."

Now, you can see how this prize matter has taken up most of our room. And yet we have many important letters on hand. Mrs. W. A. Mason, Nevada, Mo.: "I enjoyed Charlie's letter in The Christian-Evangelist. Like the friend who sent the $10, I think it all right to begin an education fund for our orphan. The society couldn't do better work. I think his choice of being a typewriter or stenographer the very thing, for a good one demands good wages, and it is a suitable position for a cripple to hold. I am anxiously waiting to read the next letter from our missionary. You will find inclosed my little mite for Charlie and Drusie."

Springfield, Ill.: "I think the last chapter of 'The Bronze Vase' ought to have been published the first thing, so we would all have been sure of reading it before it gets lost. Of course, the Woodneys got the horse out of the house before the story got lost, but 'The Bronze Vase' might not be so fortunate. I want to tell you how helpful the dear Christian-Evangelist is to us. How would we get along without it? The dear old arm chair—I always look for that first. (Not so very old, I understand; only 64.) "If this were a little more scholarly, I would sign my name; but I am only an old woman, unused to writing, but a reader and a friend."

Mrs. Caroline E. Junger, Soldier, Ia.: "Don't let what people say hinder you from writing stories for children. . . . Splendid truths may be taught by means of a story, that would lie unheeded if presented as bare facts. You know we like to have our pill sugar-coated. If Brother Garrison can't find that missing chapter of 'The Woodneys'—" (But I spare him the rest, as this was written before Brother Moore came back to town.) "Enclosed find $10 for Drusie. How I do admire her strength and courage!" Mrs. David Jay, Blakesburg, Ia.: "You will find a letter enclosed to Charley, and as I do not know his full address I will ask you to kindly send it to him. Some of the characters in your stories are true to life. Mr. Woodney is a very fine character, but he had a big job on his hands, building up that church. I think it will take him another year at least, to build it." (I have forwarded Charlie Mrs. Jay's personal letter to him, as well as something green therein, which she sent for his use.) I have received a personal letter from Charlie, and without his knowledge, I will give a little of it to you, because I like its spirit and think you will, also: "St. Louis, Mo.: I was sick week before last, but am all right now. I received your letter a little while ago. The ground has been covered with snow, but it is melting. I read Brother Ely's letter. I thank him and all others who are giving toward my education fund. I had a second cousin who lived in Joplin, with both legs off. He made a living by selling lead pencils and playing a banjo. If he had had a good education he would not have had to beg. I went to Granite City with a gentleman who paid my way. I stayed all day and had a very nice time. I am anxious to get an education so I can make my way through the world myself. I think 'The Bronze Vase' very interesting. I do not have anything much to do out of school hours. I don't have much to play with." Ashley S. Johnson, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn.: "Send on the one dollar. I saw the writing first. School is opening up finely. We have a fine school. I wish you and the Av. S. much success." (I have "sent on" the dollar, and no one, I am sure, ever sent so much for a good cause more cheerfully.) F. A. Allen, Los Angeles, Cal.: "You say you trust not a single month in 1906 will be missed in sending Drusie $5. I will be one of 12 to see that this will be done, and inclose herewith draft for $5 for her use, and sincerely pray that God may bless her work abundantly. You asked if any giver's name had ever been omitted. I sent you $2 for Drusie in response to your first appeal, and never saw it mentioned, though, perhaps, it was. However, that was when I lived at Colorado Springs, and you in Plattsburg, Mo. Just so it reached the destination and helped Drusie in her noble work, that's the main point. I am greatly interested in the Av. S. work, and pray that the great mass of the church membership may be awakened to assist along these and similar lines."

Dorsey, Ill.: "The Ridgely Sunday-school heard about Charlie's wanting an education. Very few belong to the church, but all gave willingly $1.10. There were only six scholors there; country roads and winds are rough; collected, afternoon, 55 cents, anyway, and the $1.40 for Charlie. next time she must have more; give her 25 cents, anyway, and the $1.40 for Charlie None of the other ones ever read the children's page; they will, after this. I've read everything you've written; we've taken THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for 20 years. Children grow more interesting to me each year. I kept the rules two years, to get my little nephew to join the Av. S. He kept them a quarter; my niece, who lives with me, kept them all last year. The quotations I learned, help me yet." (I am sorry this letter was unsigned, but am pleased to regard it as coming from the whole Sunday-school. I wish them a big picnic this year and a fine time. The way you spell a fine time at a picnic is by beginning it with a "d" and putting a "double-n" in the middle.) Here is a note, signed "Subscriber," from Tarkio, Mo.: "I have been intending ever since I read somebody's criticism of 'A Week With the Woodneys,' to write how much I enjoved same. I think it better than any story I have read for a long time, and I have read a good many." (Now, then!) In our letters of two weeks hence, I have a splendid treat in store for you; among other things, a letter from our missionary Drusie; one from that old timer of Arkansas, Madge Masters, who sent me the sweet potatoes when I lived in Missouri; one from Mrs. F. M. Potts, telling of a most helpful boost to our Charlie-Education-Fund, one from Florence P. Haden, Cocoanut Grove, Fla., telling how a member of the Av. S. kept the rules while suffering from a railroad wreck—a true story that reads like a romance; one from Grace Everest, Oklahoma, Okla., who kept to her Av. S. work (bless her heart!) while fighting scarlet fever, etc. So, if you don't look out for that number of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, somebody will miss a good thing! Charlie's Education Fund now amounts to $29.60. So hurrah for Washington's birthday!

Bentonville, Ark.

A Missionary Hen.

The crowing of a cock was a call to Peter to repent. The Rev. G. O. Reavis tells about a missionary hen who unconsciously helped to save a man from sin. He was one Pedro, who lived at Linares, Mexico. He was a next-door neighbor to a missionary. Pedro was a Roman Catholic, but was living a life of sin. He would not attend the Protestant church to hear the preaching of the Gospel. Now Pedro had a hen which wandered away. As he went in search of her he chanced to pass through the yard of the missionary, where he found a pasteboard box which contained a Testament and some religious tracts. Out of curiosity Pedro took them home with him, and day after day as he had opportunity he would read his little Bible which he had found, and Pedro had strange feelings when he would read this book. He was convinced that he was a great sinner. Now and then he would enter the church and hear a sermon. God's Spirit would not let him go. Still he would not make the surrender and give his heart to Christ. Sorrow came to Pedro's home. His wife died; but still with all this he would not break with sin and come out fully on God's side. By and by he married again. His wife was a member of the Sunday-school class, though not a member of the church. Nineteen years have gone by now, and the missionary has gone to his reward. Another was given the privilege of reaping the harvest, for only a few weeks ago Pedro and his wife stepped forward to be baptized.

I Am the Paint Man

2 Full Gallons Free to Try—6 Months Time to Pay

☞ You Pay No Freight to Try My Paint.

I AM the paint man.

I have a new way of manufacturing and selling paints. It's unique—it's better.

Before my plan was invented paint was sold in two ways — either ready-mixed or the ingredients were bought and mixed by the painter. Ready-mixed paint settles on the shelves, forming a sediment at the bottom of the can. The mineral in ready-mixed paint, when standing in oil, eats the life out of the oil. The oil is the very life of all paints.

Paint made by the painter cannot be properly made on account of lack of the heavy mixing machine.

My paint is unlike any other paint in the world. It is ready to use, but not ready-mixed.

My paint is made to order after each order is received, packed in hermetically sealed cans with the very day it is made stamped on each can by my factory inspector.

I ship my pigment—which is white lead, zinc, drier and coloring matter freshly ground, after order is received—in separate cans, and in another can I ship my Oilo, which is pure old process linseed oil, the kind that you used to buy years ago before the paint manufacturers, to cheapen the cost of paint, worked in adulterations.

I sell my paint direct from my factory to user at my very low factory price; you pay no dealer or middleman profits.

I pay the freight on six gallons or over.

My paint is so good that I make this wonderfully fair test offer:

When you receive your shipment of paint, you can use two full gallons—that will cover 600 square feet of wall—two coats.

If, after you have used that much of my paint, you are not perfectly satisfied with it in every detail, you can return the remainder of your order and the two gallons will not cost you one penny,

No other paint manufacturer ever made such a liberal offer.

It is because I manufacture the finest paint, put up in the best way, that I can make this offer.

I go even further. I sell all of my paint on six months' time, if desired.

This gives you an opportunity to paint your buildings when they need it, and pay for the paint at your convenience.

Back of my paint stands my Eight Year, officially signed iron-clad Guarantee.

This is the longest and most liberal guarantee ever put on a paint.

For further particulars regarding my plan of selling, and complete color card of all colors, send a postal to O. L. Chase, St. Louis, Mo.

I will send my paint book—the most complete book of its kind ever published — absolutely free. Also my instruction book entitled "This Little Book Tells How to Paint" and copy of my 8 year guarantee.

O. L. Chase The Paint Man.

Optic Nerve Trouble Cured.

Erie, Penn., Nov. 23, 1905.

Dr. Oren Oneal—I have to inform you that all your instructions were followed as much as possibe and in my humble opinion the eyes may be looked upon as healed, "omnis medela a Deo" of course. But next to God the Almighty, I owe the healing of my eyes to you, dear friend.

"The Most High hath created medicines out of the earth, and a wise man will not abhor them." "My son, in thy sickness neglect not thyself, but pray to the Lord and he shall heal thee."

The doctor then is to be looked upon only as an instrument of God.

The only medicine I use now for the sight, is taking exercise out of doors and fresh water. Your method is to be praised highly. As far as I know, European doctors criticise sharply the American doctors for using the knife too much. You do not use the knife.

Now, dear docter, I thank you very much and may God reward you for what you have done for my sight.

Very truly yours,
REV. E. FRANCK, ST. V. H.

Noticed Improvement in Four Days.

Du Quoin, Ill., Oct. 9, 1905.

Dr. Oren Oneal—When I began the use of your treatment, about the twentieth of June, my eyes were very bad from optic nerve trouble. I could see to read or write but very little. If I tried to look at a paper or anything else it seemed as though a thin dark veil would fall down over my sight and prevent me from seeing; but after I began your treatment I could tell the improvement in about four days, and my eyes have kept on improving until now I can see as well as ever. I can see to read the papers and books now without glasses, and am very thankful that I wrote you concerning my eyes, for I believe I would have gone blind if I had not used your remedies.

M. C. DRY.

Had Suffered Five Years.

Fairland, Ill., Nov. 27, 1905.

Dr. Oren Oneal—I was afflicted with granulated eyelids and catarrhal conjunctivitis for five or six years, I have now taken three months' treatment and my eyes are better than they have been for years and I no longer need glasses.

I wish to thank you for what you have done for me and will gladly recommend your Dissolvent Treatment to be what you say it is.

Yours very truly,
MISS BLANCHE BUKER.

Had Granulated Eyelids Eight Years.

Luther, Mich., Oct. 10, 1905.

Dr. Oren Oneal—I want to thank God I ever found your ad. I had suffered so much from granulations for eight years. I had to give up reading and sewing and my housework was not half done. I had lost power to raise my eyelids, and a lump as large as a wheat kernel came in the inner corner of my left eye. After four months' treatment I am all right. I see to do my own work without glasses and people remark about the appearance of my eyes.

MRS. ISSAC WOLFE.

Another Illinois Case.

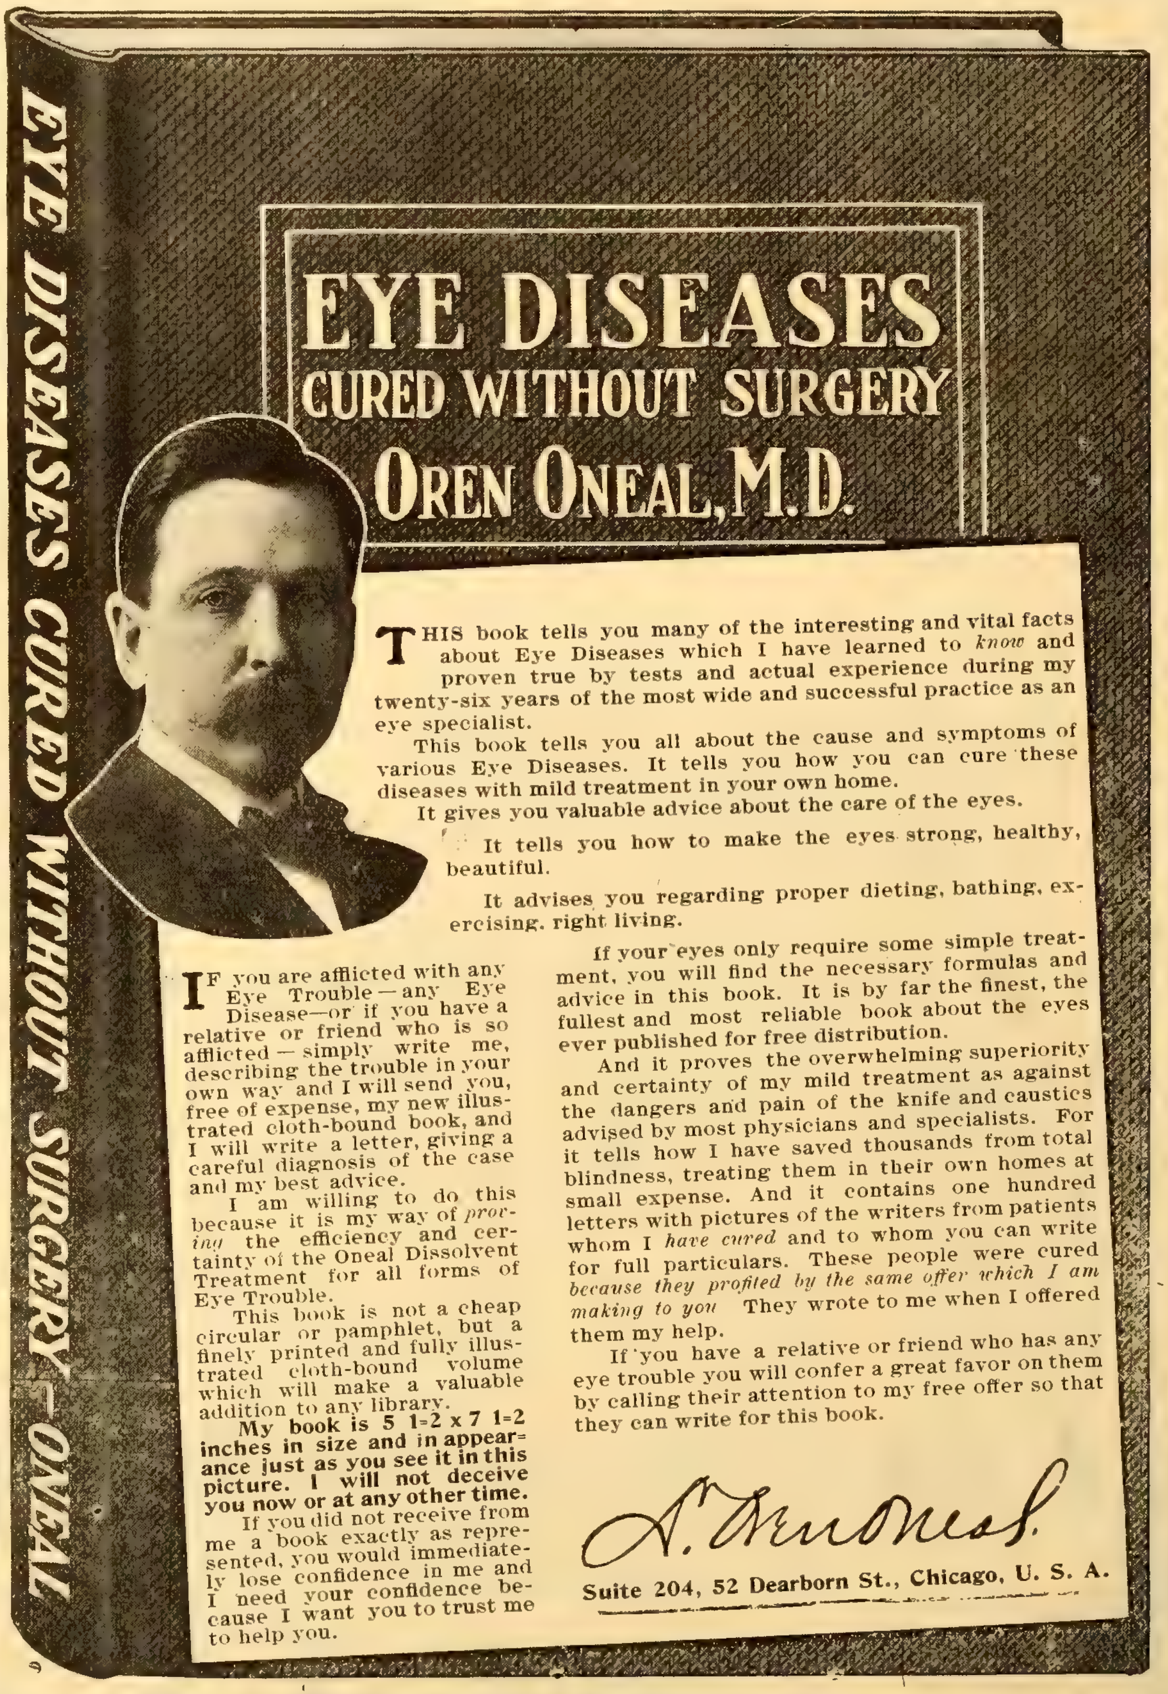
Herbert, Ill., Nov. 28, 1905.

Dr. Oren Oneal—Last March my right eye went out all at once. I could not tell what was the trouble with it. They grated raw potato and put on it and I thought it would be all right in the morning, but when I got up I found it was blind. I then went to Rockford to see one of the best oculists. He examined my eye thoroughly and could not tell what was the matter with it. He gave me medicine to take. I took it for two weeks and did not receive any benefit from it. Then I wrote to you giving you all particulars. You wrote at once and told me it was paralysis of the optic nerve and opacity, and that you could cure me. So I wrote at once and you sent me your Dissolvent Treatment. I used it for four months and I could see as well with that eye as I could with the well one. I still sent for one more month's treatment, but do not think I needed it. My eye is well now and I can see to thread a fine needle. I am 78. I am so very thankful, for you have saved my eye.

MRS. NANCY BOOKER.

I Send this Valuable Cloth Bound Book Without Charge To Those Who Have Eye Troubles



THIS book tells you many of the interesting and vital facts about Eye Diseases which I have learned to know and proven true by tests and actual experience during my twenty-six years of the most wide and successful practice as an eye specialist.

It gives you valuable advice about the care of the eyes.

It tells you how to make the eyes strong, healthy, beautiful.

It advises you regarding proper dieting, bathing, exercising, right living.

IF you are afflicted with any Eye Trouble—any Eye Disease—or if you have a relative or friend who is so afflicted—simply write me, describing the trouble in your own way and I will send you, free of expense, my new illustrated cloth-bound book, and I will write a letter, giving a careful diagnosis of the case and my best advice.

I am willing to do this because it is my way of proving the efficiency and certainty of the Oneal Dissolvent Treatment for all forms of Eye Trouble.

This book is not a cheap circular or pamphlet, but a finely printed and fully illustrated cloth-bound volume which will make a valuable addition to any library.

My book is 5 1-2 x 7 1-2 inches in size and in appearance just as you see it in this picture. I will not deceive you now or at any other time.

If you did not receive from me a book exactly as represented, you would immediately lose confidence in me and I need your confidence because I want you to trust me to help you.

If your eyes only require some simple treatment, you will find the necessary formulas and advice in this book. It is by far the finest, the fullest and most reliable book about the eyes ever published for free distribution.

And it proves the overwhelming superiority and certainty of my mild treatment as against the dangers and pain of the knife and caustics advised by most physicians and specialists. For it tells how I have saved thousands from total blindness, treating them in their own homes at small expense. And it contains one hundred letters with pictures of the writers from patients whom I have cured and to whom you can write for full particulars. These people were cured because they profited by the same offer which I am making to you They wrote to me when I offered them my help.

If you have a relative or friend who has any eye trouble you will confer a great favor on them by calling their attention to my free offer so that they can write for this book.

Aged Divine, Known to Most Readers of The Christian-Evangelist, Pays Tribute to Dr. Oneal.

L. L. Carpenter, of Wabash, Ind., the well known Christian minister, who is noted for having dedicated over 1,000 churches in Indiana, Illinois, Ohio and other states, writes of Dr. Oneal as follows: "After a long and intimate acquaintance with Dr. Oren Oneal, it affords me great pleasure to say that he is an honorable gentleman and a very successful physician. Along the lines of his special work he has had great success, and I most cheerfully commend and recommend him to any one needing the services of a skillful oculist."

Had Suffered All Kinds of Pain.

Chapin, Ill., Nov. 14, 1905.

Dr. Oren Oneal—I want to thank you for the relief your treatment has given me. As I suffered great pain in my head and eyes and all kinds of headaches, for which I could get no relief. I thought I would try your treatment. After using it, I can now read and sew without glasses. Before using your treatment my sight was failing fast from congested optic nerve. I could not tell one person from another at a distance of 30 feet. The pain in my head would be so severe after being out driving that I could not sleep or rest for pain in my head all night. After taking your treatment I can drive 12 miles and return the same day without headache or pain and I rest all night. For which I wish to thank you and your Dissolvent Treatment. MRS. HENRY ECKHOFF.

Atrophy of Optic Nerve and Cataract.

Germantown, Pa.

Dr. Oren Oneal—Four years ago my sight began to fail me in both eyes. A mist came over them. I treated with several oculists for three years for atrophy of the optic nerve and none seemed to help me. One told me that the optic nerve was dead. I went to Willes' Eye Hospital, Philadelphia. They told me it was useless to spend any more money, for I had cataract on both eyes and I would have to wait until they became ripe. After the first few months of your home treatment, my vision commenced to improve, and thank God, I can now say I am in a new world, use no glasses except for close reading and fine work. JOHN B. HURST.

Suffered Four Years—Cured in One Month.

Clyde, New York, Oct. 26, 1905.

Dr. Oren Oneal—I had been troubled with granulated eyelids and optic nerve disease for three or four years. I tried our family physician and others for a year or more to no purpose.

Hearing of your treatment, I was determined to try it at least. I had used it a few times when I saw a change for the better, and after a month I call my eyes well—no more discharge or itching or gumming up. I can truthfully and conscientiously say I could recommend it to all who may be afflicted with any disease of the eyes, I shall use all my efforts in behalf of your treatment from a desire to help all the afflicted.

MRS. W. H. VANDERCOOK.

A Noted Hunter Testifies.

Gurdane, Oregon, Oct. 18, 1905.

Dr. Oren Oneal—I am thankful that your Dissolvent Treatment has cured my eyes of catarrhal conjunctivitis and congested optic nerve. I was nearly blind before I commenced the treatment; so bad I could not tell a horse from a cow 50 yards away. Now I can see to read, or shoot a deer a quarter of a mile. I will send you my picture. THOS. J. BURROUGHS.

Mrs. Woodruff's Letter.

Rockord, Ill., Nov. 23, 1905.

Dr. Oren Oneal—A year ago last March a growth appeared behind and under the right eye, pushing the eyeball out of the socket and presenting an angry inflamed appearance. The lower eye became averted and altogether it presented a malignant appearance.

I was almost blind in that eye and the whole side of my face became so painful that I was very fearful that it was a cancer. I consulted prominent oculists in Rockford and Chicago and was advised that a knife operation was absolutely necessary. One oculist here in Rockford declared "I would be blind in one year and dead in two"—and none of them gave me the least relief or encouragement.

I remember that you regarded my case as so serious that you would make no promises whatever. I decided however, to try your treatment and the result has been most gratifying. The growth has been entirely absorbed by your wonderful remedies, so that the eye today presents a perfectly normal appearance, and the sight of both eyes is now normal. This I consider very remarkable considering my age, which is past eighty.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

Larger audiences are attending the missionary rallies being conducted by President McLean and his assistants than ever before. Thousands now in heathen darkness will rejoice with us in 1909 in the liberty wherewith Christ will make them free.

A cherished hope for the centennial is double the membership we had at the time of the Omaha convention. Harlow's 612 added at Portsmouth, O., and Scoville's 1,130 at Anderson recently, reveal not only the marvelous power of modern evangelism, but also the reasonableness of this hope for 2,000,000 Disciples during the first century of the Restoration. Other Yeuells, Smalls, Updikes, Wrights, Harlows and Scovilles will yet appear in the center of Pentecostal triumphs whose statistical reports will rejoice the saints and enable the Lamb to see the travail of his soul and be satisfied. Two million people contending earnestly, but in love, for the faith once delivered by 1909, is one of the strong probabilities of church history.

J. A. Parker of Keokuk, Ia., has just paid $10,000 into the treasury of our National Benevolent Association. The administration building of the orphanage group soon to be reared in the country a few miles from this city, will be a memorial to him. It has been suggested that a splendid hospital in the centennial city dedicated to the good of suffering humanity and to the glory of the Great Physician, would be a pleasing sight to the thousands of Disciples who will congregate there and a practical demonstration of our zeal for primitive Christianity. We hope it may be realized and that one large room may be given over as a treasure house for the pictures and writings of our fathers in the faith and for souvenirs and records of our early history as a people.

A Needed Education.

BY G. H. CLARK.

I heartily join you in the effort to place 100,000 copies of The Christian-Evangelist in as many homes by 1909.

The Church is greatly in need of a more thorough education in the fundamentals of Christian living. The membership steadily increases, but too many of these recruits fail to become active workers in the Master's vineyard. Churches are multiplying but many of them refuse to have a part in the world-wide extension of the kingdom of heaven or to respond to the appeals for benevolences. This lack of interest is largely due to a lack of knowledge.

If The Christian-Evangelist could be a regular weekly visitor in these homes it would not be long until they would catch the spirit of service that dominates the leaders of a great brotherhood. They would see that the addition of love, righteousness, benevolence and brotherly kindness was as essential to their salvation as the introductory steps that brought them into the kingdom of heaven.

A paper such as The Christian-Evangelist that knows how to interpret the movement for the restoration of apostolic Christianity and the unification of God's people in a sweet Christian spirit free from bigotry and sectarianism is worthy of a place in every Christian home.

Cheers the Exile.

I am here recuperating from the effects of two months of la grippe. It is wearisome work, away from old friends. An old friend, by the way, came to me to-day. I can not begin to tell you, my brother, how cheering this dear old friend, The Christian-Evangelist, was to my "shut in" spirit. It brought a sweet benediction, a message of tender light, a sweep of world-sympathy, a kindly appeal from prejudices and provincialism—how true the words in this copy's "Easy Chair"! It made me more glad and hopeful and trustful toward God and men, for the hundredth time. You have the secret of it all, beloved brother, and a great and increasing number are, thank the Lord, discerning the message which we must preach to these times. "God give us men"—men of insight and courage.

I want to say this word of appreciation and pledge you my poor prayer to-night for your continued health and strength. God give you peace. Jesse B. Haston.

The Spirit Rather than the Letter.

I like your sentiment on the union problem. Some of us have been so taken up with the thought that we are "Christians only" that the expression and sentiment have undergone a sort of metamorphosis by which we appear to other equally zealous Christian bodies as considering ourselves "the only Christians." I sometimes think there is danger of emphasizing the "letter" of the restoration movement to such an extent as to lose sight of its genuine "spirit" and mire down as deep in the quicksand of denominationalism as other well meaning Christian bodies whom we seek to enlighten. I imagine that if heaven will grant a little wholesome fun over the ridiculous when the Lord's children are all gathered home some of us will be made to smile and others blush over the terrestrial conflicts waged down here as to whether "Disciples of Christ" should begin with a big D or a little fellow; or, whether a struggling, whole-souled servant of the Master preaching the Gospel for the salvation of sinners is committing the unpardonable sin by prefixing "Rev." or "Dr." to his name. Bro. F. D. Power in his article "As Seen From the Dome" in the issue of February 8, deserves unqualified commendation for the admirable manner in which he deals with such trivial matters as these.

I have read your work on the Holy Spirit with pleasure and shall read it again. The discussion it has called forth is profitable in that it not only reveals the diversity of opinion held on the subject but also evidences the fact that "The Work of the Holy Spirit" is a matter too little studied by the rank and file of our ministry. I am sure that the book has been a greater incentive to study of the subject among our people than any other production of recent years. R. B. Helser.

You have my personal and best wishes in your effort to secure one hundred thousand subscribers. G. L. Bush.

Allow me to say I am very delighted with The Christian-Evangelist. I am greatly interested in the editorials on Christion union, and by the permission of the Editor, I will make use of them in an address I am preparing on Christian union. I want to see the paper reach 100,000 subscribers by centennial time. It is a safe paper to put into the hands of the young people of our homes.

Beaver City, Neb. D. S. Domer.

Next to the Bible.

I enclose $1.50 for The Christian-Evangelist. It is a grand paper, and next to the Bible it helps me bear the burdens of life cheerfully, and keeps me near the Christ. May it continue as long as time shall last, is the prayer of your friend,

Howard, Kan. Mrs. Helen M. Hebb.

Comforts the Sorrowing.

A word from this sorow-stricken old woman: I have taken The Christian-Evangelist thirty years. I still cling, through all the clouds, to it. Two beloved sons have passed away; one young lovely daughter moans away her days in an asylum. No anguish can fall to the lot of humanity, worse. Mrs. M. V. Ellis.

Current Events.

Parental Responsibility.

Judge Lindsey, of the Denver Juvenile Court, suggests that the parents of wayward and criminal children ought, in many cases, to be considered as criminals and punished accordingly. It is useless, he says, to go on filling up corrective institutions with vicious children while the parents who either carelessly or wilfully allow their children to become criminal are not dealt with. Perhaps it will never be possible to create good and wholesome homes by legislation, and it is doubtless true that vicious parents can not be transformed by fear of punishment into educators of their children in all the Christian virtues. But some of the demoralizing influences could at least be stopped and parents could be induced to use all due care to keep their children out of the training schools of vice and crime. Judge Lindsey is one of the foremost authorities on the difficult problem of the treatment of delinquent children, and his opinion is worthy of respectful consideration.

The Anti-Gambling Bill.

It may scarcely be remembered by residents of the eastern states that gambling is licensed in some parts of the United States. In some of the territories gambling places are licensed and the license fees go into the school fund. Thus the institution for education in vice and improvidence is made to support the institution for education in intelligence and morality. A bill introduced and supported by Mr. Littlefield, of Maine, for the prohibition of gambling in the territories has been passed by the House. The delegate from Arizona opposed it, not on the ground, as he explained, that he favored gambling, but because he thought it improper for a representative of the state most remote from Arizona to father a bill chiefly intended to operate in that territory, and also on the ground that the territorial legislature would pass such a measure at its next session. But in spite of the objection, the bill passed, and residents of the territory will no longer see faro and roulette advertised as openly as dry goods and groceries.

Pure Food Bill.

The Senate has passed the pure food bill by an almost unanimous vote. It would be a great practical advantage if such a federal bill could be made national in the scope of its operation, but under our constitution the individual states have a right to permit the sale of impure and adulterated foods if they want to—and most of them do. The federal bill, if it becomes a law, will make it a misdemeanor to manufacture or sell any adulterated or misbranded food, medicine, drug or liquor in the District of Columbia, the territories of the United States and the insular possessions, or to make them articles of interstate commerce or of export to foreign countries. The penalty is $500 fine or imprisonment for one year, or both. It has taken 15 years of intermittent effort and agitation to secure the passage of this bill. Its speedy adoption and rigid enforcement ought to be an effective example to those states which have lax laws or no laws on the subject and whose citizens are, therefore, less protected against the insidious and dangerous species of fraud than are the residents of Luzon, Alaska and Arizona. The bill provides that the investigation of suspected articles shall be made by the Department of Agriculture, and that the necessary regulations incident to the enforcement of the bill shall be agreed upon by the Departments of Agriculture, the Treasury and Commerce and Labor.

Insurance Committee's Report.

The Armstrong Investigating Committee, which was appointed by the New York legislature to inquire into the condition of the insurance companies, and whose hearings, as published from day to day, have afforded most of the startling revelations of the last four months, has made its report to the legislature. The report is a printed document of 319 pages. It includes statements of facts disclosed by the investigation and recommendations based thereon, and is accompanied by eight bills which have been prepared by the committee's counsel to make the recommendations effective. The report evades no part of the matter and apparently overlooks no important question relating to the regulation and secure establishment of the life insurance business. The topics which demand the attention of the legislature are grouped in the report under 16 heads, as follows:

1. Organization of life insurance.
2. Control or right of policy holders and election of directors.
3. Retirement of stock.
4. Investment including syndicate participations.
5. Limitation of new business.
6. Political contributions.
7. Lobbying.
8. Limitation of expenses.
9. Valuation of policies.
10. Rebates.
11. Surrender values.
12. Ascertainment and distribution of surplus.
13. Remedies of policy holders or right resort to courts.
14. Forms of policies.
15. Publicity and state supervision.
16. Penalties.

This, as it seems to us, fairly covers the ground. One bill, which Mr. Armstrong hopes to have passed before April 15, defers the annual elections of the mutual companies from that date until November. This may have the effect of nullifying the proxies obtained by Thomas Lawson and his policy holders' committee, and also those which the present managers of the company have been industriously gathering by less public methods. The recommendations submitted to the legislature include the following: A plan for the investigation of the stock companies and specifications as to the time and method of holding elections; prohibition of assessment companies from doing business in the state; regulations touching the investment of insurance funds and the condemnation of "syndicate" operations; the limitation of the amount of new business which any company may take to $150,000,000 annually; the effective prohibition of lobbying and contributions for political purposes; the expenditure of all moneys on a proper system of vouchers and the return of a complete report of expenditures annually to the superintendent of insurance. The Armstrong Committee deserves the highest commendation for the thorough manner in which it has done its work, and Mr. Hughes, the leading counsel for the committee, has won the gratitude of every policy holder. Now it is up to the legislature to make effective the reforms which the committee has recommended.

Western Federation of Miners.

The troubles which grew out of the miners' strike in Colorado two years ago are not yet over. Charges were made at the time against the Western Federation that it was deliberately employing the weapons of assassination and murder to put its opponents out of the way. There were some fatal explosions which did not look like accidents. The investigation has continued. There have been many confessions and many more offers of confessions, but the authorities look upon these with suspicion, and do not give them entire credit. The confession of one Orchard has, however, led to the arrest of President Mayer and Secretary Haywood of the Western Federation, and G. A. Pettibone, formerly a member of the executive committee of the same organization, on the charge of complicity in the murder of Governor Steunenberg, of Idaho. These men have been brought by extradition papers from Colorado to Idaho for trial. Orchard is said to have given full details of the plot against Steunenberg and also of an attempt to assassinate one of the justices of the Colorado Supreme Court a year ago by a buried bomb.

The Blindness of the Railroads.

There is a disposition on the part of some of the railroads to withdraw privileges to ministers and newspaper men. The agreement of roads having lines in Ohio to give no convention or clergymen's rates because the Ohio legislature has limited fares to two cents a mile will simply have the effect that the restrictions which other lines are talking about will have—lessen ministerial travel, cripple conventions, and hurt the railroads. A broad policy is worth while in railroad business as in the other departments of life.

Christian Union: A Historical Study.

I. The Apostolic Age.

7. Was the Unity of the Early Church "Organic"?

Perhaps there is no one term that has entered into the discussion of Christian union in modern times that has been more confusing than this word "organic." Some of those who labor and pray for the realization of Christ's prayer for the unity of his disciples express themselves as opposed to "organic unity"; while others declare that nothing short of "organic unity" meets the demands of Christ's prayer. It is probable that these two classes of unionists do not differ so much in reality as they do in the meaning they attach to the term, "organic." This is a good place, therefore, to raise the question, was the unity of the Church in the apostolic age "organic unity"?

When we face the facts of the apostolic age, what we find is a group of local churches having their origin in a common faith, which held them in allegiance to one common Lord. There was no general organization of an external kind of which these several congregations were component parts, as is the case in many of our modern ecclesiastical organizations. They were united to Christ and to each other by the internal bond of faith in, love for, and personal allegiance to, a common Master whom they acknowledged as Savior and Lord. Their unity was not the result of external authority, for even the apostles, whose influence was no doubt very great, governed not so much by their official authority as by their spiritual character and their intimate knowledge of Christ. "It was the permanent indwelling of the Spirit in the souls of believers, as an illuminating and sanctifying power, that united them in one body."*

If the term"organic"therefore, be used to signify one external ecclesiastical organization, with a central power or earthly head controlling it, it is clear that no such "organic" union existed in the apostolic age. No doubt, if the conditions had been favorable, the local churches of that age would have co-operated to a much larger extent than they did in the furtherance of the common interests of the kingdom, but it is not likely that any organization which might have been necessary for such co-operation would have been permitted, during that age, to exercise any legislative authority over the local congregations, or to formulate in any authoritative way a statement of doctrine that would have been binding upon the churches. At any rate, we are safe in saying that no such organization existed. †

"If we wish to speak correctly of 'the Church' as it has historically appeared, with reference to organization, we shall be obliged to define it in a very catholic and comprehensive manner, as including the sum of those organizations which have been formed to serve as organs of Christ, for the expression and promotion of his religion. If we accept a definition that applies to some one of these alone, we leave unincluded much of the organized fruit of Christ in the world, and thus do injustice to the facts that we are considering. It does not appear to have been the providential purpose that all Christians should be gathered into one great organization, and it does not seem probable that such a purpose will hereafter be manifested by the fulfillment of it. Organization, helpful as it is, is a very different thing from that inner life of the soul in God in which religion consists, and can not properly be counted as a part of religion. But it certainly is the divine will and pleasure that Christians should be together, united in some practical order for mutual benefit and common service to their Lord. Any company of Christians gathered in his name for his purpose has the promise of the Master's presence (Matt. 18:20). Any group of Christians that offers itself to Christ is an organ of Christ, through which he may express himself in his own activities. The Church, regarded as the sum of all the actual organizations, has been a powerful help to the Christian purpose in the world. No organization has promise of perpetuity, apart from its fitness for the Master's use, and Christianity may yet express itself in new forms, if the old prove insufficient or unadapted to its growing needs." ‡

No candid student of the New Testament will call in question this statement of Dr. Clarke. The idea of church organization, or church government, as it is often called, assumed a prominence in after years, and has held it to the present time, which it nowhere has in the New Testament. What we find there is a new life, entering into the world through Christ, and organizing itself so as to give expression to its real character, and to extend its principles among men. Life precedes and creates organization, and not vice versa. One of the most important steps that can be taken toward Christian unity is the frank recognition of the fact that the New Testament furnishes us no prescribed form of ecclesiastical organization, beyond the local church, and this seems to have been the natural expression of that divine life in men which drew them together in common fellowship and service. When this fact is once clearly grasped all hope of uniting a divided church on the basis of an "historic episcopate," or under the authority of an infallible pope, vanishes as an idle dream. Even if such a union were possible it would not be Christian union; but it is not possible.

But if there were no organic unity in the sense of one ecclesiastical organization embracing all the churches in the apostolic age, in what sense was the church one, and how can we conceive of it as a divine organism? The answer to these questions must be deferred for another week.

† "The basis of ecclesiastical organization was the equality of believers. 'All ye are brethren.' Instead of a sacerdotal order there was a universal priesthood. * * Complaints on the part of one disciple against another were to be carried to 'the church,' the body of disciples, with the apostles at their head. His injunctions to the apostles to superintend the flock, and the rites of baptism and the Lord's supper, imply definite association. The synagogue naturally served as a model in the organization of churches. They are even called by that name in the Epistle of James (James 2:2). This was their character at the outset." ## A Point of Order.

We notice from one of our contemporaries that several brethren are fighting in the dark. They oppose federation without knowing what it is. That is a very unprofitable sort of business, and leads to great confusion of thought. If we must have a contest, let it be in the light. Let us know what we are striking before we strike, lest we be found fighting against God. We therefore rise to a point of order. It is unparliamentary to discuss a question without knowing what the question is.

More than two years ago we began an editorial on the subect of church federation with this statement: "No intelligent and loyal member among us favors any sort of federation that involves the surrender of any truth or principle of our position. No intelligent and loyal member among us can oppose any federation seeking a closer union of believers, which does not involve any such surrender." That position was never controverted, and will not be controverted to-day. That leaves but one single question open for discussion: Does the proposed basis of federation adopted by the Inter-Church Conference at New York, with the view of promoting a closer co-operation among the Christian bodies of this country, involve the sacrifice of anything essential to the success of the plea we are making for the union of Christians on the New Testament basis of fellowship? Anything else is out of order, so far as the present issue is concerned.

We only need to repeat here what we have said time and again, that no man holds with firmer conviction than we do, the providential character of our religious movement as a factor working out the great purpose of God in his church and kingdom. No one would more promptly repudiate any sort of proposed federation that would require us to abandon or compromise any essential truth or principle of our position. We know the meaning and the spirit of the basis of federation proposed by the New York conference. We claim to know something of the spirit and principles of our own religious movement, and we are sure that co-operation with the other religious bodies mentioned in that basis, on the plan therein suggested, leaves us perfectly free to be true to our convictions of duty and gives us vast opportunity, not otherwise to be enjoyed, of impressing the catholic nature of our position upon others, and of receiving from them such spiritual benefit as they may be able to impart to us.

We go further than that. Not only is it permissible for us to enter into this agreement to co-operate with our Christian brethren of other religious bodies, as far as practicable, but we are in duty bound to do so or prove recreant to a sacred trust committed tc us in a great and important crisis. If we are really devoted to the unity of believers, we will not neglect an opportunity such as is now open to us of hastening the fulfillment of the prayer of our divine Lord. If we have any reason for our existence it is to promote the realization of Christ's prayer for the unity of his followers. To turn aside from that sublime purpose to build up a party of our own is to be false to the trust which has been committed to us. Let us put it in italics: We can not refuse co-operation with other Christian bodies, as far as practicable, on a basis that gives us perfect freedom of action, without being disloyal to the spirit and purpose of our religious movement.

To make the fantastic claim that the very agreement to co-operate with the evangelical Protestant denominations is to endorse their denominationalism, with all the errors they may hold, is wholly unworthy of any thoughtful man or of any respectable religious journal. It is to appeal to ignorance and prejudice, and not to sober reason. It is to advocate a position whose logical terminus is complete isolation from other Christians—the very quintessence of sectarian narrowness which we started out to overthrow. We appeal to brethren not to be swayed by passion or appeals to their prejudice, but to think soberly and to act wisely in these testing times, as those who have been called to stand for the things which unite and not for the things which divide. The eyes of the religious world, aye, the eyes of our Master, are upon us. Let us not disappoint him.

Notes and Comments.

This is evidently the day of great evangelistic meetings. Fifty years ago a meeting where 100 people were added to the church was regarded as almost phenomenal. But now 500 and even 1,000 converts are the high-water marks of a protracted meeting of a few weeks. But this is the day of large things in every department of life. Look where we will, we find this fact prominently illustrated. A millionaire a few years ago was accounted a very rich man, but now he must be a multi-millionaire before he excites much interest in the financial or commercial world. Armies must all now be numbered by hundreds of thousands instead of the smaller numbers of fifty years ago.

Why should any Disciple of Christ be frightened at federation? Some seem to think that federation will lead to union, and consequently this union might include the denominations. But have we not been pleading for union all these years? How are we to have union if we do not begin it in some way? Doubtless federation would not be a satisfactory solution of the whole question, but it would certainly be a beginning in the right direction. The divisions of Christendom were not made in a minute, nor by a single step; neither will union come about by any short method. It will be step by step and take much time. Let us at least take a first step.

We desire to call special attention to the work of J. H. Hardin, who has been called to take charge of the Bible school work of Missouri. He has quietly, but with careful planning, undertaken to advance this part of our work to the position it must occupy. Brother Hardin is showing his own ability to lead in this work, and he must be loyally and enthusiastically supported. He is now engaged in a series of institutes among the St. Louis churches and his helpful counsel is being much appreciated. Let the churches everywhere support him, and the Bible school work will leap forward.

In its blind rage against federation the "Christian Standard" permits itself to be drawn into the most ridiculous positions, without seeing the humor of the situation. Take the following statement from its criticism of the Kansas City statement:

> Let our Kansas City preachers adopt federation according to this resolution, and these preachers would need to go home and say from their pulpits, "Brethren, we have all been mistaken. The Methodist, the Presbyterian and the Congregationalist churches in our town are true churches of Christ; that is, they are branches of the true church, just like ourselves. We have been entirely at fault in insisting on baptism as a necessary condition of church membership. Then, we have erred in insisting that persons coming from pedobaptist churches should be immersed before enjoying our church fellowship. As they are already members of 'other churches of the Master,' we must accept their letters as valid certificates of proper church membership and receive them into our fellowship without further ceremony."

That of course is amusing, but the real humor of the situation lies further on in the part of the picture which our contemporary fails to draw. For, if federation means that, the pedobaptist ministers will "go home and say from their pulpits" something like the following: "Brethren, we have all been mistaken. The Disciples of Christ with whom we have entered into federation are exactly right, of course, or we would not have federated with them. We must, therefore, abandon our denominational names and creeds, adopt immersion as the only Scriptural baptism, and that on a confession of faith in Christ, abandon infant baptism, practice weekly communion, and in all other respects conform to their teaching and practice." Of course federation would not exact more of one body than it does of another, and if we must accept all our religious neighbors believe and teach, then they must accept all we believe and teach. How utterly absurd! And yet this from a paper that boasts of its "wide influence among the brethren, and its primacy in the church journalism of America"!

It is a good sign of the times that the United States Senate is willing to discuss and act upon the food question. No doubt much injury has been done to the health of the American people by the venders of impure food. But while the Senate is considering the question of health would it not be well to discuss and act upon the drink traffic, which is a much more vital injury than all the adulterated food?

Editor's Easy Chair.

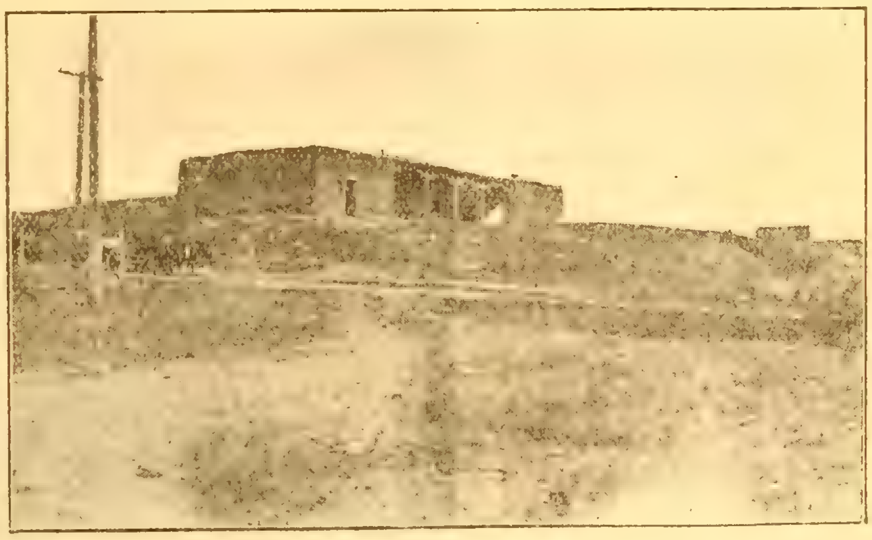
Boast as we may about our modern up-to-dateness, there is a charm about antiquity which lays hold of the imagination and holds us captive. Santa Fe, the capital of the territory of New Mexico, where these lines are penned, is the rival of any spot in the New World, as respects its antiquity. The old Palace which occupies the north side of the plaza and which has long been the official residence of the rulers of this territory, ranks among the chief historic buildings of the United States. Concerning this building, ex-Governor Prince, whom we have had the pleasure of meeting here, in his "History of New Mexico," says:

> "Without disparaging the importance of any of the most cherished historical localities of the east, it may be truthfully said that this ancient Palace surpasses in historical interest and value any other place or object in the United States. It antedates the settlement of Jamestown by nine years, and that of Plymouth by 22, and has stood during the 299 years since its creation, not as a cold rock or monument, with no claim upon the interest of humanity except the bare fact of its continued existence, but as the living center of everything of historic importance in the southwest. Through all that long period, whether under Spanish, Pueblo, Mexican or American control, it has been the seat of power and authority, whether the ruler was called viceroy, captain-general, political chief, department commander or governor, and whether he presided over a kingdom, a province, a department or a territory that has been his official residence."

The Governor's Palace.



A Typical Adobe Mexican Residence.

This is followed by a list of thrilling historic events having their center here, which make one feel that he is standing on historic ground. The long past rises before him with its dramatic scenes, and he sees passing across the stage of history ancient Spain in its glory, Mexico, tribes of Indians reaching back to a remote civilization and last of all the great Republic of the West coming upon the scene and extending its shield of constitutional liberty over Spanish, Mexican, Indian and the American settlers.

It was in one of the rooms of this ancient Palace and under the spell of the historic muse that Gen. Lew Wallace wrote the thrilling story of "Ben Hur." There is much in these surroundings to suggest the land of ancient Palestine. Stepping into a museum on one side of the plaza one feels himself in immediate contact with the ancient, barbaric past. The stone hammers, the stone idols, the stones for grinding, the rude implements of war and of industry, the skin vessels, introduce one to peoples, customs and ideas which have passed away, but which are represented in a measure by types of people and scenes which one meets in the streets of the old city to-day. The little burros, laden with wood strapped across their backs, which they have borne down from the mountains, driven by Mexicans; the Indians with their handicraft and their gaudy attire; the low adobe houses with their courts serve to remind us that some of the ancient past has come down to our own times. The old church of San Miguel, situated in the oldest part of the city, is noted for its antiquity. It is an adobe building with massive walls, and dates back to the earliest occupation of the town. It was partially destroyed in the Pueblo revolution of 1680, and repaired again in 1710. Close beside it on the north is "the oldest house in the United States," an adobe building, now partly in ruins. St. Augustine, in Florida, has another "oldest house in the United States," which we once photographed. The Catholic cathedral here is a modern building. Roman Catholicism naturally predominates here, though the Protestant Episcopal, Presbyterian and Methodist Episcopal churches are represented here. On last Lord's day our party attended service at the Presbyterian church. It was foreign mission day. There was a fine audience and an excellent sermon on foreign missions by the pastor, Rev. Mr. Sevier, a young man who came to this region for his health, but, having recovered it, is content to remain here permanently. The Presbyterians have a girls' school here and a second church, whose services are conducted in Spanish.

In scenic attractions, as well as historic interest, Santa Fe holds an enviable place. Located in the valley of the Santa Fe river, a small stream, it is, nevertheless, 7,000 feet above sea level. And yet, it is almost completely surrounded by mountains which, at this season of the year, are covered with snow which, glowing in the bright sunlight and pure air of this region, make a magnificent picture. There is a gap on the southeast through which the Santa Fe railroad runs a branch line from Lamy to this city. It first struck us as a curious fact that this ancient and historic city was not on the main line of the railroad, but when one sees how the city is located and the mountain ranges about it he can readily understand why it is not. It lies like a jewel in the lap of the mountains. Its climate is giving it wide celebrity as a health resort. It has a cool summer climate and the winters are mild. Six miles to the northwest, in the Tseuke Valley, is a settlement made up largely of people who have sought this climate for their health. Two miles to the southeast on an elevated mesa, 200 feet above the city, is Sun Mount, a village of tents, inhabited by health seekers, who find this air, laden with the breath of the pine and cedar, a specific for throat and lung troubles, when taken in time. This tent village, with its common eating house, is located at the foot of the Sangre de Cristo range of mountains. Hard by is the ranch of M. J. Nagel, a German landscape gardener, who, on one of our rides, entertained our party at tea in his comfortable and picturesque stone house built around a large central court. With its historic, scenic and hygienic attractions, Santa Fe has an assured future.

This morning, looking out toward Mount Baldy, 12 miles away to the northeast as the crow flies, one side of it was shining brightly, as the morning sun smote its eastern slope, while on the other side lay a dark shadow, as if the night still lingered there. Looking again a few hours later, when the sun had risen higher, the whole mountain, covered with snow, was shining like a diadem in the picturesque Sangre de Cristo range. Immediately we thought of the dark shadow of superstition and idolatry yet lying upon the earth, because Christ's Church has not fulfilled the command of its risen Lord to preach the Gospel to the whole creation. But the church is waking to her duty, and the Sun of Righteousness rises steadily toward its zenith, and soon, let us hope and pray, all the dark places of the earth will be illuminated with Gospel light. Next Lord's day the churches of this reformation are to make their offerings to this holy cause of foreign missions, that is seeking to drive the dark shadows of paganism from the face of the earth. May it be the greatest offering in our history! Let no discussion of any kind sidetrack the attention of the brotherhood from this supreme duty of the hour. Speaking of discussion, we see in one of our contemporaries as gross misrepresentation of this paper and its Editor as was ever contained in any sectarian journal. But we will pardon these good brethren if they will bend their energies to make this March offering worthy of the cause we plead and the Christ whom we serve.

A Call From Chu Cheo

By W. R. Hunt

Chu Cheo is one of the oldest established of our mission stations in China. For 14 years the missionaries have been working in this field. It has a history which, in point of heroism and devotion, can compare favorably with any other work in China. The Lord has blessed the work and the workers and has given us some true and noble co-laborers, without whom we could have done little in evangelization or the building up of churches. Encouraged by what God has wrought in the lives of hundreds, the evangelization of numbers of towns, the setting up of good outstations, the wide reach of the medical work, the unique place we occupy in the straight line of our forward movement north; all these things total up into a song of praise to God and culminate in a constant stream of prayer to the Father that we may be made more and more fruitful in the work.

In the early days of mission work here Mrs. Hearnden, Mrs. Saw, Mrs. Hunt and later Mrs. Osgood, did some work among the women; but it has been incidental and irregular. The married women with families have their influence confined to the cities, and to their home churches. They can not and do not itinerate among the country women and the girls.

We have seen twenty or more native Christian women connected with the mission here in this district. With these our woman evangelist, Mrs. Shi, along with the wives of the missionaries, labors. Mrs. Shi is one of the most consecrated Chinese women I ever met. She is the "Dorcas" of the district. She has enjoyed itineration here with Miss Kelly and Miss Lyon.

The special call is for a young lady worker to come to Chu Cheo, and give her life work to this grand cause. In the villages where we evangelize, and among the homes of the native Christians, there are hundreds of these young native women who will be the future mothers of China, and unless they are reached with the Gospel they will be lost. Eastern decorum forbids the men preaching to the women. Some of these girls were betrothed to heathen partners before their parents became Christians. The call is real; it is urgent; it is loud; it is sanctified by prayers day and night. Who will come? At our last native prayer-meeting it was said by an earnest helper, "Somewhere God has a young sister he is preparing." Here is an opening for a blessed, fruitful life. Reader, lift your heart to God and ask, "Lord, is it I?"

Mrs. Shi and Love.

Celebrating An Idol's Birthday.

D. E. Dannenberg, in writing upon his trip from Nanking to Fung Chow, says that as he and Mr. Yang, one of our evangelists, approached a large town they heard a terrific noise, and met many people coming away from the town. They found the streets packed with hundreds of people and witnessed a long and elaborate idol procession pass. When they returned to their boats they found that the canal for a long distance was covered by the craft of those who had come from near and far for the day's celebration. This great gathering of people, with its expenditure of time and money and strength and energy, was for the purpose of celebrating an idol's birthday.

"What a Bible Did in Burmah."

A man in Burmah possessed a copy of the Psalms in Burmese which had been left behind by a traveler. Before he had finished reading the book he resolved to cast away his idols. For twenty years he worshiped the eternal God revealed to him in the Psalms, using the fifty-first Psalm as a daily prayer. Then a missionary appeared on the scene and gave him a copy of the New Testament. The story of salvation through Jesus Christ brought great joy to his heart, and he said, "For twenty years I walked by starlight; now I see the sun."

Our Chu Cheo Christian Evangelists.

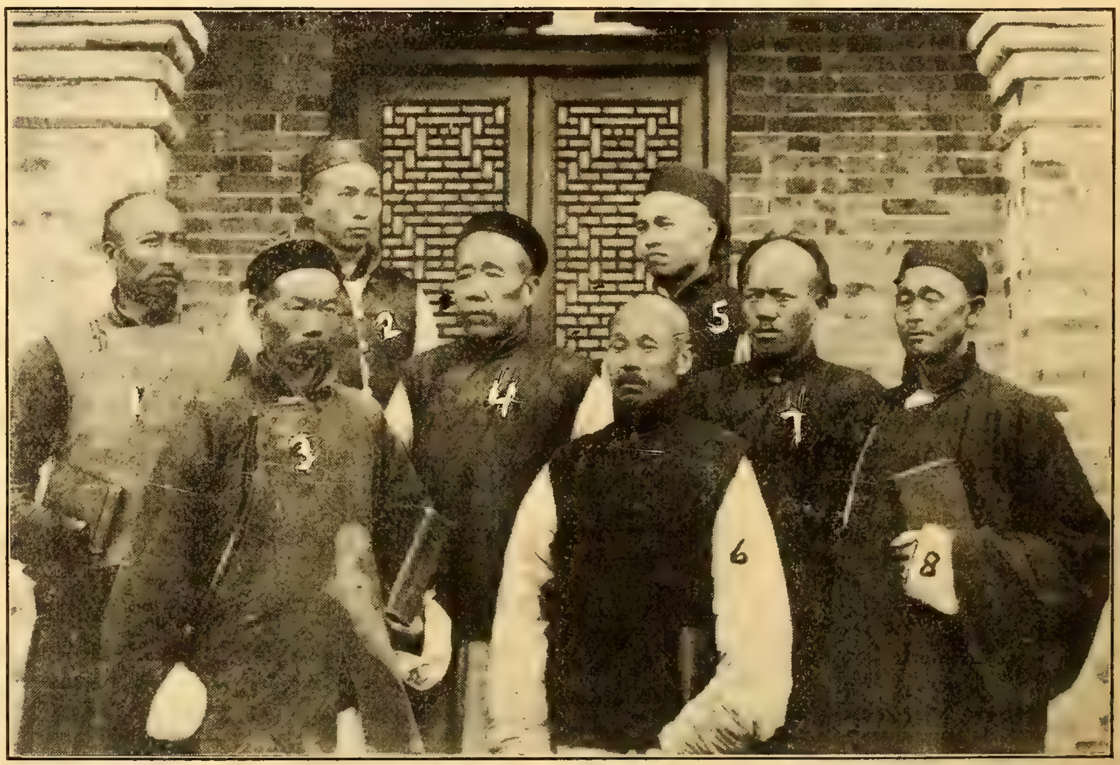
The native preachers in the group shown below are all workers in the Chu Cheo district. They are bright, enthusiastic and faithful workers. They are under a regular course of training in W. R. Hunt's class of evangelists. They are diligent students also in the Bible college work. W. R. Hunt is the missionary of the living link church, at Seventh street, Richmond, Va.



1. Woo Li Kwan, supported by church at Englewood, Chicago. 2. Koh Suin Chen, supported by Christian Endeavor Society, Larned, Kan. 3. Tai Leh Chen, supported by J. W. and G. P. Stafford, Acampo, Cal. 4. Chao Ming Yang, supported by J. Coop, Southport, England. 5. Chen Li Seng, supported by pastor of Chu Cheo Christian Church. 6. Chu Pan Kwei, supported by Chu Cheo (unpaid helper). 7. Wan Yung Seng, supported by church at East Orange, N. J. 8. Shi Kwei Piao (story teller), supported by Christian Endeavor Society, Stanford, Ill.

From Mahoba, India

By Adelaide Gail Frost

Dear Christian-Evangelist: I wonder if you know how eagerly we scan the church news when your rich, sweet pages come to us each week? Watchman, what of the day? It is twilight, morning twilight, please God, in India. More churches organized, greatly increased membership, rallies, conventions, special religious movements; oh, it is grand to read of the dear homeland and her advance, and what does it mean for India, for China, for Africa? We must think of our India. It meant for us last autumn more missionaries. We need them all and more, and it makes our hearts sing to think of Misses Griffith, Pope and Drake and of Mr. and Mrs. Saum and Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham added new to our forces, and then Dr. Rosa Ayer, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Gordon and Miss Burgess have returned, equipped for strenuous service. In my heart, and many a heart besides mine, is a feeling of deep loneliness when we think of Miss Graybiel far from Mahoba and from her loved India, but she has long "borne the heat and burden of the day"; others must "enter in." Through the cold winter days of the homeland, will you think of us as enjoying pleasant weather for seed-sowing in many a village, in many a hut, under the trees, by waysides, stony and thorny, with patches of "prepared ground" between? When you think, pray to the Lord of the harvest.

Perhaps some may remember a bit of the story of "Baiju" I wrote. Such an ignorant man was Baiju, with ignorance that one felt tempted to label "utter stupidity"; but he became a believer in the Savior, and that made him wish to bring his family to Jesus, though he had before lost a feeling of responsibility for them. He seemed unpromising ground, but he brought his wife and three young children to an opportunity of hearing God's Word. Day after to-morrow this middle-aged father and mother, both Christians, go over to Rath to see their daughter married to an earnest young Christian from Mungeli, who may not live in his old village lest his life be taken, because he is a Christian. This daughter is a bright, capable young Christian woman, as happy as any girl could be on the eve of her marriage. The son married one of our orphanage girls and has a happy Christian home, the youngest child, a boy, is also a Christian, and promises to be a useful man; all this because "one of the least of these" happened (?) to stumble into our yard one day to ask for some labor, and Miss Graybiel happened(?) to have some menial task she could give him to do, and the opportunity came, and he, poor, ignorant, stupid and plodding to all appearances, "heard the Word gladly."

To-day Miss Haight spoke of Halkibai in terms of praise, and I recalled her as she came in the dreadful famine days. I think of her now, and I know something of what the grace of God has done for her. She had a wild temper, but that grace has given her victory over ill-temper. She could not read then, and she can not now, but she can pray from a full heart; she can speak simple, beautiful words for Christ, and these mornings she comes into my room with two of our married orphanage daughters, and early in the morning we find a message in the book, and pray together before Halkibai goes out with them to the women of Mahoba, who need just such messages as Halkibai can give. Her daughter is a beautiful girl, who will probably be married to one of the most promising of the Jubbulpore students in the Bible college. By the way, we must all pray that no device of man injure the good plans for the Bible college in that city. We must fight some of the battles our fathers did before on American soil for a pure, simple Gospel, untrammeled by creeds and traditions of men. We can not always be popular.

An Indian Marriage Scene.

Dr. Rosa Lee Oxer has gone out to her work in Rath. We pray Ohio may send a doctor soon to Mandha. The need is so great in that Ohio Christian mission, the "O. C. M." of India.

We have been having lots of weddings, actual lots, not lotteries, exactly—from one to seven brides in a lot. The letters from the young wives afterward often do my heart good; full of thanks they are for their good home here, and then words of the need of their Savior they see about them, and the joy they anticipate in service. Brothers and sisters, this work is well worth doing, well worth all sacrifice any one may make; worth these, our lives "bought with a price."

Indian College

By George W. Brown

When the work was first begun, some four or five years ago, we did not dignify it with the name of Bible college. At that time I was alone and there did not then seem to be any prospect of a large number of students, a fine building, instructors enough or a course heavy enough to justify such a name. But the work has in all respects outgrown our expectations.

When we had our first session in 1902, there were three students, only two of whom remained. The classes all recited in a small room in our bungalow. No course of study was mapped out, and suitable textbooks were not to be had. Slowly the work grew.

Many of these young men are boys who were rescued from death in the famines which devastated India in 1897 and 1900. They were of heathen parents. Most of them would no doubt have died, and had they lived, there is no doubt but that their condition would have been one of sin and wretchedness. Think of the change! They are, many of them, able to go forth and preach the word to their benighted fellow-countrymen, and point out to them the way to that Christ who is the cause of their changed condition. In place of the ignorance and vice, which would have been their lot, had they not come under the influence of the mission, they are now bright and promising young men.

We have plans laid for a handsome structure, which will certainly please those at home who contributed the money to build it. We shall have a large auditorium, to seat 200 persons, for we expect to grow here. There will be four class rooms. There will also be a room for a library and one for an office. The site we have secured is a good one, in one of the healthiest parts of Jubbulpore, for we have decided to leave Harda and come here, as it is a larger city and central to the mission. No doubt this decision has helped our growth.

Our course of study is three years long, and an additional course is provided for those who can read English and so carry on work in that tongue. Our main textbook is the Bible, but we give lectures on various subjects and use a few books which are published by the Religious Tract Society. One of the features of the work is the bazar preaching. Twice a week the students go to the great bazar here, and address the crowds which throng around to hear this new doctrine of salvation—so different from anything that they can find in their own religious books. Possibly we are not making a great many converts by this preaching, but we are at least helping our students to develop themselves, and when they go out into the world and preach they will be able to do so with power.

For more than two years I was alone in the work. G. L. Wharton, who had formerly served in India, but had resigned and worked at home for some years, has returned to the field to assist in the work. But there is all the work that both of us can do, and we have a pundit to teach our students in their vernacular grammar and literature, and another teacher who instructs them in English.

To me it seems that this is the most important work our mission has on hand today. For by preparing and sending out these workers, we shall increase our efficiency many fold, and we feel, too, that all who have contributed to the good cause of missions, and our Bible college, in the homeland have a share in this good work—they, too, are helping to preach the Gospel to untold thousands.

The Apotheosis of Labor

By William Durban

The history of the past month in the United Kingdom is without parallel in our British annals. When, in the year 1832, the celebrated Liberal statesman, Earl Grey, after the passing of the reform bill, found himself as premier at the head of a ministerial majority in the House of Commons of 300 members, the nation was astonished. No such triumph at the general election had been expected. It was the birth of the new age of democracy in the British empire. Toryism seemed to be slain. And, indeed, the old autocratic class conservatism was dead, never to rise again. But in time the internal dissensions inevitable in any part of progress, for obvious reasons, broke up Liberalism. The Radical factions disintegrated the stolid Whig element, and only when the great Gladstone rallied all progressive sections into one magnificent phalanx did Liberalism overthrow the next school of Toryism, the Imperial Conservatism created by Disraeli, who became Earl Beaconsfield after making Queen Victoria Empress of India. Gladstone fell through his mistake in bewildering the nation by formulating an Irish home rule bill and an Irish land bill together. Many of his old friends seceded and with the Conservatives under the leadership of the Marquis of Salisbury formed the Unionist party which has been in power for nearly twenty years, with only the interval for three years of Liberals in office under the Earl of Rosebery. And now at last, after Mr. Balfour's resignation as Tory premier and the dissolution of Parliament, a new House of Commons has been returned in which Sir Campbell Bannerman as prime minister finds himself at the head of a Liberal majority of 355 members. This is a record event. The Tories number only 155. Such a position is unparalleled. We are all unspeakably amazed. The nation is sick of the arrogance of the old feudal baronial ascendency; of the domination of brewers, distillers, landowners and lawyers, and of the selfishness of the wealthy ecclesiastical establishment known as the Church of England, which has with the connivance of the late Tory government excited the "passive resistance" movement against the tyrannical education act of 1902. That act was designed to foist on the country a system of priestcraft through the medium of the elementary public schools at the expense of the ratepayers.

The New Labor Party.

By far the most important development in this fresh national situation is the awakening of labor. The British workman has for ages slumbered with the tobacco pipe in one hand, the beer pot in the other, and the sporting papers in front of him. He has truly been a sorry creature so far as the noblest aspects of manhood are concerned. He is submissive, law-abiding, diligent and fairly skilled in his mechanical crafts. Indeed, he is in one respect an ideal operative. He prides himself on doing his own special kind of work thoroughly, solidly and exactly in accordance with rule. Thus, his work lasts. It is famous throughout the world for its endurance. But he lacks initiative, inventiveness, originality, and smartness. These are the characteristics of his American brother. And politically, the British toiler has only just become even approximately aware of his immense potency. He is wide awake now, and at once the consequence is seen in a tremendous revolution. For the return of a regiment of Labor members, numbering 51, shows that this new Parliament now has to reckon with a fresh factor as formidable as the Irish Nationalist Party of 1883.

Industrial Legislators.

Mr. John Burns is in the new ministry, as president of the board of trade. Now, during his whole life this remarkable man has been simply a working engineer. He is a genuine working man, a skilled mechanic, and has never posed as anything else, though of course for some years while a member of Parliament he has had many parliamentary and public duties to attend to. And now he is the Right Honorable John Burns, a prominent member of the cabinet, the first working man in the land who has ever attained such a splendid official position. He is the trusted and beloved friend of the sons and daughters of toil, but he is as far removed from sympathy with wild socialism as from the blind, bigoted, and selfish Toryism which would have ruined England as it has destroyed the greatness of Spain, but for the struggles of the Liberals, the heroism of the free churches, and the determination of the Radicals. Burns is a non-smoker and a teetotaler. He is a fine orator, a cultured reader, an outspoken critic of his own class, and a real tribune of the people. Had he been a mere blatant demagogue, he would never have been invited by Sir Henry Campbell Bannerman to take a seat in the cabinet. His elevation is the due reward of industry, intelligence, consistency, faithfulness, and fitness.

Labor's Coming Difficulties.

Nothing in this world that is of real worth or importance ever goes smoothly. And already, even before Parliament meets, the pessimists are gloating over their forebodings of its troubles and its coming struggles with the factions that will make themselves felt very soon. Some of the new Labor members are determined Socialists. These will be noisy, irrepressible to reconcile with any other section of their colleagues in the legislature whenever labor questions are concerned. On all matters otherwise all the Labor party will vote with the mass of the Liberals against the small surviving band of Tories. The peculiar fact is that the premier can defy all possible opposition, seeing that he has a majority actually of 90 over a combination of Tories, Labor members, and Irish Nationalists, supposing such a combination could ever occur. This is hardly likely to happen under any circumstances.

The Navvy in Parliament.

Some singular individuals have found their way into the new parliament. One of the most extraordinary of these is a genuine navvy, John Ward, who some time ago became secretary of the navvies' union. He is typical of the Labor Independent group. Mr. Ward is a splendid figure. He calls himself a Labor Imperialist. He volunteered during the Egyptian war, and fought in the battle of Suakin. He fought also at home with the police during the famous riots in Trafalgar Square, when the masses contended for the right of public meeting there.

Other strange men of the common people will be seen among our new legislators. One of these is known as "Our Bill." This is the popular cognomen bestowed on Mr. William Steadman, a Socialist of very pronounced type who has been a working barge-builder on the banks of the Thames in east London. These and other extreme men will bring in a number of highly controversial measures. We are about to enter on a very stormy period now that labor is coming into its own in Britain. I for one welcome the prospect.

The Great Free Trade Battle.

The one main reason why Toryism has been crushed is that it had pinned itself to Joseph Chamberlain's protectionist program. I can not here enter into any part of the great fiscal problem. I am aware that all other nations except the British, even the colonies of the British empire, reject free trade, but nevertheless the fact stands that, rightly or wrongly, the British people have now once more with an impassioned expression of national fervor declared that they will not have taxes piled upon imports for trade profit, though they will submit to such taxes for the purposes of revenue. Mr. Chamberlain has staked his position and popularity as a statesman of the first rank on his late campaign in favor of a return to a protective tariff. And his reward is that he sees his great party wrecked and his friend Balfour hurled from power. I am a free trader because I live in England and believe that the position of England is altogether unique. Probably if I lived in some other country I would be a protectionist. It was abundantly proved in times past that the English people could not afford to tax their food. When they did so multitudes were near starvation. For we can not produce anything like enough of food commodities to supply sustenance for the forty millions of the inhabitants of these islands, and therefore we must let in most of the imported supplies free from any impost. That is the lesson that was enforced by Cobden and Bright. It has never been forgotten. And I think it should not be and never will be.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

The temple was the peculiar dwelling place of Jehovah. The ark and mercy seat were there; the Shekinah, or manifestation of the divine presence; the sacred fire on the altar, first kindled in heaven; the Urim and Thummim; the holy offerings of millions in the solemn worship of the Most High. The dwelling place of the high and holy One is now transferred to the bosom of the believer. God makes your heart and mine his house. "I will dwell in thee." I will inhabit thee. I will not be as the wayfaring man who turns aside to tarry for a night. I will not rest here for a moment's converse, for a single meal, or passing entertainment, but I will take up my abode, my constant residence, with them. I will dwell in them and among them. "I will be their God," that is, no other guest shall take my place. They shall have no other god beside me. I will be all that an infinite, eternal, all-sufficient being can be to them that receive me; and taking me for their supreme and eternal good, I will take them to be my people, instruct and guide them, defend and provide for them, supply and bless them, as if I had none else to care for in all creation. Fancy a man thus consecrated and filled and glorified, raising an idol in his place, filling his heart with unholy desires and dethroning from the lofty places of his spirit the God whom he has received into his soul!

My guest is the high and holy One. "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" that "your body is the temple of the Holy Spirit which is in you, which you have of God, and you are not your own"? Your body is the dwelling place of the Holy Spirit. What an astonishing saying! As sure as God, the infinite One, dwelt in the Mosaic tabernacle and in the temple of Solomon, so truly does the Holy Spirit of God dwell in the souls of Christians; and as the temple and all its utensils were holy, separated from all common and profane uses, and dedicated alone to the service of the Most High, so the bodies of genuine Christians are holy, and all their members should be employed in the service of God alone. "If any man defile the temple of God him shall God destroy."

My guest is a divine person. Personal powers of rational understanding and will are ascribed to him in the Scriptures. "The Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God." "The things of God knoweth no man but the Spirit of God." He is joined with God and Christ as an object of divine worship, a fountain of blessing. "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit." "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God and the communion of the Holy Spirit be with you." He is spoken of by our Lord as a personal messenger from God sent on a mission to his people. "The Comforter, which is the Holy Spirit, whom the Father shall send in my name." "When he the Spirit of Truth is come he shall guide you into all truth." He is represented in the Gospel as performing a multitude of personal acts, interceding, teaching, speaking, witnessing. "The Spirit helpeth our infirmities and maketh intercession for us." "The Spirit beareth witness with our spirits." "The Holy Spirit beareth witness in every city, saying." The Spirit commands Philip "Go." The Spirit and the bride say "Come." Names and attributes ascribed to God are ascribed to the Spirit.

My guest when he enters a soul consecrates it, makes it a holy place, a place of meeting with God, a place of worship. Dwelling in us, filling us, taking possession of us, this wondrous guest must speed our feet, move our hands, guide our eyes, control our strength, apply all our powers. Regenerated, the soul is set to rights; old occupants are driven out, and the new guest opens the shutters and lets in the light, sweeps away the filth, garnishes the empty rooms, pervades the whole mansion, fills it with joy, sweetens all its atmosphere and keeps night and day its portals that nothing that defileth may enter. It may be a plain cottage home, it may be a very meager inn where the king takes his rest, but his presence makes it glorious and beautiful.

My guest gives perpetual joy in our fellowship together. No thoughts like God's thoughts. No teachings so marvelous to listen to as those which fall from the lips of Jesus Christ as he sits at the fireside of the soul. No consolations, hopes, inspirations like those which quicken us every day as they come from the Holy Spirit abiding in the soul's home. All other guests may pass from under our roof, but with this one we are not lonely. A thousand miles away from country and from friends, we may be, but our guest is here, his arms about us, his face beaming in ours, his counsels and cheer in our ears. It is the same God, the same presence in every land and the same sun and moon and stars.

My guest is with me when I move out of this temple into the house not made with hands. The walls of the poor earthly dwelling where such glorious fellowship was held, give way, tumble in ruins, and the guest brings us to his own house, where there are many mansions, and the glory of the temple, where God shall be eternally worshiped, opens its precincts to those who in this life have been hospitable toward his good Spirit and opened their doors to receive him.

Whom to-day will you have to be your guest? Whose fellowship, whose presence for life, for death, for eternity, do you desire? Do you say, "My house is not fit for your presence, O, Lord! It is in ruins; it is unclean; it has no rich furniture; it has no place for such a wondrous guest as the King of Heaven"? God wants to enter just such hearts as yours. In your rags, in your ruins, in your wrecked condition, in your wretchedness and want, God wants you. Christ would enter and abide. The Spirit would make you beautiful.

Alexander Campbell said, "The church of right is, and ought to be, a great missionary society. Her field is the whole earth, from sea to sea and from the Euphrates to the last domicile of man. A Christian community without missions and missionaries would be a solecism in creation, and a gross deviation from the order, the economy and the government of the universe."

FOOD AND STUDY

A College Man's Experience.

"All through my high school course and first year in college," writes an ambitious young man, "I struggled with my studies on a diet of greasy, pasty foods, being especially fond of cakes and fried things. My system got into a state of general disorder and it was difficult for me to apply myself to school work with any degree of satisfaction. I tried different medicines and food preparations but did not seem able to correct the difficulty.

"Then my attention was called to Grape-Nuts food and I sampled it. I had to do something, so I just buckled down to a rigid observance of the directions on the package, and in less than no time began to feel better. In a few weeks my strength was restored, my weight had increased, I had a clearer head and felt better in every particular. My work was simply sport to what it was formerly.

"My sister's health was badly run down and she had become so nervous that she could not attend to her music. She went on Grape-Nuts and had the same remarkable experience that I had. Then my brother, Frank, who is in the postoffice department at Washington city and had been trying to do brain work on greasy foods, cakes and all that, joined the Grape-Nuts army. I showed him what it was and could do and from a broken-down condition he has developed into a hearty and efficient man.

"Besides these I could give account of numbers of my fellow-students who have made visible improvement mentally and physically by the use of this food." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Character of Paul's Epistles

By Robert F. Horton

It must ever be a matter of surprise how Luther and Calvin, and the other reformers, can have spent so much labor on Paul's epistles, and have got so much truth out of them, without observing their missionary import. Finding in them the doctrine of justification by faith, and using them as the unfailing weapon against Rome, they seemed to have no eye for the general indications of these immortal letters. For, observe, the writings of Paul are nothing else but the letters of a missionary, evoked by his missionary work, necessitated by the fact that his missionary stations were so numerous and so widely scattered that he could be in them only as an occasional visitor. If Paul had not been a missionary, but had settled down in some comfortable benefice, to rejoice in the fact that the group of believers he had gathered around him were the peculiar people of God, we should have had no Pauline epistles at all. How can even the dullest reader touch these burning words; how can even the most dry-as-dust theologian weld his system with these molten arguments; how can any Christian seek salvation, confirm his faith, or establish his hope by grasping the mighty truths which ferment in the apostle's mind, without recognizing that the whole motive and design and texture are missionary and that no one has a right to share in the truths and privileges which Paul unfolds to his readers, who is not fired by the missionary zeal which glows in the writer's heart? He writes to the Galatians, because in his missionary journeys he had gathered these converts out of heathendom; and then unscrupulous Judaizers had followed in his track, to persuade them that, in order to be Christians, they must also become Jews. To the Thessalonians or the Corinthians he writes, because in his rapid missionary course he has had to leave young converts not fully instructed; to the Romans he writes as a missionary who longs to visit them, but is determined to send them of his best, if he may not come himself. To the Philippians he pours out his heart, because, the first of his converts in Europe, they have been the most untiring supporters of his missionary progress. The kindred letters, Colossians and Ephesians, are written when the missionary's course is arrested; and in the irksome restraint of a prison, he seeks to deepen and consolidate the truths which he has taught. Even his letters to friends bear the same impress. The briefest of them all is the most missionary, for the Epistle of Philemon contains the truth, revolutionary to the ancient world, that not only Gentiles and barbarians, but mere slaves, whom Aristotle regarded rather as implements than as men, could be admitted into the kingdom of God. Finally, the letters to Timothy and Titus give us an unexpected glimpse into a period of Paul's life upon which history is silent; and we find him there again in prison, and under the very shadow of death, exhorting and guiding two of his missionary lieutenants, on whom the work must fall when he had quitted the field.

Thus, it is not that Paul gives occasional incitements or directions for missionary work; it is not that here or there in his letters we find him arguing that the message comes to Gentile as well as to Jew, or that "God will have all men to be saved, and to come to the knowledge of the truth"; it is not that we see him now and again selecting and despatching missionary agents, Barnabas, Silas, Epaphras, Mark, or Timothy, that justifies us in claiming for this part of the New Testament a missionary character, but these letters are missionary productions through and through, and have no significance apart from that characteristic. Livingstone might be regarded as an explorer no less than a missionary, Mackay as an engineer, Hannington as a prelate, but Paul is nothing save a missionary, his writings know no other subject, his heart is occupied with no other wish, but to make Christ known where he was not known before. Theologians, in trying to construct systems out of his letters, have largely wasted their time; ecclesiastics who would have him as an authority for their pretensions, are put to constant confusion; his business is not to construct a theology or to organize a hierarchy, but to carry Christ into regions beyond. His theological arguments or his church arrangements are produced incidentally, and lay claim to no finality; the one constant and permanent element of his thought and work is the missionary passion; the love of Christ constrains him, woe is to him if he preaches not the Gospel, he is determined to know nothing else but Christ, and Christ crucified, and never to rest until all men know. What an irony it is that theologians handle these letters, that ecclesiastics cite them, that individual believers build upon them, and yet that only a few are aware of their main burden, and the reason of their existence, which is to carry on the expansion of the missionary work until there is no country where Christ is not preached, and no human being to whom his salvation is not offered.

Teacher Training

By J. H. Hardin

Very few, comparatively speaking, of our Bible school teachers can have the advantages of university or college courses. Some are denied even high school culture. If they receive any special training it must, in most cases, be such as they can receive while at the same time pursuing life's callings in business life, on the farm, or in the midst of the many cares of domestic life. But they must have training. And they are anxious for it. They are mostly doing the best they can with such helps as are afforded them in lesson quarterlies, etc., and they are doing a noble work, the effectiveness of which is not justly appreciated by the church. But these teachers desire better training than they have so far received. They are hungry for something that will advance them in power to do the work they love to do, and which they feel that they ought to do for Christ.

Seeing that they can not, save in rare cases, go away to training schools, we must take training schools to them. I want to tell, in this article, what is practicable in this line.

Teacher training is not new, but it is now receiving a new impulse. A department for its promotion has been organized by the International Sunday-school Association. Mr. W. C. Pearce, of Chicago, is the secretary of this department. It is said that he travels 30,000 miles a year to organize and superintend the teacher training work. He is an officer in the Englewood Christian Church of Chicago. One way of promoting this work is to encourage different religious bodies to take it up and push it among their people. One secretary of a prominent denomination writes me that he has 10,000 of their teachers studying under his supervision. It will not be very long before this movement for the betterment of the teaching function will have become coextensive with Bible school activity. It is a class of extension work that extends rapidly when Christian workers come to realize what there is in it for them.

The method of this matter is simple and easy. It involves a course of study, a leader for the local class, an examination and a certificate to the student when the work is done. Our Missouri Bible School Board has adopted as a text book for the elementary course, Hurlbut's Revised Normal Lessons. This book presents forty lessons. Classes will usually do one lesson a week. The book costs 25 cents. It is better for classes to have a whole evening with nothing else on hand; but some classes combine this work with the prayer-meeting, and make it a great blessing to members of the church who would not otherwise pursue the course. It is possible for any school to have a teacher training class if they will go at it in earnest. It is intended to enlist in the class not only those now engaged in teaching, but also persons who may become teachers, and persons who desire the information whether they ever teach or not. The local class determines for itself the time and place of meeting, the person to lead, etc., etc. The leader need not be an expert, but may be an earnest student engaged in study with fellow students. A beginning has been made in Missouri, and classes are now being organized right along. Nine were organized in Kansas City during our series of institutes in that city in January. If the reader desires any further information on the subject I shall be glad to give it on application. The best is not too good for our teachers. Let us see that this good thing is taken to every one of them.

A Good Man Gone Home.

Let me speak personally rather than editorially concerning my dear old friend, Bro. J. C. Reynolds, of Macomb, Ill., who has recently been called home. What Luke says of Barnabas can be truly said of Brother Reynolds: "He was a good man, full of faith and of the Holy Spirit." My acquaintance with him began in the autumn of 1865, when, after the close of the civil war, I entered Abingdon College as a student. He was my first teacher in Greek and Latin, for he was at that time Professor of Languages in that institution. He was a faithful, painstaking and thorough teacher, and took a deep personal interest in every student in his classes. Himself a graduate of Bethany College, he was associated with Bro. P. J. Murphy, another graduate, in the founding of Abingdon College.

During the time of his teaching at Abingdon his home was in Macomb, where he preached for the church on Lord's days. One year before my graduation at Abingdon he became the proprietor and editor of a monthly religious magazine called "The Gospel Echo." Soon after I left college he had the church at Macomb invite me to share with him the pastorate of the church, which I accepted. In a few months, in January, 1869, I became joint editor and proprietor with him of the "Gospel Echo." This relation continued until "The Christian," of Kansas City, was absorbed by "The Gospel Echo," in 1871, and the paper was removed to Quincy. He still remained associated with the paper as editor, though his financial responsibility ceased with the removal of the paper to Quincy. He assisted materially in the organization of the Christian Publishing Company, which was effected in November, 1873, in St. Louis, Missouri.

In those days of my early association with Brother Reynolds he was recognized as one of the wise and able leaders of our cause in Illinois and the brotherhood. He was chosen as the representative from Illinois on the committee that formulated "The Louisville Plan." He represented his brethren in debates with infidels and spiritualists, as well as with other assailants of our cause, and always defended the truth with satisfaction to those he represented. He was an ardent friend of foreign missions long before we had any foreign missionary society. He was one of the little handful of brethren who met in the basement of the old Fourth and Walnut Street Church in Louisville, when the present Foreign Christian Missionary Society was born. He was always in the forefront of every forward movement of his brethren.

He was not a narrow man. He loved good people in all churches and did not think this was disloyalty to his own convictions. In my earliest connection with him his breadth of sympathy and toleration was often a rebuke to my more untempered zeal, and served to hold me back from extreme assaults on those who "followed not with us." He was a godly man. He was a man of serene faith and of complete self-control. He was guileless as a child. He loved his brethren and rejoiced in the ability and talents of his brother preachers. He was humble and loved humble people. He was poor in worldly goods, but never let that worry him. His children were kind and good to him, and for that he was profoundly grateful. He wanted all the new books that came out from our press, and was a reader and student to the last. Especially did he delight to read his Greek New Testament.

Death had no terror for him. His Master had conquered death and he only waited for his call to go home and rest from his long and useful labors. In a good old age, full of years and honored and loved by all who knew him, with his life work done, his character ripened into such Christlikeness as only the best of the earth attain in this life, with a faith that held fast to eternal realities, with love to God and to all mankind, his heart ceased to beat and he entered suddenly upon the blessed experiences of the life unseen and immortal.

It is a pleasing memory to me that I enjoyed his love and confidence to the last. Others at times have doubted my "soundness in the faith" when my judgment differed from theirs, and have questioned my motives. But this good man and true friend, whose counsel led me into the editorial work, which proved to be my life work, never wavered in his love and confidence. It was only a few weeks ago that he wrote me a personal letter, saying his time to go must soon come, and that he wished me to speak at his funeral, if it were possible; but if not, then he wished "that man of God," C. H. Winders, of Columbia, to perform that duty. This letter we sent to Brother Winders before leaving home, and it is gratifying to know that he could be present and speak at the funeral of our friend and brother.

Good friend, beloved brother, servant of God, well done! I shall meet thee soon, I trust, in the Father's house and renew the association of other days. Till then, farewell. J. H. Garrison.

What the World May Believe.

By W. F. Richardson.

For nearly a century the Disciples of Christ have been pleading with the Christian world to unite upon the simple and Scriptural terms of New Testament teaching and practice, urging as one of the prime reasons for such union the necessity of bringing the unbelieving world to faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. It was more than a half century before we began to see that one of the surest and speediest ways of proving the righteousness of our plea was to push out into the heart of the faithless world and there preach the simple Gospel to those who had never heard of Jesus. The effect has been wonderful. Not only has the labor of our missionaries been rewarded with abundant success, but the passion for Christian unity has taken possession of the missionary hosts, until it is hardly too much to say that every missionary on the foreign field is a preacher of Christian unity. The scattered workers in the heathen field are closer together to-day than are the massed forces at home. The native churches are being instructed in the elements of our common Christianity, and little attention given to those things that separate between the denominations at home. Let us enlarge our foreign work until it touches the borders of every field on earth, and our workers come into sympathetic contact with the missionaries of the entire church of God on heathen soil, and our glorious plea for the oneness of the body of Christ will become the rallying cry of the races that are newly turning to God from their idols. It is a time for the Disciples of Christ to greatly enlarge their offerings to this great cause. Every church and every member ought to bear a share in it. God give us hearts to feel and eyes to see and hands to help.

Last year the Foreign Society expended about $21,000 per month, or about $700 per day, upon the work it is doing in the regions beyond. The outlay will be even larger this year if the work is sustained as is expected.

COFFEE vs. COLLEGE

Student Had to Give Up Coffee.

Some people are apparently immune to coffee poisoning—if you are not, Nature will tell you so in the ailments she sends as warnings. And when you get a warning, heed it or you get hurt, sure. A young college student writes from New York:

"I had been told frequently that coffee was injurious to me, and if I had not been told, the almost constant headaches with which I began to suffer after using it for several years, the state of lethargic mentality which gradually came upon me to hinder me in my studies, the general lassitude and indisposition to any sort of effort which possessed me, ought to have been sufficient warning. But I disregarded them till my physician told me a few months ago that I must give up coffee or quit college. I could hesitate no longer, and at once abandoned coffee.

"On the advice of a friend I began to drink Postum Food Coffee, and rejoice to tell you that with the drug of coffee removed and the healthful properties of Postum in its place I was soon relieved of all my ailments. The headaches and nervousness disappeared entirely, strength came back to me, and my complexion, which had been very, very bad, cleared up beautifully. Better than all, my mental faculties were toned up, and became more vigorous than ever, and I now feel that no course of study would be too difficult for me." # Our Budget.

—Foreign mission offering next Lord's day!

—This is rally day for the whole brotherhood.

—These ante-centennial years are growing years.

—Every church and each individual member should strive to excel former offerings.

—The call of pagan peoples for the bread of life should be heard by all—rich or poor, strong or weak, housed or unhoused, shepherded or unshepherded.

—We regret that we are compelled to eliminate from our Ministerial Exchange columns a great many notices that are purely of a business character. We are glad to give the space freely to churches desiring ministers or evangelists or singers, and to these in turn who are seeking to find places of usefulness. But the disposition of corner lots, dry goods stores, books, or other utilities properly belongs to the advertising columns of our paper. The charges for space in the Subscribers' Want column are so small that we really feel that we ought to draw a hard and fast line and not admit, as we have sometimes in the past, this kind of matter under the heading of Ministerial Exchange. We have such a difficulty now in publishing legitimate news that we must ask all who have merchandise to dispose of to send these items to the advertising manager.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Wichita, Kan., Feb. 26.—Great meeting here; 20 to-night; 41 to date. C. F. Stevens, pastor; I. W. Gill, Sunday-school superintendent.—Frank C. Huston.

—J. W. Larimore has been called to Pana, Ill.

—The church at Maxwell, Cal., is without a minister.

—W. T. Smith has resigned the work at Ellenton, S. C.

—We regret to learn of the death of the mother of Mrs. H. A. Denton.

—A beautiful new church costing $12,000 has just been dedicated at Waitsburg, Wash.

—Seven California churches doubled their apportionments for foreign missions last year.

—The state board of Georgia has in view a simultaneous protracted effort in the near future.

—Walla Walla, Wash., expects to complete a $35,000 church building in the early summer.

—The church at Red Bluff, Cal., seems to have found a congenial spirit in Brother Clarkson.

—The Martha Washington Society of Christian College has just had its 50th annual meeting.

—J. F. Ghormley, of Portland, Ore., is in the northwest again, after holding a meeting in Illinois.

—We hope to begin in our next issue an interesting serial entitled "The Elderburg Association."

—E. L. Shellnut, editor of the "Southern Evangelist," is expecting to make an extended trip through the west.

—R. S. McHatton writes very enthusiastically of W. H. Harris and the opportunities for his church at Ritzville, Wash.

—The district board of Blue Stone, W. Va., expects to build at Bramwell, Duhring, Graham's Chapel and other places this year. A man is wanted to locate at Athens.

—The seventh district convention of Kansas will be held in Oxford, March 6-8. George E. Lyon is the president.

—J. B. White will close his work at North Bend, Neb., the end of the month, and will be ready to enter a new field.

—A. Immanuel Zeller reports the occasion of the ordaining of the elders and deacons at Palmer City, Ill., as a very happy one.

—J. G. Creason, of Lathrop, Mo., has not been able to fill his pulpit for the past two weeks, owing to an attack of typho-malaria.

—The churches at Eastman and Orphan, Ga., are without a preacher. Judge Williamson, or C. B. Murrill, of Eastman, Ga., may be addressed.

—We are glad to learn that the work at Kinston, N. C., is developing satisfactorily. There are some fine workers among the young people.

—Victor L. Goodrich has just begun work at Clearwater, Kan., for full time. There is a beautiful new building there and the church is in a prosperous condition.

—G. M. Reed has resigned at Peabody, Kan., and enters upon the pastorate at Weiser, Idaho, at once. The church at Peabody, therefore, is in need of a minister.

—It is hoped that a new building will be dedicated at Brunson, S. C., before the summer. John H. Swift, the state evangelist, reports progress at several places in that state.

—The church at Richland Center, Wis., where Willard McCarthy has been extended a call to remain, have asked Lawrence Wright to hold them another meeting next fall.

—The church at Fairmount, W. Va., has just bought a new parsonage which will be occupied by Brother Bates and his family April 1. The work is going forward well at this place.

—Good progress is being made on the big stone church at Fitzgerald, Ga., which will be the largest and best church building in that part of the state. N. G. Buckley is the minister.

—I. H. Teal writes of a great revival in Humboldt county, Cal., where, as a result of a meeting, the cause of righteousness and the forces of iniquity have been brought into sharp collision.

—The work at Quanah, Tex., where G. L. Buckley is minister, goes along steadily. Recently the building has been papered and decorated, and is to be repainted in the spring.

—The date selected for the beginning of the revival campaign in West Virginia is October 28. Percy H. Wilson has been chosen as chairman of the committee and W. H. Fields as secretary.

—During the last two months there has been a great awakening in Madagascar shown by the fact that 1,290 persons have thrown away their heathen charms and become students of the Bible.

—Owing to the failure of some of the younger men in the state to agree to review Professor Sears' paper at the Missouri lectureship, Dr. W. T. Moore has agreed to undertake this task.

—A. M. Growden is having constant accessions at Carbondale, Ill., and has just been given an increase of salary. Among those who have recently taken membership is a Baptist preacher.

—The assistant editor had the pleasure of worshiping with the church at Columbia, Mo., on Lord's day, and listened to a strong appeal from C. H. Winders, the pastor, that Columbia should join the ranks of the living link churches for foreign missions.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Purifies and enriches the blood and builds up the whole system.

It radically cures all blood diseases, from pimples to scrofula.

It is the best remedy for catarrh, rheumatism and dyspepsia.

At all times of the year it is the most widely useful medicine.

These statements are confirmed daily by cured men and women.

Over 40,000 testimonials received in two years — an unequaled record!

—A visitor to Colorado declares that only one out of every hundred people there is a member of the Church of Christ. Our new church in Denver is one good step forward in changing this condition of things.

—G. W. Thompson, of Kirksville, Mo., has been called to the Richmond Street Church, Cincinnati, O., and will enter upon this field early in March, when he has completed the protracted meeting he is now holding.

—As a result of the visit of the Clark family to Owensville, Ind., $2,000 were raised toward the indebtedness on the new building just dedicated, and the congregation is now ready to pay $1,000 a year for a preacher.

—The American Board of Foreign Missions is to institute a great campaign in fifty leading cities of the country to arouse interest in the foreign mission movement. The effort will be primarily to reach business men.

—As a result of a fine meeting held by O. E. Hamilton and Ralph Boileau at Hastings, Neb., Brother Gilliam reports that there will be an enlargement of the present building and additional ground purchased for future use.

—Clark Bateman writes us that he is proud of a social meeting held not long since at Carlisle, Ia., when the whole evening was filled with an impromptu program of story, song, and music reminiscent of days at Drake.

—Charles E. Powell, of Lexington, Ky., is in Florida taking a three months' vacation which he is filling by "working like a Turk"—such is our information—for the Daytona Church, serving as pastor until the close of the state convention.

—L. G. Batman, pastor of the First Christian Church at Philadelphia, Pa., is being assisted in a three weeks' meeting by W. E. M. Hackleman, following the big Torrey-Alexander meeting, which has just been held in Philadelphia.

—A telegram from Brother Crossfield reports that F. M. Rains was with the church at Owensboro, Ky., on Lord's day, and that it joins the living links. The same telegram announces that a church has been organized at Hawesville.

—The meeting at Hastings, Neb., which has just closed with 132 additions, resulted in over $1,000 being raised for an addition to the church and $3,300 for a new lot. O. E. Hamilton and Brother Boileau were the evangelists.

—One of the pleasant features of a service which Harold Monser conducted for Brother Fisher at the University Place Church, Champaign, Ill., last week was the making of the good confession by little Paul Monser.

—The churches that have greatly increased their membership should increase their offerings for missions in proportion. Every new member should mean a new offering. The converts will do their part if they are properly taught.

—D. F. Harris is doing a fine work at Montpelier, Ind. In his few months' ministry he has remodeled the building, increased the audiences and a brief meeting by the "Martin family" has just increased the membership by 50 per cent.

—Charles W. Mahin has just concluded a fine meeting for the church at Holton, Ind., which has been without a minister for almost a year. As a result of his visit there has been a reawakening, and M. R. Scott, of Wirt, will take charge of the work.

—W. F. Aydelot, aged 75, was killed by a railroad train at Marshall, Ill., Feb. 21. He was formerly a professor in the college at Alma, Ill. We have no details, but hereby express our sympathy for the friends of our brother thus tragically taken from them.

—The work at Findlay, O., under C. H. Bass, is in good condition, and it is expected that this church will join the living link ranks soon. Brother Bass has recently been elected president of the ministerial alliance, which is composed of over 30 preachers.

—The annual meeting of the Central Illinois Christian Missionary Institute will be held in Arcola, April 10, 11. H. H. Peters, minister of the church at Rossville, the secretary, writes us that the program being prepared is an excellent one and a good attendance is expected.

—Mrs. Nancy A. Henderson died Feb. 21 at Virden, Ill., aged 88. Mrs. Henderson was for many years a devoted Christian and a liberal giver to our college and benevolent work. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST joins with her friends in condolence and love and hope.

—On March 1 the subscription department began mailing statements to all our delinquent subscribers. The St. Louis banks charge a minimum of 15 cents on each private check. Our friends will please remit either by express or money order, or bank draft.

—Roger A. Fife, of Kansas City, who has been in a good meeting with J. A. Longston, at Independence, Kan., begins a meeting to-day with M. S. Johnson at Litchfield, Ill. In April, with Herbert H. Saunders as singing evangelist, he will assist in a simultaneous campaign in Chattanooga, Tenn.

—J. D. Pontius has just been visiting Brother Popplewell's church at Ridgeway, Mo., and reports that the latter is accomplishing a good work there, and has also just revived the church at Hatfield. There are 32 charter members. There were 11 confessions and a debt of $800 raised.

Bro. J. A. Cunningham of Tupelo, Miss., has ready for delivery two volumes of "Sermons," pronounced "best of all," and his "Blue and Gray" book of poems, all for $1.

—We regret to learn of the death of Thomas A. Gunnell, which occurred in Colorado Springs. Brother Gunnell was a member of the Christian Church for about 70 years, and by marriage was related to J. W. McGarvey. We hope to publish further particulars in a subsequent issue.

—J. W. Pearson, who is in his first charge, has been asked to continue as pastor of the church at Nebo, Ill., with an increase in salary. During his ministry of one and a half years there have been 25 additions to the church, which is in better condition for usefulness than ever before in its history.

—Pueblo, Col., is rejoicing in the fact that Brother Mohorter has decided to remain with the Central Church there. The recent revival resulted in 140 additions, and each new member was presented with a copy of the New Testament at a reception following the close of the meeting.

—Plans are on foot for the building of a church to cost between five and six thousand dollars at Granite City, Ill. A 50 foot lot has been secured in a fine location, and an option on an adjoining lot. The University Place Church, Champaign, Ill., has adopted this mission as its child.

—We regret to learn that Sister Baker, wife of Samuel Baker, pastor of the church at Brownsville, Oregon, has just died at the hospital there. A. H. Mulkey writes us that those who witnessed the passing pronounced it a death of surpassing beauty, so full of confident hope and triumphant rejoicing.

—The decision of Claris Yeuell to relinquish the work at the Randall Street Church, Baltimore, notwithstanding the Board of Church Extension has promised a loan to save the church, is unchanged. He is therefore open for another field, and may be addressed at 1531 Belt avenue, Baltimore, Md.

—O. P. Spiegel and his wife, together with Singing Evangelist John E. Sturgis, of Indiana, have been sent by the evangelistic board of the Home Society to hold a meeting at Plainfield, N. J., where, we are glad to note, Bro. Phil A. Parsons reports there is a much brighter outlook than there was some time ago.

—T. Henry Blenus, of Jacksonville, writes that his church has been enaged in hunting up backsliders for the past two months, and has now the names and most of the addresses of over seventy people in that city who are of our church fellowship. Many of these have gone to Florida and for years neglected church attendance.

—Special efforts should be made to get an offering from every member on the first Sunday in March. Few will refuse if their attention is called to this duty and if they are asked to give. Those who refuse should be taught that in withholding they are wronging their own souls and are postponing the triumph of our Lord.

—Congratulations on "Gloria in Excelsis," the best book of its kind I have ever examined—well edited, well arranged, well indexed, well bound. The brotherhood has in it something of which to be proud. I shall take a delight in commending it to all needing new hymnals. B. S. Ferrall.

—We regret that a news item in "Our Budget" February 15, made a serious mistake. It was the church at Logan, Ia., where Bro. B. Franklin Hall had held a fine meeting, that was in need of a good pastor, and not the church at Woodbine, Ia., where Brother Hall is himself doing good pastoral work. We ought, of course, to have caught this error in the proof sheets, but somehow it escaped us.

THE AMERICAN CHRISTIAN
MISSIONARY SOCIETY,

Y. M. C. A. Bldg.,
CINCINNATI, OHIO.

—The church at Maryville, Mo., has sent out several young men now in the ministry. Among these are: A. E. Corey, of China, at present assisting in the Foreign Society's rallies; Grundy Fisher, of Detroit, Mich.; Charles Beal, of Palo Alto, Cal.; Will Shullenberger, of Blockton, Ia.; and Frank Robey and Roy Hughes, of Drake University.

—The day should come soon when our churches will give as much for missions as they spend on local current expenses. There are churches that give $5 for missions for every dollar they spend on themselves. If all who were able to, give us for work in the regions beyond as they pay for their own edification the missionary treasuries would be full all the year.

—"Independence should fall in line and get ready for large things." This is the last sentence in an editorial in the little church paper of J. A. Longston, of Independence, Kan. The editor has been writing on the great religious awakening that is going on all over the country. Let other churches substitute their names for that of Independence. We can double our membership only by every church's making the right preparation.

"The Original"

Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk and the Civil War Veteran are old friends." The Eagle Brand is still the standard. It is sold by all first-class grocers. Avoid unknown brands.

—The church is a means and not an end. The church exists to complete Christ's redemptive work on earth. If any church were to lose sight of this truth and concentrate all its time and thought and resources upon itself, it would cease to be a church. The church is to be a light to the nations, and to be for salvation to the ends of the earth.

—Because a church is paying for an organ that is no reason why the missionary offering should be omitted or diminished. The missionary offering has the prior claim. It can not be honestly set aside on account of some obligation that the church has assumed. The earlier claim is divine. The church must give the Gospel to the nations; it is not necessary to have a fine organ.

—The churches have sent on men and women to all the ends of the earth. These saintly and heroic spirits on the far-flung battle line must be supported and equipped and reinforced. To desert them or to forget them would be to dishonor ourselves and to prove unworthy of the confidence of God and of our representatives, who look to us for moral and material assistance.

—We had the pleasure of a visit last week from E. E. Violett, minister of the church at Shelbyville, Tenn Over 140 members have been added to the church there during the past nine months, and in view of the fact that this district has been a stronghold for some of the non-progressive elements, this success is remarkable. The contract will be let for a new house of worship some time in April.

R. P. ANDERSON,
Missionary of the Foreign Society at Christiania, Norway.

—Clyde Harlow, passing through St. Louis on his return from the great meeting at Portsmouth, Ohio, where he assisted his father and Brother Taubman, visited The Christian-Evangelist offices. From him we learn that Brother Harlow will take charge of his home church at Springfield, Mo., until August, when he will seek recreation before beginning another fall campaign in the evangelistic field.

—W. B. Gallaher, of Danville, Ill., writes us to bear perfectly volunteer testimony to the remarkable "solid, substantial and successful work" done there for the First Church of Christ during several years past by J. H. Smart, who was formerly of The Christian-Evangelist staff. "The work has been done kindly, wisely, and with untiring zeal and energy," writes Brother Gallaher.

—F. E. Lumley, pastor of the church at Wychwood Park, Toronto, has been recently appointed to the principalship of the College of the Disciples at St. Thomas, Ont., to succeed W. C. MacDougall who was appointed last August by the C. W. B. M. to the mission work in Calcutta, India, and whose resignation takes effect at the end of the present college year. Brother Lumley will bring an abundance of energy and consecration to his new work.

—We very much regret to announce the death of G. L. Brokaw, who was, until recently, owner and editor of the "Christian Union" of Des Moines. Brother Brokaw sold out his interest and went into the evangelistic field, working also for the circulation department of the "Christian Standard." He had not been well for some time, but only recently was his condition serious. We understand that his mind was troubled at the last.

—"The Power of His Resurrection" is the title of an Easter poem by Bro. [illegible]. L. Allen, of Homestead, Pa., who has had it printed in a neat little pamphlet which sells for 10 cents per copy. It indicates poetic ability of no mean order. It is a strong poem, giving a masterful description of the sublime event of our Lord's resurrection from the dead. It may be used with fine effect as a recitation in Easter entertainments by the children. Address the author as above.

Missionaries of the Foreign Society at Nankin, China. Dr. Wakefield is a son of Professor E. B. Wakefield, of Hiram College. Mrs. Wakefield is a daughter of Dr. and Mrs. V. T. Lindsay, of Springfield, Ill. They are both graduates of Hiram College. Dr. Wakefield graduated from Rush Medical College, Chicago, Ill., in June, 1904. They went out last autumn.

—"Gloria in Excelsis" is rich in numbers and in variety. You have rendered splendid service in behalf of our hymnology in this latest production. It will be a difficult matter to excel it in its entirety. Surely you deserve the thanks of the brotherhood for giving us this most needed addition to our church worship. May it prosper. Long live "Gloria in Excelsis." D. Errett, Pastor.

Salem, Oregon.

—"The Ohio Work," which is being published in the interests of our churches in the Buckeye state, is to be combined with "The Christian Worker," which is a western Pennsylvania paper. The one paper will seek to cover both fields, but is to be a parish paper rather than to attempt to come into competition with such papers as The Christian-Evangelist, which covers a national field. There are to be two Ohio editors.

—We have heard of the good work of O. M. Thomason, who has recently been located with the church at Davis, I. T. We learn that he has tendered his resignation there to take effect the last of March, at which time he will resume his journey to the Pacific coast, whither he had started last fall when he was prevailed upon to stop off at Davis. Brother Thomason has the record of being a good evangelist, and is backed up by the recommendations of many of our leaders in the territory and Texas. He seeks to get into touch with some of our churches in California, Oregon and Washington.

Buddhist Nuns Visiting Miss Mary Kelly at the Girls' School of Nanking, China.

—Our new church hymnal, "Gloria in Excelsis," is by odds superior to any hymnal published for the use of the Disciples of Christ. The responsive readings are well chosen and will contribute to the culture of the attention and the true spirit of worship. The hymns and tunes include a wide and varied and valuable selection. On its merits the book should find a place in large numbers of our churches in the near future.
N. S. Haynes, Pastor.

Lincoln, Neb.

—F. F. Walters, who came to the church at Neosho, Mo., from Grand Junction, Col., has been stirring things in his latest pastorate. The local paper gives a lengthy account of a meeting just held there, from which we gather that from his first appearance in the pulpit at Neosho the building there has proved entirely too small for the audiences. The Cumberland Presbyterian Church was secured for the special meeting, and it has been crowded so that there was not standing room. There is a fine outlook for a new building in the near future. Brother Walters was ably assisted by L. D. Sprague, of California, Mo., who had charge of the music.

Beggar Huts.

—J. D. Dabney, of Pittsburg, Pa., has prepared a little souvenir of his trip to the Holy Land. He gives a description of some of the most interesting places in the Orient, with pictures which Brother Dabney took or had taken. His church at Herron Hill last year raised $2,404, about $200 being for missions and benevolences. There were 31 additions, bringing the membership up to 125. This is an excellent report, for the field is a difficult one, and the church was not organized until October of the year previous. Preparations are now being made toward the expending of $1,000 on the building.

Examination Hall, University of Calcutta, where 13,000 students are examined. 6. Senate Hall, University of Calcutta.*

—J. F. Callahan, Noble, O., suggests the advisability of gathering a library for struggling ministerial students. Having assisted one such young man by securing books for him, it has occurred to him that he might be the medium of aiding a good many other young men in the same way by securing donations of books that have served their purpose in educating other preachers, who would gladly donate them for the use of such students as might not be able to purchase books for themselves. The idea is a good one, only we must not give such books as are of no value any longer to any one. All our libraries contain dead material of this kind.

—Our churches at Springfield, Mo, have put out a little monthly, called "The Christian Worker," with D. W. Moore as chief editor, and a number of preachers in the vicinity as assistants. We make a quotation from the initial editorial: "What we shall stand for is beautifully expressed in that suggestive poem of Bro. J. H. Garrison's. The policy of our Christian workers shall be, first, constructive, rather than destructive. To plant truth, the seeds of the kingdom, and in this way defeat wrong. To oppose evil, by the sword of the Spirit. To advocate in short whatever promotes the kingdom of heaven, to oppose whatever hinders." We cordially congratulate our brethren and trust the paper may do a useful work.

—It is the request of ministers in very many parts of the country that pastors knowing of any of their flock removing shall send an intimation to this effect to the preacher in the town to which these members go. W. A. Moore writes that more than half our brethren who move to a city like Tacoma, with its eighty thousand population, are lost to the work unless addresses are sent to the church. It will be seen, therefore, how needful was the suggestion made in a recent issue by Brother Lichtenberger in reference to the larger cities, like New York. Let the minister make a habit of this, and many of our church members will be saved to the church although they may be among the changeable population.

—We are glad to note that the church at Warren, O., is planning to swarm soon. The pastor has been urging the matter, and the financial committee has reported a sufficient amount subscribed to go ahead with the erection of a building on the west side, which, with the lot, will cost about $9,000. This building ought to be ready for occupancy next fall, and many new members in that part of the city will volunteer to form a new congregation. When Brother Lynn was pastor at Springfield, Ill., a similar plan was carried out with great success.

—Bro. D. A. Wickizer, although he has been but six months at Kirksville, Mo., is bringing that church into line with all progressive work. There have been in that period forty additions to the membership, and the congregation is more united in sentiment than it has been for some time. Last week a fine missionary rally was held, when the different interests were represented by such men as T. A. Abbott, Dean Haggard, George Muckley, A. W. Kokendoffer and George L. Snively. The brethren at Kirksville will find that in union there is strength, and we are glad that Brother Wickizer is enforcing this old proverb.

—Clyde Lee Fife, a son of Roger H. Fife, who helped his father in some of the manual work connected with the erection of the Hyde Park Christian Church, Kansas City, preaches in Louisburg, Kan., on Sundays, and is a freshman student in the University of Kansas during the week days. There is a picture of the young man and some account of him in the Kansas City "Star," from which it appears that he began to preach when he was a senior in the Westport high school, and has not missed being in the pulpit a single Sunday in three and a half years. He has intended to be a preacher as long as he can remember, and likes the idea of earning his way through school. He hopes to finish at Harvard University.

—J. P. Haner writes of a condition of things that exists doubtless in many places. He is holding a meeting in an old town of four hundred inhabitants, where there is one church house, built by the town, and controlled by unconverted men. There was no church organization of any kind there, although there were a few members of different churches, all contending with each other and for an existence. Some two months ago Brother Simons organized a Christian church, and Brother Haner has just had twelve additions.

—F. P. Arthur, pastor of the Lyon Street Church, Grand Rapids, Mich., says that the brethren in the two churches in that city raised the sum of $7,200, during the last year—$5,200 from Lyon Street and $2,000 from Fifth Avenue, and that nearly one hundred members were received into the membership of both churches. Brother Arthur is closing his seventh year of service with the Lyon Street Church, and writes that he is doing so "with prayerful hopes for larger things for Grand Rapids." We believe the conditions are ripe for "larger things" in that goodly city, and we shall expect to hear of a forward movement. The Lyon Street Church supports Dr. Jennie Crozier as missionary in India.

Some time ago we printed a quotation from a letter from Bro. Duncan MacGregor, of Allegheny City, who was a convert at the recent meeting of Brother Scoville for the church in that city. In a later note from him he writes: "Since I have entered this field of Gospel simplicity, my soul is untrammeled with the creeds. Imagine the ineffable bliss my soul enjoys drinking at the fountain head of Christ's unadulterated and undiluted teachings, undistilled from the minds and filtered through the brains of men. What a pity all these years I have been tied, fettered, chained! But now I am free. I would like to tell the simple story. Perhaps I could tell it in some of our churches down your way as a supply, or in evangelistic work." We would be glad to put any church in communication with Brother MacGregor, that may desire his services, or such church may address him at 318 North avenue, Allegheny City, Pa.

—Mrs. Alonzo J. Wagner writes us about an interesting occasion enjoyed by the San Francisco Bay Union of Auxiliaries to the C. W. B. M. The Berkeley auxiliary was a royal hostess. Among the items of interest were addresses by W. P. Bentley, late of Shanghai, China, Mrs. L. W. Sinclair, of Hamilton College, and the guest of honor, Miss Mary Graybiel, who has returned after twenty-three years of labor in India. She was presented with a silver loving-cup, Sister Darst, in her own inimitable way, handing it to her. It happened that the day was an anniversary one in Miss Graybiel's life, and also doubly dear as the date on which she had decided to devote herself to the work in India. The Bay union has assumed the suport of an orphan girl in that country. J. M. Hoffmann was among those present, and reported that the establishment of a Chinese mission in San Francisco is a certainty.

—We are glad to acknowledge a check for $10 from D. O. Smart, of Kansas City, to help in Brother Yeuell's meetings at Manchester, N. H., which Brother Smart, who is obligated in many other directions financially, prays may be a great success. We hope that many more readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will feel enough interest in this meeting to want to have a part in it, financially. New Hampshire is the only state in the Union where we have no representation. Bro. Herbert Yeuell, one of our most successful evangelists, a man used to dealing with the people of the east, has been selected to hold the campaign, and it will require perhaps $500 or more to accomplish what we wish to. The "Go" of Christ is just as imperative in the case of the little state of New Hampshire as in any foreign country. Brother Garrison has initiated this movement, and we trust that, with the many other obligations which bear so heavily upon him, he will not be required to stand for the chief part of this expense.

—There can be no doubt that legalism has ever been one of the subtlest and most dangerous foes of Christianity. A correspondent speaking of its universal prevalence in all religious bodies says: "What is needed is that some person who is strong enough shall come forth like one of the old Hebrew prophets and strike at the evil straight from the shoulder. A Paul, with his intense hatred of legalism and his deep insight into the plans and purposes of God respecting his creatures, is needed as in the early days when the Jerusalem Gospel was so seriously crippling the work of the Gospel of Christ. I should not like to see another denomination introduced but I should like to see a reform movement started that would tend to correct the evil in all the existent denominations. It seems to me that the way to this is through the introduction of a saner, nobler, loftier conception of God. We should then have saner notions regarding what he expects from us. And that is the crucial point in all religions. What does God expect from me? is the question of every earnest seeker after God. The answer is at hand: That you shall be conformed to the image of his Son. When we have attained to that conformity, God will be satisfied, and not before. And we have not the right attitude if we wish him to be content with anything in our character short of that."

—We regret to record the death of G. W. Waters, who passed away at Hope, Ark., from pneumonia, whither he had recently removed from Canton, Mo., where he was a senior elder in the church and for several years was president of the Board of Trustees of Christian University. He had filled his place at the Lord's table in a very impressive manner on the Sunday prior to his death, and was taken sick on the following morning. Col. Waters held prominent positions under the state of Missouri, having been a lecturer in the agricultural department of the university, and he had charge of the Missouri agricultural exhibits at all expositions since the time of the World's Fair at Chicago. He is survived by a widow and seven children, one of whom is Baxter Waters, the minister of our church at Duluth, Minn. The funeral services were conducted by Percy G. Cross, at Hope.

—We are glad to announce this week that there has been held the greatest evangelistic meeting of modern times held by a single church. Charles Reign Scoville, with his singer, DeLoss Smith, has been associated with T. W. Grafton and the church at Anderson, Ind., in a phenomenal revival, which has yielded 1,130 additions to the church there. The meeting held by these same evangelists at Paris, Ill., in the spring was the largest in results up to that time, but the conversions at Anderson have gone several hundreds beyond those at Paris. It is pleasant for us to be able to quote from an editorial in the "Daily News" of Anderson the following words: "This evangelist preaches the Bible, stands on the Bible and is of, for and by the Bible." That fact, and the intensity with which he urges the plea, are, from the human side, perhaps the chief reasons of Brother Scoville's success. Brother Harlow has had a wonderful meeting also at Portsmouth, O., with Brother Taubman, the number of additions reaching 612 in a six weeks' meeting. We had hoped to be able to give full reports of these meetings in our issue of this week, but they have failed to reach us. By the way, let us urge our brethren that we believe the religious newspaper should not be behind the daily press in publishing promptly news that is of importance. A great many of our preachers, especially, fail to recognize this fact. We try to avoid publishing as "news" in February or March a dedication, for example, that occurred in October!

—Just as the Editor of this paper was leaving Las Vegas, he called on one of his subscribers there and learned to his surprise and regret that the little band of Disciples of Christ in that city was being rent in twain over the use of an instrument in the worship and Sunday-school helps in the Sunday-school. Bro. O. D. Cheatham, who came there last autumn, found some members, and gathering them together they met in a hall and a Sunday-school was begun, and social meetings were held. A piano was used to aid in the music. A Brother Barker, who combines preaching with some secular business, living within reach, came and preached to them and straightway opposed the use of the instrument and Sunday-school literature. Not wishing to have any wrangling, Brother Cheatham, at the close of the service, asked those to remain who were interested in the future work of the church there. Nearly all remained, when it was decided to rent the Baptist church for an afternoon service for those who were unwilling to make the use of such helps as those mentioned above a condition of fellowship. The opposers of these so-called innovations will meet in the hall for the present. It is very sad to see such a spirit manifested by those who profess to be pleading for union. The Home Board should see to it at once that a wise evangelist be sent to this important field to hold a meeting and set in order the things that are wanting. We learn of others of this class of mistaken members who are sowing seeds of division in this territory.

EASTER GLORY!

A beautiful exposition of the ministries of the National Benevolent Association of the Christian Church. This service will be sent free to all Bible schools that will present it and send the offering to the National treasury for the care of the hundreds of helpless ones in our Hospitals, Old People's Homes and Orphanages. Jesus said, "Whatsoever ye do unto the least of these, even so ye do unto me." The Benevolent Association was the first of our church societies to adopt Easter as the time for offerings. Each of them has an undivided Day for missions. This Association should have at least one undivided Day for this Gospel of the Helping Hand. Order supplies at once.

Another Letter.

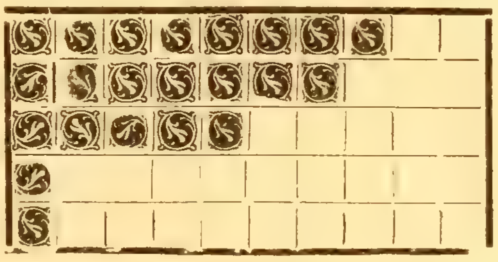
Our mail brings to us many touching and interesting letters, as well as many helpful remittances. We want you to read on of those letters and ask yourself,



"Have I any excuse for not assisting to save the lot at Hot Springs?"

"Union City, Ind., Jan. 29.—Dear Brother Kincaid: I received your letter a few days ago, which I read and reread before I folded it up; then I thought and thought, and prayed, asking God what to do. I am now past 73 years old, aged and alone in the world. I have only an income of $8 per month. My husband was an invalid for ten years, a preacher as long as he could labor. He went home to God on Aug. 13, 1904. My heart goes out for that work at Hot Springs. I have met with the little church, and I can see the great need of a house there. I will send you $1 and will try to raise more. . . I have assisted Ashley Johnson's School of Evangelists, aiding him to feed the boys. . . . May God bless you in your work.—Mrs. Thompson."

A dear old sister, 73 years old, living on an income of $8 per month, helping in all lines of mission work, and has money for these extra causes, and you have not done anything! Ask yoursel "Why?"

Missouri for Foreign Missions.

To the fervent Missouri Disciple, full of desire for the conquering of the nations for Christ Jesus our King, the fact that our state does not stand first in offerings for foreign missions is cause for sadness.

Yet it is well to know that we are moving in that direction, that we are nearer, much nearer, our rightful place than we ever have been in the past. The progress that we have made is proof that we can grow yet more; the fact that we are nearer the head of the line than we have ever been is evidence that we can lead if we will. Possibly these figures will give us some needful inspiration.

| | 1903-1904 | 1904-1905 | Gain. |
| Contributing churches | 246 | 297 | 51 |
| Contributing Bible schools | 359 | 378 | 19 |
| Church offerings | $7,893.50 | $9,608.93 | $1,715.43 |
| Bible school offerings | 5,161.09 | 6,280.04 | 1,118.95 |
| Y. P. S. C. E. offerings | 818.06 | 891.90 | 72.84 |
| Individual offerings | 1,967.00 | 6,032.86 | 4,065.86 |

Total gain over last year 51 churches, 19 Bible schools and $6,973.08, or, nearly 50 per cent gain in the amount given. This ought to fill us with courage. These figures reveal our possibilities. Many of our churches are putting the two offerings of March and June together and sending them both in the name of the Bible school. Thus while only 297 churches gave, as such, last year, 191 of the others sent offerings through the Bible school, making 488 that really sent offerings. Brethren, don't do this. Take the offering in March in the church, and make it as great as you can; take the offering in June in the Bible school, and let it be the greatest ever; but if you must combine the two in the taking, let the offering of the church be sent as such, so that the name of the congregation may not be omitted from the list.

I know it is going to be a task to swing Missouri to the front when Indiana, Ohio and Kentucky have the foreign board, with A. McLean, F. M. Rains and Stephen Corey, in their very midst; but we have the churches, we have the wealth and with the requisite consecration we can lead all the rest. Let the watchword be, "Every church enlisted, every member giving, for this holy cause."

T. A. Abbott.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Cincinnati Letter.

Hamilton county is now thoroughly organized for effective missionary work. The county missionary board, which consists of the ministers and a number of business men, will meet on the first Monday of each month.——Brother Milner, the new minister at Harrison, is starting in with his work very successfully. A meeting began there February 4. Frank Thomas, of New Salem, Ind., is the evangelist.——The Sunday-schools at Carthage and Camp Washington are in a contest, the attendance and offering being the basis. Camp Washington is ahead. The congregation at the latter place will begin a new building in April. C. J. Sebastian is minister.——Central Church, under the ministry of J. L. Hill, is going forward. There are additions almost every Lord's day.——We regret to lose from our midst W. F. Smith, who for four years has been with the church at Belvue, Ky. He has been a faithful member of our ministerial association all this time, and has done a good work at Belvue. He goes to Morehead. We pray for him the Father's richest blessings.——I was with E. K. Van Winkle in a meeting at Munger, O., recently. In seventeen days 23 were added to the congregation, and every department of the work strengthened. Brother Van Winkle is showing what can be done in the country churches by persistent work. C. C. Smith and George B. Ranshaw supplied at Lockland during the absence of the pastor.

Oregon.

Since last month's report three churches have sent in their offering for Oregon missions and have received credit as follows: Portland, First, $63.72; North Yamhill, $7.55; Sheridan, $9.35. Portland First should have credit for $39.88 more, for which District No. 6 is obligated and which is expected at any time.

With Brother Patterson as leader of song, we have just closed a meeting with the Sheridan Church, resulting in 17 accessions and the employment of Brother Patterson as pastor, until the Turner convention, when he may enter another field. The church found no difficulty in paying for the meeting and in raising the new pastor's salary.

Several larger meetings have been held during the month, which have been or will be reported by others. With men in the field like S. M. Martin, J. N. McConnell, T. S. Handsaker, F. E. Jones, B. B. Burton and N. H. Brooks, seconded by our missionary pastors, there is no reason why this should not be a year of large ingatherings for Christ in Oregon.

Some of the churches are doing very little for state missions and some nothing as yet; while others are doing nobly. It is the proportionate gift of the churches that determines the value of their offerings. One of our enthusiastic and devoted pastors says that he will do all he can to have his congregation lead in its proportionate gift to Oregon missions; and he is quite likely to realize his desire unless some other church shall make another and larger offering than has been sent in. Brother pastor, what do you say about it? What is your ambition in the matter or have you none? May the Lord help you to see the door of opportunity open before you and all of us.

Since last report, several churches have added to the amounts previously reported; and we have received $55.67 from boys and girls' rally day offering. Every school in Oregon should be enlisted in this great work. Matt. 20:28. F. E. Billington.

North Carolina.

Your correspondent was called to Spray, N. C., to assist Dr. B. T. Bitting, the minister there, in the funeral services of Sister Nettie J. Glenn, wife of J. R. Glenn, former minister at this place. Brother Glenn has the sympathy of his brethren in the loss of a devoted wife. His father, T. J. Glenn, residing at Stoneville, preaches for the churches at Stokesdale and Rosebud, and has recently organized another congregation near the Virginia line. They have their house of worship about roofed. The "Watch Tower," published at Greenville, N. C., in its issue of January 17, reports that on January 14, J. C. Dukes, a missionary Baptist, and for the past thirty years a minister in that faith in the Carolinas, took membership with the Christian church at Washington. His wife and daughter also joined, the daughter making the confession. A. B. Cunningham is the minister at Washington, coming a few months ago from my native soil, "The United States of Ohio," as a certain "Buckeye" puts it. Brother Cunningham and wife were surprised by the congregation recently on the occasion of the 25th anniversary of their marriage. We are rejoicing in the coming of a state evangelist in the person of W. G. Walker. There are many open doors and we wish for great blessings on his work. There are a number of district unions in our state. The Pamlico union met with the Oriental church. Eight churches reported. The Roanoke union had reports from 20 churches. Last year 47 churches in North Carolina, made offerings to our Foreign Missionary Society. There should be many more this year. J. A. Hopkins.

Kansas.

The meeting at Agra held by J. M. Lowe, resulted in a total of 57 additions—32 by primary obedience. It was the greatest meeting the town had ever seen. Brother Lowe began at Zeandale Feb. 14. He then goes to Tonganoxie; then to Stafford.——E. N. Phillips is making good headway in Oakland—20 added. The church is receiving great benefit from Brother Phillips' preaching. His next meeting will be at Lebo, whence he goes to Glasco.——N. A. Stull is in the opening days of a meeting at Perry. On account of sickness in his family Brother Stull has been kept out of the field for some weeks.——C. W. Cooper had a good meeting at Morrowville, with 7 added. Brother Cooper is just now in Nebraska for a meeting, but is open to dates in Kansas. He is all right.——We have not had the report of E. J. Wright's meeting at Delavan, but he never fails to do excellent work. If you want his services write us.——C. C. Atwood is in a meeting at Larkin, with 7 added.

I want to announce to our weak and pastorless churches that we have the names of about 30 of our pastors who have agreed to hold missionary protracted meetings. These meetings are to be accomplished by the church where the preacher is employed loaning him, under full salary, for a meeting at some needy point. Let us hear from all places wanting the assistance of the faithful men. In writing state the particulars concerning your church and community. Hurry up.

Our receipts are light this season of the year. Delinquent churches please take notice. W. S. Lowe.

Texas.

Winter is a season of quietude in Texas so far as evangelistic work is concerned. However, our organized work has not been permitted to lag. Some of the best district conventions in the history of the work have been held this winter. Our corresponding secretary, J. C. Mason, is ever watchful and never permits any part of the work to get behind.

There are a good many changes taking place among our preachers, as already announced in The Christian-Evangelist. B. B. Sanders, generally considered as the strongest of our Texas evangelists, has just held a meeting at Mineral Wells, which was, in many respects, remarkable. The church was made united and harmonious, and they have raised a sufficient sum to enable them to secure a minister of the very first rank.

The Central Church of Dallas has given $5,000 to the library fund of Texas Christian University. The Athens Church, of which I am pastor, has secured Mrs. Edith Steinbrook, of Brandon, Ia., as pastoral helper, and she will begin her duties March 1. We are also preparing for a great meeting in May, under the leadership of John W. Marshall. Within the past few months this church has succeeded in paying off the entire amount of its indebtedness, about $2,000, and we began the year with no outstanding obligations. W. O. Stephens.

Virginia.

R. E. Elmore, for five years the popular pastor at Tazewell, has begun work with the infant church at Portsmouth, Va.——W. H. Book has the sympathy of a host of Virginia friends in the death of Mrs. Book.——F. F. Bullard, who has been unable to preach for some time, was improving rapidly at last report. The professors and young ministers of Virginia Christian College have been filling the pulpit for him.——C. H. Poage has made a splendid record in his four months' work with the Radford churches.——The Petersburg church has let the contract for a new building.——A. J. Renforth, who was for seven years the successful pastor of the Hampton Church, has resigned and moved to his farm. He has accepted calls to some country churches. The ministers of Hampton in the regular meeting of the ministerial association protested against his leaving.——Virginia Christian College has 200 students enrolled this year. Recently Professor O. B. Sears, of Farmville, delivered his address on "The Makers of Virginia History," of which the students and faculty spoke very highly.——The Virginia Christian Missionary Society is planning vigorously for a Sunday-school offering for state missions in April.——H. D. Coffey, employed by V. C. M. S., recently closed a three weeks' meeting at Fairmount Church, in the suburbs of Richmond, in which 67 persons were added to the church. The new house has been dedicated. All the Richmond preachers, J. J. Haley, B. H. Melton, H. P. Atkins, and P. A. Cave took part, as did also C. B. Richards, of Petersburg, and a Baptist and a Methodist preacher of Fairmount. This is the culmination of about two years of faithful effort on the part of the pastor, H. W. Sublett. This is Brother Sublett's first pastorate, and on dedication day he was justly the happiest man in Richmond. This congregation is enthusiastic and zealous, and has nobly borne its part in this enterprise.

E. L. Powell at Richmond, Va.

We have just closed a meeting here, conducted by E. L. Powell, of Louisville, Ky., which will prove a blessing to this community for years to come. It was a great meeting in the truest sense of the word—great in the breaking down of denominational barriers, great in the inspiration imparted, great in the far-reaching good it has wrought. Crowded out of our own building, which accommodates about three hundred and fifty, we went by invitation on the third night to the Grove Avenue Baptist Church, which accommodates a thousand. This, too, was filled before the meeting ended. Before the coming of Brother Powell our Baptist brethren, learning of the audiences we anticipated, placed their magnificent church home at our disposal; and after his coming both pastor and people co-operated with us in truest fellowship. We owe a lasting debt of gratitude to Rev. J. B. Hawthorne and to his official board; and the strengthening of the ties which already bound us to his people is not the least of the blessings vouchsafed us. Brother Powell was at his best. "The royalty of human nature," a sermon to men only, was pronounced the greatest heard in many years in this community, and "What shall I do with Jesus?" the strongest of his many strong appeals. But every subject was timely. The treatment of all was vital. Every message was a call to the highest, holiest manhood. Every sermon was Christ. What we prayed for has been granted—a meeting which will be felt for years to come. Planting and watering have been done, and God has already shown the first fruits of his increase. Our work in Richmond prospers. West End was never in better condition. Larger work is before us. Under God, Brother Powell has opened to us its way.

Henry Pearce Atkins, Pastor.

A Woman Wanted.

Learn to Make Your Own Carpet Stretcher and Stretch Your Own Carpets with Ease.

Every housewife wants this simple, effective and costless device by which her carpets can be put down and stretched more easily and with less back-breaking hardships than she ever experienced before in stretching carpets. Scores of people who have used it say: "A person can stretch and tack more carpets in a given space of time, and do it more easily with this simple device, than with anything else invented." It is not like any other device known, and yet any man, woman or boy, who can handle a saw and hammer, can make one in ten minutes as well as a first-class carpenter. You have the material within easy reach, and it will not cost one in twenty anything at all. All the money derived from its sale is devoted to missions in the churches of Christ. A dime will pay for the full directions, postpaid.

What Sulphur Does

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and, mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for nedicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health; sulphur acts directly on the liver, and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and can not compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins, while experimenting with sulphur remedies, soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article and sold by druggists and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin diseases as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers" will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers, a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

Make It a Great Day.

March 4 is a holy day in our churches. On that day we should aim at the following:

1. Remind ourselves that a worthy offering can not be secured with a half mind, a half heart and with a lame endeavor. Intelligent, whole-souled effort only will tell.

2. To make an advance in the number of contributing churches. This we must do for our own self-respect, as well as for the cause we love.

3. To increase the number of churches reaching their full apportionment.

4. To increase the number of living link churches. We hope to close the year with 100 living link missionaries.

5. To increase the number of givers in each church, as well as the amount contributed. This is important.

6. To increase the number of those giving $5 or more. Ask for large amounts.

7. To pitch the whole subject of giving to missions on a higher scale. Ask some men in the church to support a missionary each. Ask others to give $100, and others $50, and still others $25, and so on.

8. To bring the churches to feel more and more that this is their chief work. This work is not an expediency. It is a positive command.

9. To raise at least $125,000 from the churches, as churches. This will insure $300,000 this year.

10. We should have $50,000 for a special building fund.

11. Make good the watchword, "Three hundred thousand dollars for foreign missions by Sept. 30, 1906."

12. Remind ourselves that a lack of the missionary spirit in the churches will prove the death of the special plea we make.

13. Devote the whole day, all the services, to world-wide missions.

14. Aim at careful preparation for every service; provide for missionary songs, missionary sermons, etc.

15. Remember that a missionary offering, like a mirror, reflects the real life and character of a church.

16. Remind ourselves that the difference between a good church and a poor one is measured by the size of its missionary offering.

17. This offering is a part of the "four years' campaign" leading up to the centennial in 1909.

Aim to surpass all previous records. Urge the highest motives in giving. Do not depend upon the impulse of the occasion for anything. Have the program of the whole service in mind and well matured before you start. Know exactly what you are going to do. Every detail should be arranged before. Every prayer and song and the sermon should focus upon the offering. Make the sermon short and to the point. Make it ring clear and strong for the evangelization of the whole wide world. Have no song immediately following the sermon. State the amount of the apportionment to the church. The deacons should be instructed before the hour. Each one should know what aisle he is to take. He should be in his place promptly; have plenty of envelopes and pencils in hand. Request every one in the church to take an envelope who has not already received one. Let all be ready to write their names on the envelope at the same time. Insist on the name being written. Do not be in a hurry. Make a special effort to have every one present give something. Keep in mind that this offering is a crisis, and that it requires all the skill and tact of the most resourceful preacher or leader. No man will succeed here unless he has a deep and vital interest himself.

A. McLean, President.

JAMES' PICTURE OF A PERFECT MAN: HOW MAY WE REALIZE IT OURSELVES?—Matt. 5:48; Jas. 3:1-18.

To many Hercules would be the personification of perfection, Solon to others. The apostolic ideal reckons little with the body or intellect, but requires a soul washed in Jesus' blood, that is a shrine for the Holy Spirit and whose conversation is much in heaven.

To the physician the tongue indicates physical health or disease; to the thoughtful it also makes known the turpitude or righteousness of the mind and heart. Sometimes the symptoms may be disguised, but anon it will tell true and make us known as we are to all.

In order to attain unto Jesus' ideal of perfection we must overcome that inconsistency witnessed in our voicing both blessing and cursing, living below our professions, prostrating ourselves at the foot of the cross but spurning those transgressing against us, singing of the sweet bye and bye but living only for the now and now.

A diplomatist said: "Words are given to conceal thoughts," but few thoughts are effective for either good or evil, save as they come to expression through language written or spoken, and such expression our dominant thoughts almost inevitably have. Let us so think and be that our most unguarded words as well as studied phraseology may reveal a heart that is pure and a soul unsullied.

James learned of his Master that the perfect man is he whose words are freighted with expressions of love to man and adoration to God and are true revelations of the heart of him. This love must be such as to restrain us from wronging our neighbor and to inspire us to help him; and the adoration must be of that nature that lifts us above sin and translates us into the likeness of God's dear Son.

Among the many unstudied proofs Jesus has given us of his coming down from the Father is his requisition that we be perfect even as our heavenly Father, with whom he was accustomed to be, is perfect. That is an unearthly, a purely Christly, ideal. While other great teachers are demonstrating the frailties of our nature and presenting apologies for our transgressions that are steps in the process of their commission, Jesus is pointing to the height of perfection, teaching that there is the natural habitat of us sons of God, and helping us up into the heavenly altitudes of physical, moral and spiritual excellence.

Literary genius has made countless attempts to present to its readers perfect characters. Shakspeare, Goethe, Dickens, Tennyson have all had their trial, but the only perfect character in all literature is Jesus of Nazareth as portrayed in the New Testament and by peasants and fishermen. There is only one possible explanation of this phenomenon. Admittedly these secularists created their characters and fell short of perfection. Had Matthew, Mark, Luke and John attempted to create a Christ they would have failed more signally than did these better trained writers. The conclusion that comes to us with resistless force is the sacred biographers did not create their Hero but simply portrayed one who actually lived and loved, served and died, among men and rose again, the son of Mary, the Son of God.

THE FIRST THINGS OF THE GOSPEL. —Acts 2:36-47.

The Gospel was complete when given. The first things are also the last things. Then it was sanctification and peace, service and sure reward, faith, hope and love; and as it was in the beginning so it will ever be, the beautiful, historical cycle is continuous, eternal.

Tender regard for the temporal welfare of one another was one of the first manifestations of Christian activity. There was a common purse in the early church to which all had access, according to their needs. May this fraternal love continue. Our affectionate brotherhood is one of the most universally understood proofs of God's brooding, helpful Fatherhood.

Proof texts: Impersonation of the Gospel, Luke 2:8-20, Jno. 3:14-17. The fundamentals of Paul's Gospel, 1 Cor. 15:1-8. Condition of its salvation: belief, Acts 10:43; repentance, Acts 2:37-48; confession, Matt. 10:32; Acts 8:37; baptism, Acts 16:25-35. Its fruitage: brotherly love Acts 4:32-35; exaltation of character, Gal. 5:22. Its consummation, Rev. 7:13-17; 22:1-7.

An immediate and uncontrollable desire to share the Gospel life with others is one of the guarantees of our own possession of it and by it. Andrew telleth his brother of the Messiah, and Philip straightway informed Nathanael; Pentecostal enthusiasm never languished in the primitive church, Barnabas gave his inheritance to missions, Peter ignored Jewish caste to preach to the Gentiles, Saul early heard the Macedonian cry, there were daily additions to those being saved. A mark of our identification with those disciples of sacred story is our zeal for the spread of the Gospel.

One of our first possessions on entering the Gospel kingdom is a sure hope of life and immortality. In Paul's earliest epistle is, "If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that are fallen asleep in Jesus will God bring with him." "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we that are alive, that are left, shall together with them be caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

Absolute obedience is the gateway into the blessedness of the Gospel. We must contemplate the life of Jesus and its results till we become as conscious of his divinity as of our own existence; we must repent of our sins with a sincerity attested by our renunciation of them and restitution for them so far as we have power; confession of him as Son of God and our Savior is required both by word and manner of life; and then we are not only to be baptized into the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, but are to arise from this watery grave to walk in a newness of life with him. All who would otherwise enter into the sacred privileges of the Gospel are as thieves and robbers and will be cast out disappointed.

Complete consecration unto the Lord upon entering the Gospel way to the skies is a prerequisite to usefulness and happiness therein. If our affections and ambitions are still in the world all we must do for atonement with God is irksome. As a laborer in his vineyard the tillage will seem greater than the fruitage; as a soldier of the cross the victory will appear too hard won by the long marches and mining; there will be no joy in temple priesthood with its manifestations of divine presence and human ecstasy because of altar vigils and sacred environment. Let us strive only for those goals angels have burnished and seek the honor of service Jesus has sanctified and we will find his yoke is easy, his burdens light, and our happiness complete.

A Noted Minister and Doctor of Atlanta, Ga., Has Hit on a New Idea.

Those who have long doubted whether there really is a permanent cure for catarrh will be glad to learn that a southern physician, Dr. J. W. Blosser, of Atlanta, Ga., has discovered a method whereby catarrh can be cured to the very last symptom without regard to climate or condition. So that there may be no misgivings about it, he will send a free sample to any man or woman without expecting payment. The regular price of the remedy is $1.00 for a box containing one month's treatment.

The Doctor's remedy is radically different from all others, and the results he has achieved seem to mark a new era in the scientific cure of catarrh, foul breath, hawking and spitting, stopped-up feeling in nose and throat, coughing spells, difficult breathing, catarrhal deafness, asthma, bronchitis and the many other symptoms of a bad case of catarrh.

If you wish to see for yourself what this remarkable remedy will do, send your name and address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., and you will receive the free package, and an illustrated book.

THE TONGUE AND THE TEMPER.—Matt. 5:33-48.

Memory Verses, 44, 45.

Golden Text.—Keep the door of my lips.—Psa. 141:3.

The lesson consists of certain verses from the Sermon on the Mount. These verses are not to be considered merely as sage injunctions in regard to the control of the tongue and the keeping of the temper. They are part of the unfolding of a new standard of morality and a new principle of life which Jesus was laying down at the beginning of the more systematic portion of his ministry. He had done a certain preliminary work of healing and teaching. He had gathered some followers and from them had chosen twelve for closer intimacy and special service. Now comes the Sermon on the Mount, in which he lays down distinctly, and in contrast to the accepted system of religion, the principles upon which his work was to be based.

John the Baptist had foretold the establishment of a new regime in religion under the leadership of the Messiah who was at hand. He had hailed Jesus as that Messiah. Jesus had shown both his power and his spirit. His personality had already begun its conquests. Now, in the presence of his new disciples, is the time for a fuller declaration of principles. In the Sermon on the Mount, whether it was delivered as a whole on any one occasion or collected and arranged by the historian from scattered sayings, is a systematic presentation of those principles which Jesus considered essential to the true Kingdom of God.

The Sermon on the Mount has been often analyzed. It does not easily lend itself to analysis, but the following arrangement of its contents indicates the significance of the sayings from the point of view above suggested:

Introduction. The New Kingdom of God.
  1. Qualifications and blessings of heirs of the kingdom (5:3-12).
  2. Responsibilities of heirs of the kingdom (5:13-16).
  3. Relation of the new regime to the old (5:17-19).

Thesis. The New Righteousness and the Kingdom (5:20).

I. The New Standard of Morality.
  1. Ethics of the heart (5:21-28).
  2. The necessity of a clean life (5:29-37).
  3. The law of love (5:38-48).

II. The New Practice of Religion.
  1. Humility (6:1-4).
  2. Prayer (6:5-15).
  3. Fasting (6:16-18).

III. The Place of Religion in Life (6:19-34).

IV. Principles and Maxims for the Conduct of Life.
  1. Avoid censoriousness (7:1-5).
  2. Right use of resources (7:6).
  3. Spiritual aggressiveness (7:7-11).
  4. The golden rule (7:12).
  5. The price of perfection (7:13, 14).
  6. The law of cause and effect (7:15-27).

Mark the above divisions in the text of the Sermon on the Mount in a copy of the New Testament and read it through, noting the divisions and how all the material bears on the one central theme—the establishment of a new and higher righteousness, including both rightness of heart and correctness of life as the requirement for entrance into the kingdom.

The verses chosen for the lesson contain some verses which illustrate a method of teaching employed by Jesus, which has always given trouble to literalists. "Resist not evil"; "turn the other cheek"; "let him have thy cloak also"; "give to him that asketh." Jesus was not laying down rules; he was stating a great principle. In the interest of emphasis and effectiveness, he overstated it, as one must to give full emphasis to a neglected truth. There is no use in whittling down these hard sayings on the theory that conditions have changed or that Jesus meant only half of what he said. He meant it all and he purposely and rightly put every ounce of energy into the statement of the duties of peaceableness and generosity. Those who draw from a literal interpretation of this the doctrine of absolute non-resistance, would do well to try to find out by actual count whether the children of Abraham really are "as the sands of the sea for multitude," according to the promise.

BLACK.

The funeral of G. T. Black, who died at Quanah, Texas, was held at the Lawrence Avenue Christian Church, Wichita, Kan., January 17. Brother Black's life of sixty-one years was one of untiring zeal in the cause of the Master. As a minister of the Gospel his work was peculiarly effective, both from the pulpit and in pastoral lines. While many may have excelled him as a preacher, none excelled in the purity and simplicity of the Christlike life. In a six-years' pastorate at Wichita the membership was increased from 43 to 300. His last pastorate was at Ardmore, I. T. After two years he resigned to become corresponding secretary of missions in the territory. This was the beginning of what he considered the sweetest, most Christlike work of his life. In this work he felt he must seek the most needy ones, so, in response to Matt. 26:36, he found the key to a great work for his Master—that of bringing light to those who for some transgression of law were in such utter darkness. Thus began his prison work in the Indian Territory. Day after day he and his wife visited these unfortunates in the various prisons, trying by patience, kindness and love to bring to these misguided ones something of what they had lost. When the frail body could no longer obey the mandates of the relentless will, at home he would pray for the wife who worked in his place. As a fruit of this work fifty-six were either brought to Christ or reclaimed. Of these he baptized eight at Fort Leavenworth. Such was the precious seed sown in this work, but perhaps none save he and his Maker knew of its magnitude nor the cost of its sowing. Finally upon the advice of his physician, he repaired to a little farm in northern Texas, hoping to benefit his health. The little church at Quanah hired him for full time. He preached four Sundays, two of them from his chair. Four confessed their Savior during this time. The day of his death he had felt better and was preparing for a drive when the summons came. A thought of his loved ones, as he murmured the name of his son, John, a quiver or two of the closing eyelids, the lifeless body fell back into loving arms and the soul was with its God. To his loved ones he left the priceless heritage of a life well spent, a spotless record and unsullied name, and to the world the blessing of a Christlike life.—A Friend.

LOWE.

Errett Lowe, eldest child of E. E. Lowe, died after one week's illness from diphtheria. I conducted a short funeral service. The interment was at Timewell, Ill.—R. H. Tanksley, Neodesha, Kan.

NOBLE.

Dave Noble died January 28, 1906. His daily life was the unselfish way of the Cross. When he awakes it will be in the glory of the kingdom of God.—S. E. Garrison, Shelbyville, Mo.

PRICE.

Sister S. B. Price was born at Chambersburg, Pike County, Ill., August 11, 1841; died January 19, 1906, at Concordia, Kan. She united with the Christian Church in 1867 and was married the following year. She will be greatly missed, both in church and family, for she was a noble Christian woman. Her body was laid to rest at Hollis, Kan., the writer officiating.—F. M. Brannic.

URHAMMER.

Orlena Urhammer, of Camargo, Ill., after a brief illness, leaving a father and mother to mourn. She was ready to do whatever there was for her to do.—J. A. Lytle, Urbana, Ill.

VAUGHN.

A. W. Vaughn was one of our best beloved deacons. He had been a Christian since his twelfth year. We will miss him.—Dan Trundle, Bizbee, Ariz.

WILKINS.

On the 27th day of December, 1905, Junius Wilkins, faithful and much loved servant of the Lord, was called to his reward. For three years he was pastor of the church at Mena, Ark. His work was successful and he stood high in the estimation of the church and the general public. The church was strengthened in numbers, the loan paid off, the building improved, additions made to the property and general advancement noted. A part of the last year he spent at Arkadelphia and surrounding churches; the last few months in the Texas mission work. Brother Wilkins was a man of more than ordinary culture, a good singer, good preacher and a good man. The following is from a Mena paper, where, with his family, he had lived for the last four years, and where he closed his life: "Always so gifted and tactful in time of trouble, knowing just the word to say, especially in the sick room, he was all sympathy and loving tenderness, both to the afflicted and sorrowing ones. None of us who listened to his preaching from Sunday to Sunday for nearly three years can ever forget the power of the Gospel as it was proclaimed to us by the promptings of his warm heart, filled with loving sympathy for every unblessed soul. His work was not without reward, for more than one hundred young people in this community, mostly young men as well as older ones, were led to Christ." He leaves a wife and son, both devoted members of the church. May God bless them in their bereavement.—E. C. Browning.

How My Boy Went Down.

It was not on the field of battle,
  It was not with a ship at sea,
But a fate far worse than either
  That stole him away from me.
'Twas the death in the tempting wine-cup
  That the reason and senses drown;
He drank the alluring poison,
  And thus my boy went down.

Down from the heights of manhood
  To the depths of disgrace and sin;
Down to a worthless being,
  From the hope of what might have been.
For the brand of a beast besotted
  He bartered his manhood's crown;
Through the gate of a sinful pleasure
  My poor, weak boy went down.

'Tis only the same old story
  That mothers so often tell,
With accents of infinite sadness,
  Like the tones of a funeral bell;
But I never thought, once, when I heard it,
  I should learn all its meaning myself;
I thought he'd be true to his mother,
  I thought he'd be true to himself.

But alas! for my hopes, all delusion!
  Alas! for his youthful pride!
Alas! who are safe when danger
  Is open on every side?
Oh, can nothing destroy this great evil?
  No bar in its pathway be thrown,
To save from the terrible maelstrom
  The thousands of boys going down?

The Bronze Vase.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

[Mrs. Revore, mother of the twins, Raymund and Rhoda, when dying tells them that there is a secret which may or may not have great influence upon their later lives. The secret is in a letter which is in a tin box in the bank of the town. The box is to be opened and the letter read only if either one of the twins makes the other very unhappy. The mother dies, and Raymund and Rhoda are left to the mercy of strangers, their mother's half brother in St. Louis having failed to answer repeated letters from Mrs. Revore. After a week's time, the new minister, "Brother Bellfield," tells the children that he will take them into his home.]

CHAPTER VII.

The children's week with Miss Glory had all but one day elapsed and Mrs. Omer had not yet gone to Kansas City to interview the orphan home officials. School had begun in Crawley, but Raymund and Rhoda were not sent, because everything was so unsettled. On the afternoon of this next-to-the-last day with the old maid, Miss Glory, once more trusting her brother to Raymund's care, had gone out to the Omer farm, to urge the "leader" to go at once to Kansas City. By this time Mr. Merlin Aggency was himself again, which, perhaps, is not saying very much, and, out in the shade of the hard maple, he was enjoying his pipe. The fence was painted and Wizzen was at work in his leisurely way at some other house. As the twins sat on the grass, looking rather wistfully at some school children who were going home with their book-satchels swinging—the girls noisily discussing the unfairness of some teacher's marking, and the boys trying to push each other off the sidewalk—a man came into the gate. Mr. Merlin Aggency immediately added him to Raymund and Rhoda, got "3," and resumed his pipe in all tranquillity.

The man was past middle age, his hair partly black and partly iron-gray. His face was clean shaven. It was long and thin, and they thought it decidedly homely. His arms, too, were long and awkward, and a good deal of wrist dangled uncuffed from well-worn coatsleeves. He wore spectacles which increased the solemnity of his visage. An old felt hat perched upon his rather long locks, and seemed out of place upon such a serious and unsprightly head. The children rose and Rhoda said timidly, "Miss Glory is not at home."

"I am sorry to hear it," said the stranger in a kind, sympathetic voice. "Are you little Rhoda?" and he smiled. They no longer thought him ugly—far from it. "And is this Raymund? I am glad to meet you, my boy, very glad." He shook the youth's hand heartily, and put his arm about the girl's shoulder, for just a moment.

"Oh," cried Rhoda prophetically, "you are Uncle William!"

"No, my dear," said the other, taking a hand of each and drawing them with him toward the split-bottom chair under the hard maple, upon which Mr. Merlin Aggency still sat enthroned, "I am the new preacher. I am Brother Bellfield. We have just moved to town. Will you introduce me to this gentleman?"

"Mr. Aggency," said Raymund, "this is the new preacher."

"Yes," said Mr. Merlin Aggency, "I've already counted him."

Raymund looked at Brother Bellfield significantly. "Yes, I understand," said the other, nodding. "I have been told." Then he added very pleasantly to the venerable accountant, "I am pleased to be counted by you, Mr. Aggency, and I trust I shall soon be counted among your friends."

Mr. Merlin Aggency was won by the charming appeal of the voice, though perhaps he did not gather the full force of the words. "Would you like to name a detail?" he asked, starting up hospitably. "Shall I get my ledgers?"

"Not now," said the minister. "Let us sit down, children." He gave the example by disposing his long, ungainly form upon the bluegrass. They were delighted to find that he did not despise to sit upon the ground. It seemed so sociable. They sat facing him. His smooth-shaven, long and lean face had become the face of a friend. Its solemnity was kindness. His spectacles were love-glasses. Even the long nose had the tip of comradeship. "I understand," he said, "that your week will be out here, to-morrow. What's to be done then?"

"I don't know," said Raymund, shaking his head dismally. "There isn't anybody at all—not anybody, Brother Bellfield—who wants us. Mrs. Omer will try to get us into an orphan home, but I don't know what will become of us."

"Why, I want you!" cried the minister heartily. "You come right over to my house, both of you, and stay till you get tired!"

"Oh, Brother Bellfield!" cried Rhoda. Then the tears came to her eyes. "Have you any children of your own?"

"Dear me, yes!" said the minister. "There's Jasper—he's married; and Morton, and Jack. More of them than there are of you. Jasper is staying with us just for the present, till he can look about him and find some business to go into; of course, his wife is with us, too, and their three little children—three of the prettiest little girls you ever saw! And my wife, you'll be delighted with her. I complete the family picture. I hope you'll like me, too.

"Nine," Mr. Merlin Aggency announced.

Brother Bellfield nodded toward the old man. "Yes, sir, nine," he said cheerfully. "But room for two more."

"Eleven," said the other, in his friendliest tone.

"Oh, how we would like it!" cried Rhoda.

"Then so should I!" said Brother Bellfield, heartily. "Now tell me something about yourselves."

"We are twins," said Raymund, "and twelve years old."

"It is not so very old," said Rhoda, "but we can do many things if you are not particular."

"I particular?' cried Brother Bellfield. "Don't insult me by such an insinuation!" He said it in such a comical way, and it was such a relief to the children to be treated as human beings, that they laughed aloud. And Mr. Merlin Aggency, sharing the general sense of hilarity and wishing to give expression to his feeling of happiness, shouted to the minister, "Do name a detail! Any detail, my dear sir, I care not what detail!" And the children only laughed the more.

"Now we are beginning to understand each other," said Brother Bellfield when the mirth had subsided. "Did you always live in Crawley?"

"We lived in St. Louis till we were five years old," said Raymund, "then we mover here. Father died when we were only three. Rhoda can remember him."

"He was so handsome," said Rhoda, "and gay. I remember how he used to throw me up high in the air."

"We were very poor," said Raymund. "Mother stayed in St. Louis two years after father died; she kept boarders. But we were very poor."

"Oh, we were so poor!" sighed Rhoda.

"We never got over it," said Raymund. "We came here, and mother sewed for a living. She made enough to pay the rent till she took sick, a year ago. Then she couldn't do one single thing. I carried milk for Mrs. Hulen—she kept two cows and sold to the neighbors—but she couldn't afford to pay me much just for doing that. And I had to go to school. I have to be educated, you know."

"Sure!" cried Brother Bellfield. "And who is Uncle William?"

"Mother's half-brother. He lived in St. Louis when we did, but he wouldn't do a thing for us. And since we got so bad off, here, we've written to him again and again, but he won't answer."

"Well," said Raymund, "we wouldn't ask him to help us when we lived in St. Louis."

"No," said Rhoda, "we could get along without him, then, though it was bad enough. But we can't get along now. Somebody must help us till we get a little bit older, you know."

"Sure!" said Brother Bellfield, again. "Well, we are moving, children; the carpets aren't down and everything is in a muddle, and there are so many of us that some have to stay out in the yard. But the yard's large enough for you both. Just as soon as Miss Glory comes, you can say good-bye to her, if you want to try a change of berth. I don't know when our things will be fixed up, for we have a man helping us who—his name is Wizzen."

"Oh, yes!" said Raymund.

"Oh," said Rhoda, "he is such a nice man!"

"So he intimated, himself," said Brother Bellfield. "But we find him rather slow. I think you two could be of help to us. Would you like to help out?"

"Oh!" ejaculated Rhoda, blissfully.

"That," Raymund explained, "is what we wanted to do for Miss Glory, but somehow we didn't know how."

"Miss Glory says," Rhoda explained, "that she doesn't understand children." She looked at the minister wistfully, her blue eyes opened wide. "But I don't know what there is to understand about me. I am not curious, and I know Raymund isn't."

"We think," said Raymund, "that Miss Glory has forgotten what she used to be like when she was young, and never being with other young people, there's no way for her to learn over again."

"She ought to live in my house," said Brother Bellfield. "There are people in it of all ages."

"Are you the oldest there, Brother Bellfield?"

"No, my sister lives with us—she will come just as soon as the house is ready. She is somewhat older than I am. She is an invalid."

"I will nurse her," said Rhoda.

"We are used to that," Raymund explained.

"Bless your hearts!" cried Brother Bellfield, "what little treasures I have found! Perhaps Miss Glory will not be willing to part with you, after all."

"Oh, I think she will!" said Rhoda, easily.

Subtle Influence.

BY LAURA DE LANY GARST.

There are at least two classes of people in the world. One class reminds one of the Scripture, "Eyes have they but they see not; ears have they but they hear not, neither do they understand." A good illustration of this class is found in the old farmer whose wife was seriously indisposed. Mental derangement was suspected and she was taken to an insane hospital for examination. She was retained as a fit subject for this environment. Her poor husband scratched his head and murmured, "I don't see where on earth she could 'a caught it! She hain't been out o' that kitchen for more 'n twenty-three years!"

The other class is peculiarly impressionable, quickly distinguishing cause from effect; the creator behind the creature. To this latter class belonged a beautiful woman in Brookline, Mass. Seeing at the home of a friend an exquisite bamboo basket, she inquired as to the maker. She was told a Japanese woman had made it. Quickly the thought of the women of the hermit nation, for this was before Commodore Perry had entered Yedo Bay, pressed in upon mind and heart. This woman whispered to closest friends her longing for the women of the Sunrise Kingdom, and a prayer circle was formed. Their prayers were very practical, for they laid aside their gifts and by the time a girls' school could be founded, these had gone beyond four thousand dollars. And who shall say these prayers have had nothing to do with the peculiar open-mindedness of the present Emperor of Japan? Truly indeed, "Great Japan," half a century ago a hermit nation, now rejoicing in phenomenal achievements. But her hospitals are crowded! Widows and orphans by the multiplied thousands are helpless! The northern provinces have been stricken with a rice famine!

Eager hands are stretching toward the Light. The Emperor, though not a Christian, has given ten thousand yen ($5,000 gold) for Y. M. C. A. work. The Russian cathedral at Port Arthur has been devoted by the government to Y. M. C. A. work. Furniture has been brought from the homes of Russian officers, pictures and pianos, to grace this building now put to such sacred and helpful uses. Japan's one language is a cry—a cry for God. China is looking to Japan. Japan looks to us. What will we say to Japan on March 4?

"She Hath Done What She Could."

One of the noblest helpers Dr. Barnardo ever had was Margaret Fisher, of Burton-on-Trent. She lived in one of the poorest houses in one of the poorest streets of that town. Not a likely place to find a great contributor surely! Socially, she had never risen beyond the position of a common washerwoman. Her income never exceeded a dollar and a half a week, yet with her own hands and those of poor helpers she gathered around her, she sent three hundred new garments every year for the children, and never less than ten pounds annually, which she collected in coppers from working men. She passed away to her reward not so very long since, her last words being, "I shall see the dear children in heaven, shan't I?"

After her death, the poor people of Burton-on-Trent erected a monument over her grave, on which was set forth her love and labors for Dr. Barnardo's children, the last inscription being, "Reader, go thou and do likewise."

In the Days of Witchcraft.

BY ROBERTA B. NELSON.

Shall I tell you how a baby—a mere baby—once saved a human life? It was in the days of witchcraft. The first case of so-called witchcraft in America occurred in 1688, at Boston.

The four children of a man named John Goodwin had quarreled with their laundress about some missing clothing. The woman became very angry and abusive, and the four girls, to "get even" with her, pretended to be bewitched by her. At one time they would stiffen their necks so hard that the joints could not be moved, and at another time, their necks were so flexible and supple that it seemed as though they had no bones. Then the girls would have violent convulsions, during which their jaws would snap like steel traps. Sometimes their limbs seemed entirely dislocated.

All this time they claimed that it was all caused by the old Irish woman, that she had bewitched them. These children stirred up such an excitement that, finally, the poor old woman was tried and hung as a witch. Then the four Goodwin children got well, but, after that, when one person wanted, for any reason, to be revenged upon another, she pretended to be bewitched, and had the person she disliked arrested and tried for witchcraft. One way by which a person was tried was to command her to repeat the Lord's prayer. If she could not repeat it, word for word, she was condemned and killed either by hanging or by burning while tied to a stake. Often the person accused was so frightened that she forgot all or a part of the Lord's prayer.

Another test was by swimming. The suspected witch would be put in a pond of water with her thumbs tied together, and her big toes tied together; then if she sank in the water, they said she was not a witch, but if she floated (which would often occur, if she were placed carefully on the surface of the pond) she was condemned to die as a witch.

There were in Boston two ministers (father and son) whom the people respected highly; these were Increase and Cotton Mather and they believed in witchcraft, probably because it was believed in in the Old World. So they did a great deal of harm by upholding in the New World the belief in witchcraft. And when, in 1692, Sir William Phipps arrived from England to be governor of the New England colony, he, also, upheld the doctrine of witchcraft. This, then, was the state of affairs at the time of my story.

One day Goodwife Alden sat spinning in her bright little sitting room. She was a cheery, kind-hearted, little woman ever ready to help those in need. She looked very happy as she sat in the sunshine, spinning and glancing frequently at her baby asleep in the tiny wooden cradle, a cradle which had come all the way across the sea.

Suddenly the door was opened and a woman, wild-eyed, trembling, and frantic with fear, rushed into the quiet room, "Oh, Goody, hide me, hide me!" she cried. "They say I am a witch and are looking for me now; quick, quick, Goody, hide me!"

Goodwife Alden was almost overcome with horror, but, in a second, she had gathered her wits together, and led the trembling woman into her little bed room which opened out of the sitting room. She hurried her into a closet which had a small, low door, but she knew the house would be searched if the poor woman's pursuers had seen her coming in that direction. It would, therefore, be useless to fasten the closet door; the best thing would be to conceal the fact that there was a closet in the room. Hastily getting a rope and a couple of pegs, she drove the pegs into the wall at opposite ends of the room, and tied the rope from one peg to the other; then, on the rope, she hung clothing, so as to hide the little door completely; but her clothing was scanty, and she added that of her husband and baby, even then the whole rope was not filled and she wanted it covered from end to end, so no one could peep around the clothing and see the closet door. There was an old chest which had come from England, and from it she pulled some old clothing which she added to that already on the line.

All this time she kept cautioning the woman in the closet to keep perfectly quiet, as she cast quick glances up the street to see if there were any one coming to search for the so-called witch. When the line of clothing completely covered the wall of the bed room, Goodwife Alden went back to her sitting room; as she entered it, her eyes fell upon her baby sleeping in his cradle and a new idea seized her.

Lifting the cradle gently so as not to awaken its little occupant she carried it into the bed room and set it on the floor, close against the hidden closet. Then she went again to the sitting room, feeling that she had done all that she possibly could do to save the poor hunted creature in the closet. Presently she heard the tramp of feet in the street outside; the door of her little house was unceremoniously opened, and six stalwart men entered—six men to find one poor, frightened little woman. The men wore the usual severe Puritan garb, and their solemn faces were the faces of bigoted men. The scene which met their gaze was a peaceful one; a sunny little room in which Goodwife Alden sat spinning and singing softly to herself. They could not guess how her heart was throbbing with fear.

One man spoke to her grimly, "Hast seen aught of Mistress Dorcas Gaul, Goodwife? She is known to be a witch, and we are in search of her; she was seen to come this way."

To avoid answering his question, Goodwife Alden began to exclaim and ask questions: "Was it possible that Mistress Dorcas was a witch? Who would have thought it? And who had cried out against' [accused] her?" Then, with a smile, she bade them search her house, if it so pleased them. The sitting room was so small that it did not take long to see that there was no one hidden in it, and then the six men searched the kitchen, and at last crowded into the bed room; they found this room very small and with but little furniture; one man looked beneath and behind the bed, but the search went no further, for the clatter of their boots woke the baby and it began to cry—not a feeble wail by any means—but a good, lusty screaming, loud and long. It was frightened at seeing all those strange, grim faces.

Goodwife Alden came from her spinning-wheel then and said in pretended anger, "There, now, you've wakened the baby with all your clatter!"

And how that baby did cry! It completely routed the intruders; not one of them dared go near it, and as for poking around the clothing which hung just back of the cradle, why, they never even thought of such a thing!

The six men trod fast on each other's heels in getting out of the room, and out of the house. Never was retreat so sudden! Once outside they realized that they had not searched the bed room at all, but contented themselves by thinking that as they could not enter the room without raising such a tempest, no one else could have done so, and that, therefore, the baby was in sole possession. Imagine the relief and thankfulness of Goodwife Alden and Mistress Dorcas! Never had baby cried so opportunely!

A few days later a ship sailed for England, and Mistress Dorcas sailed with her. In a few months the people of Salem and Boston began to feel alarmed at the way in which witchcraft increased, and grew horrified at the injustice of the trials. Then a gentleman of Boston who was "cried out against" took matters into his own hands. He had his accuser arrested for defamation and demanded damages to the amount of a thousand pounds. This bold proceeding did more than anything else to stop people from making charges of witchcraft. A little later Governor Phipps was recalled to England, and before he left, he set free all prisoners who were charged with witchcraft. From this time witches were heard of no more in New England.—The Interior.

A Club with a Moral.

In the city of Tegucigalpa, Honduras, is a club whose members seem to have a very good time. All of them have money enough to live in comfort, and even in luxury.

Preachers striving to turn men from their sins used to draw lurid pictures of the torments of the wicked. A bitter theologian of the middle ages is credited, perhaps unjustly, with the assertion that among the pleasures of the saved in heaven would be the spectacle of the torments of the damned in hell.

Any one who wishes to see that kind of a picture or who feels that he would take pleasure in such a spectacle, has but to visit that club in Tegucigalpa and attentively consider what he sees there and why its members are there.

Every man of them betrayed a financial trust, and has fled from the consequences of his guilt because he was afraid to face them and afraid to die. They know they can never go home, except into prison. The life they live, with all its luxury and gayety, is merely death in life. They are dead to shame, dead to honor, dead to all that makes life worth living. They have bartered everything for ashes and dust.

To the thoughtful man who contemplates that club in Tegucigalpa and considers why it exists, and why its members are there and belong to it, and the price they have paid for their death in life, it must indeed seem that he has a glimpse at the future punishment of lost souls. Most of the members are absconders from the United States.

He Thought He Stopped the Paper.

An acquaintance met Horace Greeley one day and said: "Mr. Greeley, I have stopped your paper."

"Have you?" said the editor. "Well, that's too bad." And he went his way.

The next morning Mr. Greeley met his subscriber again and said: "I thought you had stopped the 'Tribune'?"

"So I did."

"Then there must be some mistake," said Mr. Greeley, "for I just came from the office, and the presses were running and the business was going on the same as usual."

"Oh," ejaculated the subscriber, "I did not mean that I had stopped the paper; I stopped only my copy of it, because I did not like your editorials."

"Pshaw!" retorted Mr. Greeley. "It wasn't worth taking up my time to tell me such a trifle as that. My dear sir, if you expect to control the utterance of the 'Tribune' by the purchase of one copy a day, or if you think to find any newspaper or magazine worth reading that will never express convictions at right angles with your own, you are doomed to disappointment."

CATARRH IS VERY DANGEROUS

HOW CAN YOU REFUSE MY TRIAL OFFER?

THE WEEDS WILL CONTINUE TO GROW.

Ninety per cent of humanity are unconsciously breeding and nursing germs of diseases in their systems, like neglected gardens growing weeds instead of flowers. Your system is like a garden. It is the natural hot bed for breeding millions of germs of disease. Did you ever see a garden where all the weeds were destroyed one year but that they also made their appearance again next year. If you could destroy the seed of every weed in that garden this year, the air if nothing else, will carry more seeds in it next year.

Air is the agency that carries the germs of disease into the head and air passages and it must be the agency to remove them. Let the weeds grow in your garden and they will choke and ruin all that is good. Let the germs of disease continue to multiply in the air passages of your head, throat and lungs unmolested and you are doing far worse. You are destroying the system of a noble human being worth more to you than all the gardens in the world. YOU MUST KEEP ON WEEDING.

I am making a common sense offer to the reader of this paper. Carefully read it, ponder over it, then act quickly, confidently and be assured that you will be fairly and honestly dealt with.

I CAN CURE YOUR CATARRH

I WILL PROVE IT FREE!

Because I KNOW What My New and Wonderful Discovery Has Already Done for Hundreds—will Do for You—I will cheerfully and willingly send a full Treatment to you, Prepaid, Absolutely FREE, for TEN DAYS' TRIAL.

I offer what is really a blessing to sufferers from Catarrh—Head, Bronchial and Throat troubles.

A new and wonderful medical discovery that cures by striking right at the root and cause of the disease—by KILLING THE GERMS.

A CURE for YOU, no matter what bad shape you are in.

Now I do not ask you to take my word nor that of the cured hundreds. Instead, I want you to try this treatment, entirely at my personal risk, at my expense. Just say the word, and I will send the treatment to you, without pay or promise on your part. If, at the end of ten days treatment, you do not feel like a new being, if you do not honestly bless the day that you answered this advertisement, simply return the treatment to me. You are nothing out. Isn't that a fair and honorable offer? Your word decides it, I fully trust and believe you.

My afflicted friend, do not suffer longer from this cruel disease, Catarrh. Don't, drag out a miserable existence, a curse to yourself, a nuisance to those around you. Don't let down the bars to more dangerous disease. (CONSUMPTION MOST FREQUENTLY STARTS IN CATARRH.)

My new treatment is applied direct. No drugs to swallow; its application is a pleasure. As if by magic, it stops the hawking, spitting, sniffing and snuffing, relieves the maddening head noises; does away with the nauseating dropping of mucus into the throat, the queer, stuffy and oppressed feeling of the head; the paniful burning and smarting of the air passages. Soothes and heals the irritated membranes, and leaves the head CLEAR AS A BELL.

It is a folly to take medicine into the stomach to kill the germs of Catarrh in the head.

Air was the agency that carried the germs of disease there, and it must be the agency to remove them.

My treatment positively cures Catarrh, Asthma, Head Colds, Pains and Roaring in the Head, Bronchitis, Sore Throat, Headache, Partial Deafness, La Grippe, and all diseases of the air passages by a patented method of dry inhalation.

The treatment is easily carried with you; may be used anywhere, at any time.

Read what grateful persons write:

"Your treatment has done me more good in three days than all others I have used in a lifetime."—J. D. S. ATKINS, Durham, N. C.

"After using your treatment one week I have got my hearing back, which I thought was lost forever."—REV. ALBERT EGLI, Elgin, Ill.

"I have been using your Medicator three weeks and would not take $1,000 for it if I could not get another. I can sing again, something I have not done for two years."—MINNIE COLLINS, Hayner, Ala.

MY SPECIAL TRIAL OFFER.

If you will write me a mere Postal Card mentioning THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, I will mail you my new Spray Medicator with full treatment of Liquid Spray with complete directions for a quick home cure. If it gives perfect satisfaction aften ten days' trial, and you are pleased in every way, and wish to continue the treatment, send me $2.00. If you are not satisfied mail me back the Medicator which will cost only 12 cents postage and you still have your money.

It costs me $2.00 to place this treatment in your hands, and I have not one cent of profit except I receive future orders thru your influence as an agent, for which I am willing to pay you. I will deal fairly with you as I do not want your money unless benefited. WRITE THIS VERY DAY.

The E. J Worst Catarrh Treatment the only Successful Treatment for Catarrh Endorsed by the United States Health Report.

Read What They Say.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 13, 1900

We are constantly receiving letters from all over the country asking for information on the subject of Catarrh and the air passages of the head. We have been asked time and again to recommend some remedy which can be used with good results, for these diseases.

To benefit the public at large, and to answer their questions, we have recently commissioned our Board of Experts to investigate the subject of Catarrh and its cure, to find some remedy, which would successfully meet the conditions and be easy and simple of application. The report of the Board of Experts has been handed in, and as a result, we are pleased to recommend a treatment which is manufactured by the E. J. Worst M'f'g. Co., idea of Medicated air treatment very successfully, and has designed the neat and efficient little instrument which is becoming so well known as the E. J. Worst Catarrh Medicator. It conveys the true principle of forcing the medicated air as an agent into every air cavity of the head.

As a result of this investigation we are pleased to extend to E. J. Worst's Catarrh Treatment, the unqualified endorsement of the United States Health Reports.

TAKEN by itself, your life is certainly a very insignificant affair; but placed as you happen to be placed, in the kind of a universe which God has happened to make, your life becomes of infinite importance. For God has chosen to work out his designs, not in spite of you, but through you; and where you fail, he halts. Almighty God needs you. You are not your own, either to be insignificant or great; but you are in the service of that which is greater than yourself, and that service touches your life with its own greatness. It is as though you were a lighthouse-keeper set to do your duty on your bare rock. Can any life be more unpraised or insignificant? Why sit through the weary nights to keep your flame alive? Why not sleep on, all unobserved, and let your little light go out? Because it is not your light—that is the point. You are not its owner, you are its keeper. That is your name. You are a light-keeper. You are set there with this as your trust. The great design of the Power you serve takes you thus out of your insignificance.—Francis G. Peabody.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

RECENT GOOD BOOKS
BY DISCIPLES OF CHRIST

The Plea of the Disciples of Christ, by W. T. Moore. This concise, pointed and critical examination of the Plea of the Disciples of Christ should be put into the hands of all those really wishing to know and understand the truth as it is in Christ. It is in flexible cloth and has 150 pages. Sent postpaid, 30 cents.

The Victory of Faith, by E. L. Powell, is a book of twenty-one sermons and addresses from one of the most gifted men in our brotherhood, and is worthy a place in the study of every minister, Sunday-school teacher and Christian. These are the cream of their author, were delivered in many of the prominent pulpits and before many of the cultured audiences of the country and are now in this form to continue their good influence among men. Sold at the popular price, $1.00.

The Disciples of Christ, by Errett Gates, author of "The Early Relation and Separation of Baptists and Disciples." It is a popular edition of the history from the Campbells until now. It is a fit companion of books like Grafton's "Campbell," "Men of Yesterday," and such like, and like them is handsomely bound in silk cloth, but is held at the price, postpaid, $1.10.

Thoughts of Thirty Years, by F. D. Power, is meriting consideration by all those admiring the oratory and high thinking of F. D. Power. The book is issued by the Young People's Society of Washington, D. C., and for the purpose of celebrating the thirtieth anniversary of the author's pastorate, to offer a tribute of love and honor to the pastor, and to place in convenient form the very best he has said and written. You will want it for your study, for your minister and for your friend. $1.00.

The Plea and the Pioneers in Virginia, by Frederick A. Hodge, is a brief history of the origin of the Disciples of Christ in Virginia, of their struggles and progress in the Old Dominion. It also contains biographical sketches of the men who "prepared the way" for those now "entering in." Brother Hodge has done a good service, and many of the Disciples in the state, and many of their descendants, will be thankful for this permanent form of the many incidents they have heard their parents relate. $1.00.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

The justification of giving larger space than usual to tributes of readers from widely separated regions to The Christian-Evangelist is that a Christian-Evangelist in one hundred thousand homes will almost in itself be a guarantee of sublime achievements by our people assuring a centennial celebration in 1909 that will be one of the marvels of modern church history. This observation is shorn of the appearance of immodesty when we refer to the reports of our matchless evangelists, the inspirational articles of our able contributors, the patient continuance in well doing by thousands of our ministers, the zeal of hosts of Disciples for lives in harmony with the faith once for all delivered unto the saints, the missionary offerings of our churches, and the gifts of our philanthropists for Christian benevolence, with which each issue is richly freighted, as one chief source of its power. There are few services indeed our friends can render that will do more toward making splendid our centennial than helping each other place this paper in one hundred thousand homes during this first of the four years remaining of our first century. Hundreds are now engaged in this sacred employ. Reader, sanguinely, aggressively aid them and this first significant victory will soon be won!

"I will do what I can for The Christian-Evangelist, as it is the best way I can work for the Master."
Waterloo, Ind. Mrs. Edith Darbey.

"I am well pleased with your stand on federation, and other subjects. Yours, for the greatest good to the greatest number."
Wakefield, Neb. C. H. Kindig.

"I thank you for continuing my Christian-Evangelist without hearing from me. I can not do without this paper, occupying such a unique and helpful place in religious journalism." C. B. Land.

"I enclose $1.50 for my Christian Evangelist, and send my sincere thanks for the feast you send us every week. No one can appreciate it so much as those of us who are deprived of church privileges."
Rebecca Rea.

"Enclosed find $1.50 for my Christian-Evangelist and $1 for Brother Garrison's book on the 'Holy Spirit.' I want the book for myself. His position is correct and is certainly wholesome doctrine and very full of comfort." William Lowen.

"I have been a reader of The Christian-Evangelist almost since its infancy, and it seems to me improvement has always attended its pathway. Each year it grows better and its influence will be felt throughout the ages. Its firm stand on the vital questions which concern the religious world to-day has been a great inspiration to its readers. We do hope and pray the good Lord will spare the Editor's life yet many years and that he may see rich fruitage of his labors." Mrs. D. E. Cooper.

"If I could have The Christian-Evangelist in every family here my preaching would be made easier and better. Here is my hand to pull for the hundred thousand subscribers, battling for New Testament Christianity, praying for the glorious victory of that achievement." J. W. Ellis.

"The Christian-Evangelist grows in strength continually. It is a great and representative paper, and breathes a broad, catholic, and loving spirit I think an article stronger than has yet appeared to show how 'Federation Protects Denominationalism,' could be written on 'Federation the Death of Sectarianism,' or some such topic I wish I had the time to do it. As I recall, no defense has yet been made of Federation from that point of view."

Christian Churches' Centennial Hymn. 1809-1909.

BY EDWARD ORVILLE SHARPE.

The Prince of Life a banner gives
For glorious display,
And for his sake who loves and lives
We lift it up this day;
Lord, help unfurl it o'er the host
To lead the world and save the lost!

From out the mists of ages gone,
The Church of Christ, our Lord,
Comes forth, with faith's own armor on,
To wield his mighty sword
'Gainst every sin and cruel wrong
And wake the wondrous victor-song.

The days of battle are not done,
Our Captain leads the van,
And, where the right has not yet won,
He calls for every man
To bravely stand and falter not
Till all are saved whom he has bought.

The foes of Truth, within, without,
Would seek to do us harm—
Against the power of Pride and Doubt
God bares his mighty arm!
An hundred years are come and gone;
Dismiss thy fears, behold the Dawn!

Winchester, Ill.

The Christian-Evangelist and the Bible.

"May God, the Father, help and bless you, that you may continue to publish the best paper printed! I have read it for twenty-five years and words would fail me if I would tell the good it has done me. I am now a man of one book and one paper—my Bible and my Christian-Evangelist. I will do my best to increase the number of readers of the grand old messenger that comes to us week after week full of good things." W. S. Austin.

"Increasing Everywhere."

"The number of Easy Chair readers in Albion is increasing. This means that we are increasingly indebted to you."
Albion, Ill. Caspar C. Garrigues.

A Power for Unification.

"I think each succeeding Christian-Evangelist is better than the one before. I humbly pray that it may continue a power in the land for the uniting of true Christians, whatever their names may be."
Browns, Mo. S. H. Hagan.

A Defender of the Faith.

"Since the Chief has gone west in quest of health, I hope he may find it in carloads. If ever we needed him it is now. Was not the last issue of the ——————— awful? May God come to our refuge in this, our hour of need! Brother Kendrick is all right. Find subscriptions enclosed."
Solina, Kan. J. C. McArthur.

A "Good Physician."

"Enclosed find $1.50 for the best paper edited by the Disciples in the United States, and, I presume, in the world. May its Editor remain young and buoyant and in touch with this age, that Christian union may be accomplished in this generation. Although too busy to read all it contains, yet if I didn't get something from it each week I would feel that the chain of life was broken." J. A. Miller, M. D.

The Christian-Evangelist Unsectarian.

"The high, unsectarian spirit of The Christian-Evangelist in its articles on the general union movement in Christendom, as well as on all other positions of importance, makes it by far the voice of Christians who would be Christians only, and not Christian Christians, or Disciple Christians, or some other sort of sectarian-principle Christians. The sect spirit with us, as well as with all Christian bodies, must die dead before that union for which our Savior prayed can be fully and completely consummated. Continue to kill it all you can." J. W. Henry.

A True Mentor.

"For the enclosure send the paper to ———, one of our young men who has recently gone to take a course in the Moody Institute preparatory to entering the ministry. I am expecting you to keep him straight. The dear old Christian-Evangelist is more than ordinarily rich in spiritual things nowadays. The Lord bless the Editor in his absence, and the youth who occupies the big arm chair and wields the omnipotent scissors! But do not get obstreperous or the equally dear ——— will set you right! Between the two the world is safe—and so are 'we all,' and therefore let us rejoice and go forward." Charles Blanchard.

Current Events.

"No Trouble Imminent."

It is not easy to sift the truths in the newspaper reports of trouble in China. These have created wide-spread anxiety, and the indications certainly seem to point to great unrest among the Chinese population in certain quarters of the empire. We have already expressed the opinion that the agitation, such as it is, is not against the Protestant missionaries. In some quarters, no doubt, these may feel the effects of the general agitation, and in out-of-the-way stations there may be some real peril for all foreigners. The press at home will naturally make the most out of any incidents that may seem to lead to an outbreak. Missionaries themselves who are in this country on leave of absence are divided in their views, as many as six different opinions having been expressed by that many men at the Student Volunteer convention just concluded. But for the sake of the relatives and friends of our own missionaries who are urging our Foreign Christian Missionary Society to take very possible precaution for the safety of its missionaries, we may state that this has already been done, and some days ago they were cabled to protect themselves. The society has also written to every station, and under date of March 2 received the following cablegram from F. E. Meigs, Nanking, China: "No trouble imminent." We are glad to publish the following note, just received from the secretary of our Foreign Society:

> "Our missionaries in China are coolheaded, far-seeing, popular with the Chinese officials, and they may be trusted to take wise and prompt steps for the safety of themselves and their families and our Chinese brethren.
> "We are in close touch with the State Department of our government at Washington, which is fully advised and on the alert to furnish every possible protection. Friends may be assured that we are fully awake to the situation, and that we will do all we can to insure the safety of our splendid missionary body in the Celestial Empire.
> "We can but feel that much of the disturbed condition in this country is due to the press. They have probably made more of slight events than the circumstances warrant. As is well known, the press is very sensitive since the Boxer outbreak. F. M. Rains, Sec.

The President and the Coal Strike.

President Roosevelt has again done the courageous and unconventional thing in intervening to prevent a disastrous strike in the bituminous coal field. In spite of the failure of the recent conference between miners and operators, he has invited the contending parties to meet again on March 15. The outcome of this conference can not be easily predicted, but it is safe to say that the negotiations will be facilitated by the President's influence and by the disinclination of either party to antagonize his wishes in view of possible legislation on the subject. Three years ago the President's critics found grave cause for alarm in his intervention to settle the anthracite strike. It was unprecedented. It was a dangerous enlargement of the executive function. It was no part of the President's business to settle strikes. But the strike was settled. That was the main issue. The fact is, the settlement of a strike is the business of anybody who can do it. It is not a question of office, but of influence. The justification of the attempt lies in the success of it.

Speaker Henderson.

Col. David B. Henderson, former speaker of the House of Representatives, died Sunday, Feb. 25, at Dubuque, Ia. For several months he had been failing in both mind and body, as the result of a paralytic stroke. Colonel Henderson was born in Scotland in 1840, moved to Iowa in boyhood, and during his whole life was a resident of that state. He made a good military record in the civil war. For twenty years he represented his district in Congress, was generally popular and was particularly in demand as a speaker on all sorts of informal occasions. He served two terms as speaker of the House, succeeding Thomas B. Reed in that office. His service in this capacity did not add to his popularity. Like Reed, he became known as a "czar," and he contributed something toward upbuilding and maintaining the excessive power which the speaker wields in the House.

"The Jungle."

Seldom has any writer of reformatory fiction chosen a less savory theme than Upton Sinclair has selected for his novel, "The Jungle," which was published last week. The Jungle is the Chicago stockyards. A large part of the book is devoted to a description of the filthy and unsanitary conditions, the indifference to disease, and even to poison, and the unlawful practices which characterize the stockyards and the great packing-houses in their actual operations. The author is a socialist, and the hero of the story, a young Lithuanian immigrant who gets employment in one of the packing-houses and serves as the medium for conveying much of this information to the reader, ends by finding in socialism the only cure for the awful abuses of the beef trust. Mr. Sinclair claims to have obtained his information at first hand, and the publishers of the book, an entirely reputable firm, say that they made an independent investigation and satisfied themselves of the correctness of the statements before accepting the manuscript for publication. It is as nauseating as anything one can well imagine, but if it presents essential truth it has its justification and the grand jury ought to get promptly to work in packing-houses.

The Kaiser.

Kaiser Wilhelm and the Kaiserin have been celebrating their silver wedding. Such an anniversary of such a monarch would naturally be made the occasion of very elaborate festivities, but the Emperor had expressed the wish that the celebration be allowed to be merely a family affair, and that whatever sums his friends and subjects might have felt disposed to expend upon anniversary presents should be devoted to charity. This suggestion was adopted. The celebration was of a private nature, and one incident of it was the marriage of the Kaiser's second son, Eitel Friedrich, to the Duchess Sophie Charlotte of Oldenburg. Arrangements have been made for the erection and endowment of a number of hospitals and asylums in various parts of the empire in commemoration of the anniversary. And this furnishes occasion to say again, as we have said often before, that Emperor William is a remarkably able and, in most respects, admirable man. His peculiarities, his pride in his own brilliant versatility and his tremendous respect for his own monarchical dignity, have made him a shining mark for ridicule, but for all that he is to be reckoned among the greatest men that modern Europe has produced. Hoch der Kaiser!

The Smoot Case.

We are heartily in sympathy with every effort to protect the sanctity of the home and to combat the Mormon menace, but the sending of appeals and petitions to the Senate for the expulsion of Senator Smoot seems to us a wholly improper use of the right of petition. The Smoot case, if it is to be decided justly, must be decided upon a basis of fact, and upon that alone. No responsible person has charged Mr. Smoot with the practice of polygamy or bigamy. His case is, therefore, distinctly unlike that of Brigham H. Roberts, the Mormon representative, who was expelled from the House a few years ago. The charge against Mr. Smoot is that his office as one of the Board of Apostles of the Mormon Church renders him ipso facto a conspirator against the laws and government of the United States. The Senate Committee on Elections has taken a great deal of testimony on this point, and it is preparing to take still more. Most of us have our information on the subject chiefly from incomplete newspaper reports of the hearings of this committee. When the committee has collected all possible facts bearing on the case it will submit the matter to the Senate, and the Senate, acting as a jury, will pass judgment on Mr. Smoot. In such a case, it is no part of the jury's business to be guided by the preponderance of public opinion. It must decide according to the facts. In a murder trial public opinion is sometimes very strongly against the prisoner at the bar, and with good reason. But the cause of justice would not be served by bombarding the jury with petitions to convict.

Christian Union: A Historical Study.

I. THE APOSTOLIC AGE.

7. Was the Unity of the Early Church "Organic"? (Continued).

In our last article we reached the conclusion that there was no organic union among the churches of the apostolic age in the sense of a single, external ecclesiastical organization. The apostles were missionaries, rather than rulers, in the modern sense, and yet their influence was very great, no doubt, in settling controversies and in promoting and maintaining unity among the churches. In spite of the fact, however, that there was no ecclesiastical system with an authoritative head, it remains true, as we have before stated, that the Church of the apostolic age was undivided. It was one Church. Its unity consisted in the fact that each of the churches making up the one Church of God had the "one Lord, one faith and one baptism" (Ephesians 4:5). They had each the same foundation, the same creed, and the same initiatory ordinance. Jesus Christ was their one Leader and Lord; faith in him was the essential saving faith, and when this living faith manifested itself in the one baptism, the believer was admitted without question into the fellowship of the saved. The faith which united them was, in other words, a personal faith, and not the acceptance of any doctrinal statement. The evidence of this faith was the willingness to confess Christ with the mouth and to surrender to him in the act of baptism, which symbolized in its form the same truth which had been confessed with the mouth. So long as this state of things lasted there could be no such thing as rival sects, rival creeds and rival party leaders. A member in good standing in any one of the churches of the apostolic age would have been readily admitted into any other church, because they all together made up what Paul called the "body of Christ."

This leads us to the kind of organic unity which did exist, to some degree at least, in the apostolic age, and which exists to a perfect degree in the ideal Church of which Paul speaks. This conception of the Church is presented by Paul more fully in the twelfth chapter of First Corinthians. The Church is conceived of as the "body of Christ," while he is its head, and all Christians are regarded as members of that body. "For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of the body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ. For in one Spirit were we all baptized into one body, whether Jews or Greeks, whether bond or free; and were all made to drink of one Spirit" (1 Cor. 12:13). So completely is Christ identified with his Church in this passage that the term "Christ" seems to be used for the Church in the twelfth verse.

Of course, that is an ideal unity that has never yet been realized, but it is one toward which the Church must continue to approach as it becomes more and more an organ for the complete expression of the mind and will of Christ, and all its individual members, each according to the measure of his ability, shall fulfill his function in the divine organism. That term organism expresses perhaps just what many of us mean when we say we believe in organic union. It is sometimes held that an organism is a divine thing, while organization is human. The use of the two words, however, hardly justifies this broad distinction. "The universe is not a machine, but an organism, with an indwelling principle of life," says Prof. John Fiske, in his "Idea of God." "Christianity stands in organic connection with the Old Testament religion, both being parts of a gradually developing system," says Professor Fisher, in his "Beginnings of Christianity." An organism is defined by the Century Dictionary as: "A body exhibiting organization and organic life; a member of the animal or vegetable kingdom; an individual composed of a number of essential and mutually dependent parts, all of which partake of a common life"; "anything that is organized or organic." It will be seen from these statements and definitions that the meanings of the two terms glide into each other, and to some extent they seem to have a common meaning. There is this distinction, however: an organism always has life, and all its component parts share in that common life; an organization which may have resulted from life, may exist after the life has departed. The Church, as a divine organism, has manifested its life in a variety of organizations under different conditions, but there is no one external organization that embraces all the component parts of that divine organism which we call the Church, all of whose members share in a common life, even the life of God.

To return, then, to the question with which we began: Was the unity of the early Church organic? we reply:

1. It was not organic in the sense of being one external ecclesiastical organization, for no such organization existed.

2. It was an organic unity only in the sense that the various local churches and individual members were united to Christ and to each other by a common faith and a common life. It was a vital, not a mechanical, union.

And yet it was a visible union, in this, that all men could see by the faith and the practice, the life and the fellowship, of these various churches that they had one common Master, and had partaken of his life and were governed by his will. For the sake of avoiding confusion, it would perhaps be better to discard the term "organic" while we plead for a real, visible and manifested unity, which will show to the world our oneness in our divine Lord.

A Federation Catechism.

DEAR BROTHER GARRISON—Will you answer the following questions for my information?

(1) Does church federation mean to you no more than simple church co-operation as in union meetings, union temperance work and charities?

(2) Did the convention in New York in its results and discussions mean no more than co-operation?

(3) Are you in favor of not planting Christian churches in places where denominational bodies are numerous?

(4) Are you in favor of reviving denominational churches instead of planting Christian churches in the same field?

(5) Do you consider the different denominations branches of the Church of Christ?

(6) Do you consider the Disciples of Christ no more than a denomination or a branch of the church?

(7) Is it your conception that federation of the churches is to work as outlined in the Oregon plan in "Christian Standard" of February 17, under statement of the Principles of State Federation, Report of Sub-Committee?

(8) In a union meeting would Scoville, Harlow and Updike be allowed to preach as in their meetings in Christian churches? If not, why not?

(9) Have not the Christian churches all the truth that can be found in denominational churches?

These questions came before me for solution and I humbly request you to give them your time and answer them through your paper.

Faithfully yours,

Jackson, Miss. JAMES T. LAWSON.

Any careful reader of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for any length of time, it seems to us, should have been able to anticipate the Editor's answer to all these questions. And perhaps our querist is able to do so, but asks these questions for the benefit of others. So we reply to them in the order he has presented them.

1. Yes, it means co-operation in a much wider sense than our brother indicates; it means working together for the accomplishment of all common ends which can be done better by united than by separate action.

2. Yes, it meant vastly more than that. It meant a great forward movement toward Christian union, the putting away of our denominational rivalries and strifes, and the fulfillment of our Lord's prayer for the unity of his disciples. The method adopted and recommended to the churches was the manifestation at once of such unity as already exists by the agreement to co-operate as far as practicable under certain stipulated conditions, guaranteeing freedom of action on the part of the co-operating churches and restricting the Federal Council—the representative board through which the co-operation is effected—to legitimate ends.

3. Yes, we are in favor of planting churches, standing for unity on the New Testament basis of fellowship, wherever they are needed, and they may be, and often are, needed in towns where the churches are numerous enough, but where they are not doing the work that the church is designed to accomplish for a community. All the people ought to have the opportunity of belonging to the church of the living God, without wearing a party name or subscribing to a human creed. Our mission is to furnish that opportunity. Nevertheless, as between two places, one of which is well supplied with churches, and the other comparatively or wholly destitute, we should favor giving attention to the latter. And when it seems wise to enter a town already occupied, it should be done in no spirit of hostility to existing churches, but in the spirit of co-operation with them as far as possible in bringing about a better state of things. To ignore them or count them as enemies is contrary to the example and teaching of Christ and to the spirit of his religion.

4. Yes, if by "reviving" such churches is meant putting them on a union basis. Not otherwise. Each religious body co-operating will find enough weak churches of its own to strengthen and support without requiring any religious body to work contrary to its convictions of duty. The idea that church federation involves the unwilling service of any church, much less the sacrifice of conscience, is pure fiction. There is not a man among us, or in any other religious body, but would spurn any such idea of federation.

5. The word "branches" implies normal growth and development, as when we speak of the branches of a tree. We do not consider denominationalism to be a normal growth of the Church, but an abnormal development, resulting from certain historic conditions, and the imperfection of Christian life and knowledge, and hence destined to give place to "the unity of the Spirit." These various groups of Christians known as denominations are, however, parts of Christ's divided Church.

6. We believe the Disciples of Christ who rightly apprehend and teach the principles of our reformatory movement, occupy an undenominational position, that is, they occupy common ground upon which all Christians may unite, and were once united. They do not constitute "the Church of Christ," however, but are members of it. The Good Shepherd has other sheep not of our fold. It is possible, however, to occupy undenominational ground in a denominational or party spirit. In that respect many among us have erred.

7. No; see our editorial on that subject in a recent number of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. There will be erroneous ideas of federation, just as there are erroneous ideas of Christian union.

8. Perhaps not, on every subject, particularly as respects the meaning or action of baptism, for the obvious reason that all the co-operating churches do not see and practice alike on that question, and it would be unwise to turn aside to debate a mooted question in a union meeting, when there is so much truth we can preach and when there are so many other opportunities for teaching the people on this subject. It would be entirely acceptable, however, to urge the importance of baptism and to commend the study of the New Testament on this as on all other religious subjects. Is it not vastly worth while to co-operate with our religious neighbors in urging the claims of Christ to the faith and obedience of men and in bringing sinners to repentance, even though we may not deal with the action of baptism? The time is coming when we can sit down together as brothers and study that subject in the light of the New Testament.

9. No; if we are as humble and teachable as Christ would have us be, we can learn much from the different religious bodies that have developed certain phases of truth, perhaps, to which we have given little attention. Let us beware of thinking of ourselves more highly than we ought to think, and of supposing that we have learned all that is worth knowing.

Interesting Feature of Our Next Congress.

The committee on program for our next congress which meets at Indianapolis April 25-27 has introduced a new feature which is likely to prove of absorbing interest, both to Baptists and to Disciples of Christ throughout the country. Believing that there is no essential or vital difference, either in doctrine or polity, as these are held and taught by representative men among them, to prevent their complete fraternizing as sister Churches, the committee has sought to make this fact apparent by securing some of the ablest men in each body to discuss certain questions which would develop the real situation, so that any prejudices or misunderstandings of each other's position might be removed out of the way of a closer co-operation.

Accordingly Dr. E. Y. Mullins, President of the Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, and regarded by Baptists generally as one of the ablest men among the younger men of note in Baptist ranks, has agreed to treat this question: "What is the New Testament Teaching as to the Relation between Baptism and Remission of Sins and the New Birth?" This paper will be reviewed by Bro. W. F. Richardson, pastor of the First Christian Church, Kansas City, Mo., a man widely known and trusted because of his Christian character and his wise judgment on current Christian problems. Then Bro. J. J. Haley, pastor of the Seventh Street Christian Church, Richmond, Va., will give a paper on "What Obstacles, if Any, Exist in the Way of the Union of Baptists and Disciples?" This paper will be reviewed by Dr. Colby, a retired Baptist minister, at Dayton, O., nominated by leading Baptists for this task.

"The Baptist Argus," referring to this feature of the congress, says:

> "This is certainly interesting! We congratulate the Baptists upon the two men who will write from the Baptist standpoint. It is understood that this congress, like our Baptist congress, represents no body and in it no votes are taken. It is a free and fraternal platform, just such a place where such questions can be talked over. We are sure these discussions will attract wide attention."

We agree with "The Argus" that "these discussions will attract wide attention." We are solicitous only that the brethren, whether known as Baptists or Disciples, shall come together in no spirit of debate, as in the former times, but in the spirit of unity and of truth-seeking; not to show how far we are apart, but how near we are together.

Notes and Comments.

Leander Lane, of Santa Ana, Cal., sends us a clipping from a local paper giving a proposed basis of union for the three local churches of the town, namely, the Baptist, Congregational and Christian churches. This basis is said to have been unanimously agreed to by the committee, composed of two members of each church, but is not to become operative until it is approved by three-fourths of each of the churches. The basis, which is too long to quote in full, provides for the coming together of the three churches as one for worship "under a common pastorate," and for the transfer to the new organization of the three church properties. The new organization is to be known as "The United Church of Santa Ana." And yet, it is said that "this union is not to be a merger, involving the loss of denominational independence, but a federation or working organization for certain specific purposes, in which each body retains substantially its denominational character." And yet again, the basis provides that "no test of any kind shall be required other than the general acceptance of the life and teachings of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," etc., and "full liberty shall be accorded to each individual seeking membership with respect to the manner and form of baptism." This must mean terms of admission to the new organization. What is to become of the three churches that are to retain their "denominational character" is not stated. This is not federation, which has nothing to do with fixing terms of church membership, nor is it union, which would not perpetuate the three separate churches. It seems to us, if it be correctly reported, that it is in the first place impracticable, and in the second place that it involves a compromise which neither Baptists nor Disciples can afford to make. But we may not understand it correctly.

In one of our exchanges a brother pours out all kinds of anathemas against Chicago University. One of the ways in which he seeks to bring the university into contempt is by making fun of university degrees. To secure a degree legitimately in any of our universities requires hard, patient and earnest work—a thing that some good men do not understand at all. While a college or university degree is by no means everything that a man needs in order to attain the best equipment for life, it is certainly something that every sensible man may well covet, provided he has the grit and persistency of character to work honestly to secure it.

Editor's Easy Chair.

If one thinks of New Mexico as a country where all the tillable land has been occupied, and all the best opportunities for the investment of capital have already been utilized, he has only to visit the territory to find out his mistake. Just now the Eden that is attracting the attention of people in the central part of New Mexico, is the Estancia Valley, an "L" shaped basin about fifty miles long, north and south, being thirty miles wide at the north and sixty miles wide at the south. It is located on the east slope of the Manzano mountains and near the center of the territory. This valley reminds one of the rolling prairies of Illinois or Kansas, except that it is covered with the short gramma grass. It has recently been opened to settlement by the Sante Fe Central Railway, which, running from Sante Fe to Torrance on the south, passes through the center of this valley. By the courtesy of Mr. Frank Dibert, treasurer of the road, and of its management, we had the privilege of a trip through the valley as far as the young and thriving town of Estancia, the county seat of Torrance county—a county only nine months old. This young town on the prairie is just in the process of making. One large dry goods house is doing business, with the second story unfinished and without any roof! The hotels are doing a thriving business, though unfinished, and the whole country for miles around is being dotted with the cabins of the early settlers. One reason why this beautiful and fertile valley is just now the Mecca of so many settlers, aside from the railroad which makes it accessible to the rest of the world, is the discovery that water can be had by digging for it, a few feet, and in such quantities as to be available for irrigation puropses. At McIntosh, a new settlement on the railroad north of the town of Estancia, a number of Iowa and Missouri settlers are locating land and are going to try "dry farming," that is, depending on the rains, by a new process of farming known as "the Campbell System"—a scientific method of soil culture which is said to be proving a great blessing to semi-arid districts of the country.

We spent one night at the Valley Hotel in Estancia, and had the opportunity of meeting most of the "first families" of the place, through the courtesy of Mr. Dibert, who accompanied us. In the evening there was a social, in honor of Washington's birthday, held in the hotel where we were stopping, under the auspices of the Epworth League, which gave us an opportunity of seeing and hearing a number of the citizens. It was well attended and proved to be a very enjoyable affair. The Editor and the college president found themselves unexpectedly called on for speeches, the former on Washington, and the latter on Lincoln, two celebrated presidents whose anniversaries come in February. The ladies present might have been easily taken for a gathering of society young women from any of our cities, as many of them, no doubt, were but a short time ago. In the forenoon Mr. Dibert drove us back five miles toward Santa Fe and one mile from the railroad, to Antelope Springs, where we were to lunch and take the afternoon train back to Santa Fe. The Santa Fe Central Railway has a club house here, unoccupied at present, with wide porches and a hallway, and several large rooms, and generous fireplaces, where the railroad sometimes entertains guests. A large log house stands near by, in which live the two men who have charge of the place. In the rear of this, in a slight depression, is a large spring gushing out of the earth, over which a spring house is built. These outward things examined, we went inside, where the man cook had prepared a dinner that in its relish and adaptation to our hunger surpassed Delmonico's best. While partaking of this in front of a blazing log fire in the broad fireplace, a Columbia phonograph of the most approved pattern was put in motion, and we heard Mr. Alexander, of Torrey and Alexander fame, sing "O, Lord, Be Thou My Light," "Lead, Kindly Light," and a number of songs by other singers, religious and comic! And all this luxury out on the far-stretching prairie, where the eye can see only the billowy plains, but where, a few years hence, will be smiling homes, surrounded by orchards and farms. Such is the Estancian Valley to-day.

At this writing the Easy Chair is located temporarily at Albuquerque, a city of nearly 12,000, about 80 miles by rail southwest of Santa Fe. It is an altogether different town from the capital. That is 1,000 feet higher, ancient, historic and predominantly Mexican. This is a modern, American, up-to-date business place, having, however, the flavor of the ancient in its "Old Town" and its smaller Indian and Mexican population. It is situated in the Rio Grande River Valley, but mountain ranges lie to the east, northeast and northwest. It is a favorite health resort. A farmer living near by in the valley, at whose home we have visited, and who himself came here 25 years ago to die, as the doctors told him, but who still seems good for several years, assured us he had known people to come here "practically dead, and who only walked about to save funeral expenses," to get well in this wonderful climate. Take the western breeziness out of the statement and we can readily believe it. We reached here last Friday evening. We have a little church here of about 70 members, ministered to by one of Bethany's graduates, Bro. E. E. Crawford, who had telephoned us at Santa Fe to know when we would arrive that he might announce us to preach on the Lord's day. For some time the church has been meeting in a small hall in the Commercial Club building. The hall was packed on Lord's day, and the writer discoursed to them, and promised to remain over the following Lord's day, as the church is to enter its new building on that day. Brother Crawford, who came here over a year ago, partly for his health, is suffering from a severe cold, and we are glad to be able to relieve him. He is one of the many choice spirits whom Old Bethany has sent out to bless the world, and his wife is likeminded. We dined with them, and spent a delightful evening in their home last evening. We are hoping for an interesting service on Lord's day next, but Brother Crawford has warned us that his poor members have done all in their power. How they have done what they have is a mystery that has its only solution in the single-mindedness and consecration of their leader. They need $400 very badly, but it remains to be seen what can be done.

Speaking of the unity and devotedness of this band of Disciples, we are reminded that steps are being taken to establish a "Church of Christ" at Estancia, the young county seat of which we have spoken. We met their leader, Brother Williams, formerly from Missouri, but later from Kansas, who told us something of the peculiarities of this church. There are about 17 members, he told us, and the papers they are reading are, "The Firm Foundation," of Texas, and "The Primitive Christian," of Kansas. This tells the story. These papers have both run off on hobbies, and are wholly schismatic in their influence. Brother Williams impressed us as a good man, who has been led astray in his religious thinking by false leaders. "We must go by the Book," he said. "But where," we asked, "does the Book authorize you to put up barriers of fellowship where God has put none, such as your anti-organ and re-baptism practices?" "But, you see, brother," said he, "God is mighty particular. Look how, when the Jews introduced things in his worship which he had not authorized, he cut them right off." We urged, then, the greater danger of introducing new tests of fellowship and binding men where God has left them free. But it is no use. As long as "The Firm Foundation" is read, there will be legalists and division makers in the churches. Most of these members come from Texas, and from that section of the brotherhood there that follows that sort of leadership. How true is the saying, "Show me the religious paper you read, and I can tell what kind of a Christian you are"! Imperceptibly, readers will imbibe the spirit of their favorite paper—a fact which ought to make an editor get down on his knees before writing any article for his paper. Never in our history was the question, "What kind of religious journal shall our members read?" so important as it is to-day. It has in it the making or the marring of our future.

The Fundamental Need of Evangelism*

By J. M. Rudy

Throughout their history, our people have been an evangelistic people. They have recognized the obligation resting on them of saying to others what they believe God has said to them. They believed, and therefore spoke. This spirit of evangelism is essential not only in the saving of sinners, but it is essential to the stronger and richer life of the church itself. God's law in grace, as well as nature, is use or lose. It becomes true, therefore, that there is no better way of improving saints than to set them to the work of saving sinners. The church that truly lives in the Spirit and walks by the Spirit is a praying, pleading, seeking, saving church. It must be evangelistic. The tendency of human nature inside, as well as outside, the church, is toward a condition of moral and intellectual inertia. The church falls into routine methods; she becomes formal and stereotyped. Hence the basis of the apostolic exhortation: "I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God which is in thee." Enthusiasm dies out. Hence the reminder: "Be not drunken with wine, but be filled with the Spirit."

True, in this inert state the mill may be kept running; but there is no grist. The music that we hear is the sound of machinery, and this is not music. It is noise. Sermons are on growth, but nothing growing; on development, but nothing develops; the dissertations on evolution are long and logical, but nothing seems to "evolute." What meaneth this? The church has become passive. She has listened to the song of the worldly siren until her eyelids have become heavy. "She is not dead, but sleepeth."

Despite the earnestness and consecration of hundreds of pastors, this state of lethargy does overtake the churches. It is sometimes said, "Have a revival all the year round, make every Lord's day a Pentecost." To this none object, but this is ideal. You do not live your whole life on either a high or a low level. You have your mounts of transfiguration, and your valleys of humiliation. So with the church. We might wish it otherwise, but it is a "condition, not a theory, that we face."

The Evangelist.

What power now is to awaken the church from this sleep of a living death? Divine provision is made for all our moral and spiritual emergencies. There is a man sent from God; he fearlessly announces: "I am the voice of one crying in the very wilderness of your indifference." The symbolic tongue of fire on Pentecost becomes the real tongue of fervor, calling the church to a keener sense of her responsibility before God. This voice is the voice of the evangelist. In this presence it seems almost an impertinence to say that the evangelist is first and foremost a man. "It is very ridiculous," said Spurgeon, "to hear good truth from a bad man; it is like flour in a coal sack."

He is a solid man, not a soft man; he is a sensible man, not a silly man; he is a good man, not a goody-goody man. He is a positive man, but not a harsh man; he is a bold man, but not a blusterer. He is a man moved by a mighty sentiment, but he is not sentimental. He is a holy man, but he does not use holy names so freely and so flippantly that they become words without meaning. He is so pure in heart that he sees God. He can not be effective in preaching to others unless he often preaches to himself. The evangelist will often, therefore, interrogate his own heart as to the motive that moves him. "Why am I engaged in this kind of work rather than in some other? Why do I go to this field to labor and not to the other? Can I say with the apostle, 'I seek not yours, but you'? Is it the flock or the fleece that I am really after? Do I go where the darkness seems most dense, or where the lucre seems most abundant; is God calling me, or is gold luring me? Would I lecture, sell stocks or turn promoter if I could see more money in it? Have I joined the crowd that measures off the Gospel and sells it by the yard?" Our evangelist should go from the very presence of God—crying out from the depths of his soul: "Who is sufficient for these things?"

The man who has never wept over his own sins can scarcely hope to get others to weep over theirs. God must become real to ourselves before we can make him real to others. We reach the heart of man through the heart of God. The deathless hold of Jesus Christ upon the heart of man is accounted for only by the deathless hold of Jesus Christ upon the heart of God. A poor student of divinity can not be a good student of humanity. There has never been but one complete text book on psychology, and that is the Bible. The man who can open the Bible and see what is there can also open the human heart and see what is there.

But after saying this with reference to the evangelist's motive and equipment of heart, let me say a word with reference to his method. We can all pronounce a sound judgment upon the qualifications of the worker; but when it comes to the means to be used in doing the work, there is often room for difference of opinion. I make an earnest plea for allowing the consecrated evangelist the widest liberty. It is true that sometimes methods are employed that can be justified only on the hypothesis that "God moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform." We rule out at once all that savors of playing tricks; all that tends to create false excitement or what would compromise the dignity of the evangelist, or reflect upon the good name of the church. But what constitutes evangelistic dignity in the minds of some people? Bishop Wilberforce was once making merry with some young clerical friends, when a very learned, pious patriarch entered the room from the rear. The face of the bishop changed in an instant; he checked the mirth of his friends by saying, with deep seriousness: "Now, gentlemen, we'll have to behave ourselves for here comes a fool."

It is difficult for the evangelist to adjust himself to all classes. There are people whose claim to piety is that they say prayers in public, never in private; sing songs; occupy pews; dress well, and give less in a year to the church than it takes to supply their poodle dogs with bright collars. They tithe by giving one-tenth of what they ought to give, and as they drop that in the basket on Lord's day they muse: "When we asunder part, it gives me inward pain."

It is not at all likely that the evangelist who faces this crowd and reminds them that their hope of heaven can be measured by the possibility of a camel's crawling through the eye of a needle, will meet their idea of an evangelist. Again, what is the meaning, according to some people, of the church's having a good name in the community? If the evangelist urges the necessity of such liberality as will make it possible to carry the light and glory of God to the darkest places of earth; if he urges that no conversion is a conversion to Jesus Christ unless it commits a man's soul and silver to the world-wide mission of Jesus Christ, and then is officially reminded that the interests of the church demand that the simple Gospel be preached—can a church stand this and keep its good name?

Indeed, according to some people, the name of the church suffers seriously whenever you preach that God loved the whole world, and did not die on the cross for our town. They listen with deep reverence when you read, "Ye are the light of the world; ye are the salt of the earth," but when the evangelist turns the light on, or attempts to make application of the salt, then he is very likely to hear something about the church's standing in the community.

No church has good standing that stands. It has good standing only when it moves, and in moving it has no business to take the line of least resistance—this is tantamount to making an apology for the Gospel. It puts the church on the plane of the ordinary forces of the community and co-ordinates the Gospel with other agencies for social betterment. This means a surrender to the world. The church is an extraordinary agency and the Gospel is the power of God to believers. God can not use the man mightily to further his interests who spends his time trying to adjust himself to false standards or adapts himself to unspiritual situations. I plead, therefore, that the consecrated evangelist, in his efforts to break down false standards and to make spiritual situations, be given earnest prayers and hearty co-operation, rather than adverse criticisms and opposition.

*An address (slightly abbreviated) delivered at the international convention at San Francisco.

He comes into the community to do what manifestly can not be done without him. Let him work, therefore, in his own way, asking God to so fill him with the Holy Spirit that the evil spirits of unholy ambition, selfish desire, unwarranted presumption and false pride be exorcised forever. You say, evangelists, some of them, hurt the church, and it is often true, no doubt; but do not churches often hurt evangelists? About the only conception of spiritual growth that some people in many churches have is quantity. There is a great deal of difference between a big pile of material without form or order and a well constructed building; but no greater difference than between a hurried-up crowd and a church of the living God. Yet how often it happens that the church wants a big crowd baptized, and in order to meet this loud clamor for numbers, some evangelists go perilously near the point of sacrificing their self-respect. Do not lay all the blame on the evangelist. By becoming a sort of converting machine he feels that he is meeting a "long-felt want."

When churches emphasize quality more, evangelists will emphasize numbers less; the result will be greater meetings, even in point of numbers, than we have ever known. God is not slack concerning his promises. He still knows how to increase the loaves and fishes. God's arithmetic has a multiplication table. On the day of Pentecost 3,000 accepted Jesus as Lord, and there is not the slightest evidence of professional evangelism. We do not need occult powers, hypnotic gifts, mesmeric passes and a sheepskin from a college of mental therapeutics, together with all the superficial arts of the professional elocutionist, in order to turn men to the world's Savior.

People who make a start under such shallow influences are not converted, and it is only a question of time until most of them will come to feel that they were not stirred at a very deep level of their nature. Many of them can not claim the doubtful honor of ever becoming backsliders—since they never slid forward. A great teacher of elocution once went to hear the late Mr. Spurgeon preach. When he returned, his friends asked him about Mr. Spurgeon's elocution. "Elocution!" he exclaimed. "Spurgeon's elocution? Why, he has the Holy Spirit!"

If the means used by the evangelist have a tendency to reduce to the plane of the commonplace or ordinary that great experience of the soul that the New Testament calls conversion, then is the evangelist consciously or unconsciously playing into the hands of the enemy of souls. No greater danger ever confronts the church of Christ than receiving into its fellowship the unconverted. It is like hanging a weight to the limb of one who would run in a race. God will not hold him guiltless who builds into the Christian structure, the hay, the wood and the stubble. Can there be a trick more full of the subtlety of satan than to get the church, its ministers, and its evangelists, to become party to such acceptance of Jesus Christ on the part of men and women as amounts to a virtual rejection of him? About the best way to start the human soul downward is through a mere show of turning to the Lord. When Jesus is not accepted in what he represents himself to be—a Savior from sin—he is rejected; and the soul through a formal public act has taken a step downward instead of upward.

We are told that the Roman youth of noble family approaching years of maturity entered alone into a private apartment, amid the statues of the gods and eminent men. In that august and solemn presence he divested himself of the raiment of his boyhood and put on the manly toga. Then and there he made his vow to imitate the virtues of the great, to rival them in deeds of power, and to make for himself a name worthy of his kindred and ancestry.

How much more sacred and solemn when the human soul, without God and without hope, stands with its sin exposed in the presence of the sinless Savior! What an experience, when, "out of the nightmare of our sin-troubled sleep, we wake to stand for a moment in the awful presence of God, and reel and stagger, blinded and stricken like Paul, beneath the awful sense of his presence, and then feel the scales drop from our eyes as we find ourselves in Christ, sons of our Father."

The outward aspects of Paul's conversion were peculiar to himself, his age, and the purpose of God in calling him; but the inner change that lifted him above his former life, with its sectarian zeal, and its blind bigotry, is common to all true conversions. As Canon Gore has said: "Conversion is a fundamental reconstruction of the moral being on a new basis—that basis the person of Christ himself."

A most manifest weakness in present-day evangelism, not in our evangelism only, but in the general evangelism of the day, is the giving of too much mechanical assistance to those who are disposed to enter the kingdom of God, and then making such assistance take the place of the soul's own voluntary act of complete surrender to God.

With some it is the signing of a card, the showing of a hand, the expression of a mere desire to go to heaven, or to be saved, or to live a better life. Among us, as a people, it has assumed the conventional form of the preacher's taking the confession as a question in his own mouth, and the candidate's making an affirmative reply—often very feeble. We seem to forget all our "Thus saith the Lord" very readily. About the best way to emasculate Peter's great confession is to imagine Jesus taking him by the hand and saying, "Peter, dost thou believe that I am the Christ, the Son of God?" When it is so conceived the spontaneity and voluntariness which should characterize every confession are

A PERFECT HAND.

How Its Appearance Became Familiar to the Public.

The story of how probably the most perfect feminine hand in America became known to the people is rather interesting.

As the story goes the possessor of the hand was with some friends in a photographer's one day, and while talking, held up a piece of candy. The pose of the hand, with its perfect contour and faultless shape, attracted the attention of the artist who proposed to photograph it. The result was a beautiful picture kept in the family until one day, after reading a letter from some one inquiring as to who wrote the Postum and Grape-Nuts advertisements, Mr. Post said to his wife, "We receive so many inquiries of this kind, that it is evident some people are curious to know, suppose we let the advertising department have that picture of your hand to print and name it 'A Helping Hand.'" (Mrs. Post has assisted him in preparation of some of the most famous advertisements.)

There was a natural shrinking from the publicity, but with an agreement that no name would accompany the picture its use was granted.

The case was presented in the light of extending a welcoming hand to the friends of Postum and Grape-Nuts, so the picture appeared on the back covers of many of the January and February magazines and became known to millions of people.

Many artists have commented upon it as probably the most perfect hand in the world.

The advertising dept. of the Postum Co. did not seem able to resist the temptation to enlist the curiosity of the public, by refraining from giving the name of the owner when the picture appeared, but stated that the name would be given later in one of the newspaper announcements, thus seeking to induce the readers to look for and read the forthcoming advertisements to learn the name of the owner.

This combination of art and commerce and the multitude of inquiries furnishes an excellent illustration of the interest the public takes in the personal and family life of large manufacturers whose names become household words through extensive and continuous announcements in newspapers and periodicals.

The Elderburg Association

[Brother Schoolmaster's Notes: with emendations, annotations, condensations, and interpolations by Brother Editor.]

CHAPTER I.

How the Association Happened.

It was not an organization or combination designed for the restraint of trade; it did not seek to control any market by limiting any kind of production; it proposed no boycotts and threatened no walkouts; nor did it seek to control legislation in the town council, the general assembly or the Congress of the United States. Stranger still, it professed no mission to preach any new gospel, religious, social, economic. It made no announcement at any time of any special grievance which affected it as a society: each individual member cherished in his own breast, doubtless, some very poignant private griefs, but as each heart knew its own bitterness only, no individual dissatisfaction with things terrestrial could properly be called an asset of the corporation. One common calamity had overtaken them all, indeed, and it formed, as will be seen, a tie to bind them together, but the sorrows which grew out of that were too deep and too sacred to be aired in the newspapers or proclaimed from the stump or the lecture platform. The Elderburg Ex-Preachers' Association may be said to have been symptomatic in its character. We might even call it a symptom and let it go at that; symptom of that strange mania for organization which affects (or afflicts) this generation.

For it is characteristic of the age that whenever two or three persons with similar hopes, interests, sympathies, theories, diseases, lunacies, temperaments, tendencies, or misfortunes are gathered together they are forthwith possessed of a strange, seemingly irresistible impulse to organize some sort of association expressive, more or less, of the particular trait, interest or calamity held in common; so that the man of the twentieth century is prone to organize, as the sparks fly upward (Job. 5:7). The twelve ex-preachers of Elderburg, having this one state in common that whereas they once preached they now preach no more, were as helpless as Mr. Rogers or Mr. Rockefeller to stem the resistless set of human tide toward organization. Thus it happened that one day, when leaves were young, before the lilacs bloomed, almost with one accord and with one voice, they came together, under the third locust tree west of the east wall of the court house inclosure, not far from the southeast corner, and forty feet due south of the public well; and, then and there being, they organized the Elderburg Ex-Preachers' Association. As no minutes were kept of this and many subsequent meetings, the exact date of the organization is not of record and can not now be certainly known—especially as the surviving members are not agreed as to that. Thus it happens that the Elderburg Ex-Preachers' Association, the Freemasons and the Baptists have this one mystery in common: the exact point in history when each began to exist must forever remain a matter of some doubt—and some debate. One advantage remains with the E. E-P. A.: the place of its birth can be positively identified.

I have always admired the naive simplicity of Lewis Carroll's explanation of the absence of birds and clouds on that celebrated occasion when the walrus, the carpenter, and the oysters foregathered under the midnight sun.

> "You could not see a cloud—because
> No cloud was in the sky;
> No birds were flying overhead:
> There were no birds to fly."

A very simple and very sufficient explanation of the facts, it seems to me. In like simple and sufficient manner I explain that the E. E-P. A. had no secretary, at first, to record its proceedings, because there were not, at that time, any proceedings to record—not what might properly be called proceedings; it had no treasurer because it had no treasures; it had no hall in which to meet, because there was no hall to have—available for a society without treasures.

The meeting place was the court house park, in that part of it already—or as Brother Lawyer would say, hereinbefore—described. Lest it be said or suspected that this combination of ex-preachers had come into unlawful possession of a public utility, I make haste to say they never pretended to have title in fee, lease, copyright, or ninety-nine years' franchise to, or in, this part of the public domain. It gradually came about that the fine sympathy which the noble American people never fail to bestow upon the sick, the shipwrecked, the bankrupt, and the condemned-to-be-hung was tacitly and without ostentation granted to the members of the association. The people of the town and surrounding country, quick to recognize fallen greatness and prompt to keep away from it, allowed the little company to possess that little patch of shaded blue grass in peace.

For there is something about the bearing, the facial expression, the—shall I call it the altogether?—of the ex-preacher that appeals to the forbearance of good men and good angels. As Bonnivard's chains left their marks upon his flesh to his dying day, so the long-skirted black coat and white tie of the preacher leave their marks on his individuality to the morning of the resurrection. Let a man once acquire the habit of wearing these, as external marks of the ministerial office, let him accustom himself to the moods that go with them, and henceforth he shall not be as other men. For the coat and the tie will get into his blood somehow, and they will influence his bearing, manners, and conversation; and though he lay them aside so that they are no more visible to any eye of flesh, yet, because they are evermore spiritually present with him, they shall be spiritually discerned even by the chance wayfarer. Rosalind, though clad in the most mannish of male habiliments, could not rid herself of the consciousness that she had not a doublet and hose in her disposition; but the ex-preacher, though he attire himself, like Mose, in a thunder-and-lightning coat and gosling-green waistcoat, can never rid himself of the consciousness that he has a black frock-coat and a limp white tie in his disposition. Let him be suddenly summoned back to this world after his death, at the hest of some spirit medium, and it will be seen that he has unconsciously materialized that garb: just as the King of Denmark materialized in his armor instead of his shroud.

Of the ex-preacher, as of those riven cliffs so touchingly described by Coleridge, it may be said that:

> "Neither heat, nor frost, nor thunder,
> Shall wholly do away, I ween,
> The marks of that which once hath been."

Personally, I am always conscious of some mental disturbance when I meet him in the road. (If, on some muddy highway, I were to meet an angel with his wings clipped and his plumage soiled, the feeling would be, I imagine, much the same in kind, if not in degree; allowing for the infrequency of the angelic encounter and the frequency of the other.)

I bow to him, sadly, regretfully; he goes on his way—down the street—around the corner. Yet I am not rid of him, in spite of the fact that he has turned the corner. Somewhow he disturbs my peace. My soul is troubled, perplexed, vexed with questions concerning him: "What was the particular fault, mistake, or misfortune, which brought him down from his pulpit? Why is this ex-preacher not a preacher extant? Is it entirely his fault? Or is it, in part, the fault of another, or others? Is he now, in his present character of extinguished torch, merely an unrelated fact—a sort of insulated phenomenon in this great universe? Or is he an outward and visible sign of conditions for which I may in some wise be responsible? Who did sin, this man or his (spiritual) ancestors, or his contemporaneous brethren? Or did he and they all sin? Did anybody sin?"

Time of meeting for the society: any afternoon, as it might happen, Sundays excepted, between the last cold day in spring and the first cold day in autumn. Hours, from 2 o'clock p. m. till supper time. No iron-clad law-of-the-Medes-and-Persians regulations about hours and order of business.

I could name the members all, from memory. I know the name, and could describe the personal appearance of each, and could give the maiden name of his wife. Moreover, I have the roster of the members in my possession. I prefer, however, in what I have yet to say further of them and of their proceedings, to designate them by their employments since they became ex-preachers. There were:

Brother Sewing Machine Agent, Brother County Clerk, Brother Life Insurance Agent, Brother Schoolmaster, Brother Notary and Justice of the Peace, Brother Paper Hanger, Brother Surveyor, Brother Editor, Brother Piano Tuner, Brother Lawyer, Brother Doctor, Brother Blacksmith.

How did it happen that there were twelve ex-preachers in Elderburg?

It seems to me that we have here two questions disguised as one. If the inquiry goes to the reasons why these twelve persons, once preachers of the Gospel, were now ex-preachers, I cordiallly invite the querist to read carefully the subjoined minutes of certain proceedings of the E-P. (Ex-Preachers') Association. If you merely inquire why these or any other men, being free to choose, chose Elderburg as their place of residence, the question implies that you live in Boomdale and are, therefore, envious of Elderburg, or it implies that you live somewhere else and are culpably ignorant of the attractions, moral, intellectual, social and commercial, of the metropolis of Blue Grass county; in either case you can understand, I hope, that I have no time to fool away with you.

It was along toward the close of August that the proceedings I am now about to record were instituted. The secretary, whose notes of those transactions I have in my possession, does not remember the exact date, but it was, he is sure, at or near the zenith of the watermelon season. It was a hot, dry, dusty time. The blue grass on the court house lot had grown very rank that year, and was now lying all matted and tangled, a thick, soft, cool carpet upon the warm earth, the upper side of the mass being scorched brown, the under side showing a pale, tender green, most refreshing to the eye; it had never, thank goodness, been mangled by a lawn mower. The roads leading in from the country were white and hot and dusty, and whenever a farmer drove into town he rode enveloped in a dust-whirlwind of his own making. Not many farmers came in, however, for Elderburg now enjoyed the well earned repose which comes to it between its biennial strenuosities: the spring and summer rush was over, and the fall and winter rush had not begun. The dust clouds seldom intruded into the square. Clerks and delivery boys, having now little else to do, watered the streets gently with garden hose. In the late afternoons, where the shade was good, merchants and professional men, straw-hatted, shirt-sleeved, would bring out chairs and sit in the street, with their feet on curbstones; and there they told stories, jested, argued, and debated until the going down of the sun. Up in the court house yard, under the shade of the locusts, the E. E-P. A. held solemn conclave, sitting on park seats or on chairs brought from the offices, speaking of many things, while the jar-flies and katydids shrilled in the tree tops and while the crickets chirped in the grass.

On one of these long, hot, drowsy afternoons, some one—Brother Doctor, I think it was—suggested a live topic for the meeting—a definite intellectual and moral program which would certainly edify those present, and might even be full of warning and instruction for others. His idea was that the association ought to spend some time each day in the discussion of the topic. "Why we are where we are; or, What is the matter with us?" He said, in part:

"This association, in the fact of its existence, and in its component parts, is a remarkable phenomenon—a portent, perhaps. I hold that whoever gets wrecked on this bank and shoal of time owes it to humanity to indicate by chart, buoy or lighthouse, the particular place where he came to grief; and he ought also to set down on paper, for the benefit of other mariners, what particular fault of navigation, or what particular current, eddy or meteoric complication it was that contributed to his calamity. Most men do take themselves too seriously, but the members of this association, being what they are, naturally tend to the opposite extreme; mentally garbed in sackcloth, and gritty with ashes, they are apt to consider themselves as of no account and of no interest to anybody. Yet nothing is above or below the range of scientific investigation. Mr. Darwin would examine with equal interest and equal enthusiasm the vertebra of the iguanodon or the offhand leg of—of almost any bug you can name. Such and so comprehensive is the scope of the philosophic mind. Let us, my brothers in misfortune, beware of overmuch humility."

Brother Doctor's suggestion was received with a degree of enthusiasm which, considering the season, the state of the thermometer and the barometric conditions then prevailing in the Mississippi and Missouri valleys, was certainly all he had any reason to expect.

Arrangements for carrying his idea into effect were instantly made. Brother Notary-and J-P. was appointed to preside at all discussions. Brother Lawyer was appointed official Critic and Reviewer.

Brother Schoolmaster who, having some skill in shorthand, was made secretary, says in his notes that Brother Lawyer desired to be elected circuit judge in that district (was elected later) and it was felt that the office of critic and reviewer would afford him useful practice in the exercise of judicial functions; that some of the members afterward regretted the appointment, because Brother Lawyer did not seem able to distinguish, quite, between impartiality and brutality.

Federation and Missionary Freedom.

By Errett Gates.

One of the strong objections that is urged against church federation by those who oppose it, is that it would prevent the establishment of churches in new territory by the Disciples, expect by the consent of other denominations on the ground. There is no foundation for such an objection in the plan of federation put forth by the New York conference.

But if there were such a provision to limit and control the missionary activity of the various bodies going into the federation, would the Disciples be the only body to object to it? Are the Disciples the only people who think they have the truth, and that every community needs their teaching in order to have the Gospel taught just right? Do not the Baptists, the Methodists and other denominations think the world would be saved just a little more quickly, more correctly and more effectually by their teaching than by that of any other body? Are the Disciples the only body that think they have a peculiar message for this generation? Have not the Methodists and most other bodies their home mission societies, church extension boards and other agencies for the planting of churches in new territory? Does not every religious body think it has an express commission to save this world without the help of any other body? Is not every body going on in its missionary work on the theory that there is no other denomination in existence to help do this work? Denominations are not standing around waiting for some other denomination to undertake to save the world.

A NECESSARY EVIL

Experience of a Minister Who Tried To Think That of Coffee.

"A descendant of the Danes, a nation of coffee drinkers, I used coffee freely till I was 20 years old," writes a clergyman from Iowa. "At that time I was a student at a Biblical Institute, and suddenly became aware of the fact that my nerves had become demoralized, my brain dull and sluggish and that insomnia was fastening its hold upon me.

"I was loath to believe that these things came from the coffee I was drinking, but at last was forced to that conclusion, and quit it.

"I was so accustomed to a hot table beverage and felt the need of it so much that after abstaining from coffee for a time and recovering my health, I went back to it. I did this several times, but always with disastrous results. I had about made up my mind that coffee was a necessary evil.

"About this time a friend told me that I would find Postum Food Coffee very fine and in many respects away ahead of coffee. So I bought some and, making it very carefully according to the directions, we were delighted to find that he had not exaggerated in the least. From that day to this we have liked it better than the old kind of coffee or anything else in the way of a table drink.

"Its use gave me, in a very short time, an increase in strength, clearness of brain and steadiness of nerves; and sleep, restful and restoring, came back to me.

"I am thankful that we heard of Postum, and shall be glad to testify at any time to the good it has done me." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Is Discussion an Evil? By W. T. MOORE

Every now and then some good soul seems to become frightened because of certain discussions which are carried on through our religious journals. I partly sympathize with these sensitive brethren, for, in our past history, we have had discussions which degenerated into personalities. But the abuse of anything need not necessarily forbid its use. In the main, discussions help to clear the atmosphere, and upon the whole generally make for good rather than evil. I have much more fear for the suppression of discussion than for its fullest expression. When our religious journals come to be mere echoes of one set of opinions, without allowing any presentation of the other side, these journals may become a positive disadvantage to us. Even the editorial "we" should not be exempt from outside criticism.

Our people have no diocesan bishops or general superintendents in their church organization, and consequently, by a sort of common consent, our editors wield a somewhat imperious scepter over our people. I do not mean that our editors intentionally occupy these lilliputian vaticans with the view to exercise autocratic authority. They are set to watch for our people, and if they will allow the people to watch for them, it is probable very little harm will be done.

This opens up the field for free discussion, and perhaps no one can watch for each one of these editors better than his brother editors. In any case, it is tolerably certain that his brother editors will not fail in this particular duty, if they have anything like a reasonable chance.

Of course discussions should be conducted in a Christian spirit; but this is only saying for a special case what is true of everything in our religious life. As a rule our religious discussions are conducted in a good spirit. Earnestness must not be confounded with ugliness, which will never be admitted into our really respectable journals. I am afraid that there is a tendency in some cases to develop a sort of "yellow" religious journalism. Occasionally we notice an ad captandum vulgus appeal for popularity, and in such cases the editor does not hesitate to play to the gallery; for it is evidently his main purpose to get subscribers for his paper, and to make this popular with the masses, by bringing it down to a low plane instead of trying to lift the masses up to a standard of a higher and better class. There are very few men who are indifferent to giving advice to the editorial fraternity. In view of this universal helping hand, I have much hope that our editors will ere long reach practical perfection in the discharge of their duties. But, however this may be, those of us who are constantly telling them just how they ought to conduct their papers will most assuredly feel a degree of satisfaction in the sage advice we are constantly giving them.

By all means let our discussions go on. Within reasonable limits they will help. Our danger is not in these discussions but in a supine indifference to any of the issues involved. Almost anything is better than a graveyard stillness. Where life is there is sure to be more or less controversy; and when, as a religious people, we cease to regard honest discussion with favor we shall, at once, begin to degenerate into a timid, unmanly, unprogressive religious body. I hope our fearful souls will reassure themselves that no danger is likely to come to Israel, even when there is a Goliath in the field, if only we have a David to meet him.

Program For Evangelism

By WM. J. WRIGHT,

Secretary of Evangelism.

Our "new evangelism" is upon us presenting the Gospel and winning greater victories than at any time in our history. So many great meetings were never held in a former year; no meeting so great as that held by Grafton, Scoville, Smith, in Anderson, Ind., has ever been held in one of our churches—more than eleven hundred additions—and the end is not yet!

Our new evangelism likewise presents new plans. It is no longer the single meeting with the single congregation, but groups of churches, the larger the group the better, begin meetings on the same day, in the same city and district, as parts of one great campaign, thus presenting the old Gospel to all the people of a given territory. The Pittsburg campaign gave a new standard and a new meaning to our organization for evangelistic work; henceforth we are to plan great things in evangelism.

Indianapolis is the heart of a campaign which is to begin next October and which, it is hoped, will cover the greater part of the state. West Virginia has made for her campaign motto for the centennial, "Redeem West Virginia from her Reproach." Practically the birthplace of the restoration movement, the home of the Campbells for a half century, the seat of our oldest institution of higher learning, Bethany College, we have hardly a strong congregation in the state. The itinerating evangelist who declaimed against organs, Sunday-schools, missionary societies and pastors, has been the most conspicuous type of minister. The new blood in her ministry is hot with indignation after surveying the field. A campaign is organized to cover the entire state. The "anti" churches which are dying are to be helped into abundant life, for many of them are willing to become "progressive" to the extent of having regular, competent ministerial care. It is hoped to make all present mission points self-supporting and to organize many new churches, besides adding thousands to our present membership.

St. Louis is a great city and one of the most rapidly growing in our land. We have made but a start there. Closer co-operation is needed. A city missionary or evangelist should be at work all the time. We should organize and house at least one more congregation annually. The present missions should be made self-sustaining and provided with much better buildings. The simultaneous campaign which begins there next October should lay the foundation of all this and more. It is a great plan demanding much prayer, great efforts and bountiful, hilarious giving. Sow not this time with niggard grudging, but do with all the might the thing set before you. It is not simply forty centuries which to-day look down upon you: the eyes of the brotherhood and those of your God are upon you. Be worthy of the great things expected of you.

Federation and Missionary Freedom.

The fact is the Methodists would not consent to the supervision and control of their home missionary societies by a committee made up of representatives of other bodies; and if the plan of federation proposed such a thing they would be as loud as the Disciples in their proetst against it.

Other bodies desire and demand freedom of activity just as well as the Disciples. The consideration of this peculiarity of the denominational nature wherever it is met ought to render the plans of the Disciples for their freedom of activity in any plan of inter-denominational federation forever absurd.

Whatever other objections there may be to federation (and to a Disciple there ought to be none) this objection is completely eliminated by the missionary aim and function organized into every denominational system. Errett Gates.

The Fundamental Need of Evangelism.

gone. Peter made that confession at the right psychological moment; it was his supreme moment, and in that moment and back of that confession there was the impelling power of the Spirit of God, which is always present when the soul is earnest and receptive.

Confessions are not to be timed or ordered by priests. They are to be prayed for, watched for and welcomed as the fruits of the workings of God's Spirit.

(TO BE CONCLUDED.)

NEW FOOD LAW

People now demand the right to know exactly what they eat.

To be told by maker or retailer that the food is "pure" is not satisfactory.

Candy may contain "pure" white clay or "pure" dyes and yet be very harmful. Syrups may contain "pure" glucose and yet be quite digestible and even beneficial. Tomato catsup may contain a small amount of salicylic or boracic acid as a necessary preservative, which may agree with one and be harmful to another.

Wheat flour may contain a portion of corn flour and really be improved. Olive oil may be made of cotton seed oil. Butter may contain beef suet and yet be nutritious.

The person who buys and eats must protect himself and family, and he has a right to, and now demands, a law under which he can make intelligent selection of food.

Many pure food bills have been introduced and some passed by State legislatures; many have been offered to Congress but all thus far seem objectionable. It has seemed difficult for politicians to formulate a satisfactory bill that would protect the common people and yet avoid harm to honest makers and prevent endless trouble to retailers. No gov't commission or officer has the right to fix "food standards" to define what the people shall and shall not eat, for what agrees with one may not agree with another and such act would deprive the common citizen of his personal liberty. The Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., perhaps the largest makers of prepared foods in the world, have naturally a close knowledge of the needs of the people and the details of the business of the purveyors, (the retail grocer) and, guided by this experience have prepared a bill for submission to Congress which is intended to accomplish the desired ends, and inasmuch as a citizen of the U. S. has a right to food protection even when he enters another State it is deemed proper that the gov't take control of this matter and provide a national law to govern all the states. A copy of the bill is herewith reproduced.

Sec. 1 governs the maker whether the food is put up in small packages sealed, or in barrels, boxes or otherwise.

Sec. 2 governs the retailer who may open a barrel and sell the food in small quantities. When he puts the goods into a paper bag he must also enclose a printed copy of the statement of the maker which was affixed to the original pkg. and inasmuch as the retailer can not undertake to guarantee the statement of ingredients he must publish the statement of the makers and add his own name and address as a guarantee of his selling the food as it is represented to him which relieves the retailer of responsibility of the truth of the statement and throws it upon the maker, where it properly belongs.

The remaining sections explain themselves.

The Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., for example, have from the beginning of its existence printed on the outside of each and every pkg. of Postum and Grape-Nuts food a truthful and exact statement of what the contents were made of in order that the consumer might know precisely what he or she was eating. A person desiring to buy, for instance, strictly pure fruit jelly and willing to pay the price has a right to expect not only an equivalent for the cost but a further right to a certainty as to what he eats. Or he may be willing to buy at less cost a jelly made part of fruit juices, sugar and a portion of glucose. But he must be supplied with truthful information of the ingredients and be permitted to use his personal liberty to select his own food accurately.

The people have allowed the slow murder of infants and adults, by tricky makers of food, drink and drugs to go on about long enough. Duty to oneself, family and nation demands that every man and woman join in an organized movement to clear our people from this blight. You may not be able to go personally to Washington to impress your Congressmen, but you can, in a most effective way, tell him by letter how you desire him to represent you.

Remember the Congressman is in Congress to represent the people from his district and if a goodly number of citizens express their views to him, he secures a very sure guide to duty. Remember also that the safety of the people is assured by insisting that the will of the people be carried out, and not the machinations of the few for selfish interests.

This pure food legislation is a pure movement of the people for public protection. It will be opposed only by those who fatten their pockets by deceiving and injuring the people. Therefore, if your Representative in Congress evades his patriotic duty hold him to strict accountability and if necessary demand equitable and honest service. This is a very different condition than when a faction demands class legislation of the Congressman. Several years ago the butter interests of the country demanded legislation to kill the oleomargarine industry and by power of organization forced class legislation really unworthy of a free people. Work people wanted beef suet butter because it was cheap and better than much unclean milk butter, but the dairy interests organized and forced the legislation. The law should have provided that pkgs. of oleomargarine bear the statement of ingredients and then let people who desire purchase it for just what it is, and not try to kill it by a heavy tax. Manufacturers sometimes try to force measures in their own interests but contrary to the interests of the people, and the labor trust is always active to push through bills drafted in the interest of that trust, but directly contrary to the interests of the people as a whole. Witness the anti-injunction bill by which labor unions seek to tie the hands of our courts and prevent the issue of any order to restrain the members of that trust from attacking men or destroying property. Such a bill is perhaps the most infamous insult to our courts and the common people ever laid before Congress and the Representatives in Congress must be held to a strict accountability for their acts relating thereto. But when bills come before Congress that are drawn in the interest of all the people they should receive the active personal support of the people and the representatives be instructed by the citizens. The Senators also should be written to and instructed. If, therefore, you will remember your privilege and duty you will at once—now—write to your Congressman and Senator on this pure food bill. Clip and enclose the copy herewith presented and ask them to make a business of following it through the committee considering it. Urge its being brought to a vote and requesting that they vote for it.

Some oppressively intelligent and carping critic may say this is simply an advertisement for Postum and Grape-Nuts. It is true that these articles are spoken of here in a public manner, but they are used as illustrations of a manufacturer seeking by example, printing on each pkg. a truthful, exact statement of ingredients, to shame other makers into doing the fair thing by the common people, and establishing an era of pure food, but that procedure has not yet forced those who adulterate and deceive to change their methods, hence this effort to arouse public sentiment and show a way out of the present condition of fraud, deceit and harm.

The undersigned is paying to the publishers of America about $20,000.00 to print this announcement in practically all of the great papers and magazines, in the conduct of what he chooses to term, "an educational campaign," esteemed to be of greater direct value to the people than the establishment of many libraries. That is held to be a worthy method of using money for the public good. Tell the peopel facts, show them a way to help themselves and rely upon them to act intelligently and effectively.

The reader will be freely forgiven if he entirely forgets the reference to Postum and Grape-Nuts, if he will but join the pure food movement and do things.

C. W. POST.

TEXT OF PURE FOOD BILL.

If it meets approval, cut it out, sign name and address, and send to your representative in Congress. Buy two or more publications from which you cut this. Keep one for reference and send the other to one of the United States Senators from your State. Ask one or two friends to do the same, and the chances for Pure Food will be good.

A BILL

TO REQUIRE MANUFACTURERS AND SHIPPERS OF FOODS FOR INTERSTATE SHIPMENT TO LABEL SAID FOODS AND PRINT THE INGREDIENTS CONTAINED IN SUCH FOODS ON EACH PACKAGE THEREOF.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That every person, firm or corporation engaged in the manufacture, preparation or compounding of food for human consumption, shall print in plain view on each package thereof made by or for them shipped from any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, a complete and accurate statement of all the ingredients thereof, defined by words in common use to describe said ingredients, together with the announcement that said statement is made by the authority of, and guaranteed to be accurate by, the makers of such food, and the name and complete address of the makers shall be affixed thereto; all printed in plain type of a size not less than that known as eight point, and in the English language.

Sec. 2, That the covering of each and every package of manufactured, prepared or compounded foods shipped from any State, Territory or the District of Columbia, when the food in said package shall have been taken from a covering supplied by or for the makers and re-covered by or for the sellers, shall bear upon its face or within its inclosure an accurate copy of the statement of ingredients and name of the makers which appeared upon the package or covering of said food as supplied by or for the makers thereof, printed in like manner as the statement of the makers was printed, and such statement shall also bear the name and address of the person, firm or corporation that re-covered such food.

Sec. 3, That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to purposely, wilfully and maliciously remove, alter, obliterate or destroy such statement of ingredients appearing on packages of food, as provided in the preceding sections, and any person or persons who shall violate this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not less than one hundred dollars nor more than five hundred dollars or imprisoned not less than one month, nor more than six months, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Sec. 4, That the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture shall procure, or cause to be procured from retail dealers, and analyze, or cause to be analyzed or examined, chemically, microscopically, or otherwise, samples of all manufactured, prepared or compounded foods offered for sale in original, unbroken packages in the District of Columbia, in any Territory, or in any State other than that in which they shall have been respectively manufactured or otherwise produced, or from a foreign country, or intended for export to a foreign country. The Secretary of Agriculture shall make necessary rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this Act, and is hereby authorized to employ such chemists, inspectors, clerks, laborers and other employees, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act, and to make such publication of the results of the examinations and analysis as he may deem proper. And any manufacturer, producer or dealer who shall refuse to supply, upon application and tender and full payment of the selling price samples of such articles of food to any person duly authorized by the Secretary of Agriculture to receive the same, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisoned not exceeding one hundred days, or both.

Sec. 5, That any person, firm or corporation who shall violate sections one and two of this Act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not exceeding two hundred dollars for the first offense and for each subsequent offense not exceeding three hundred dollars or be imprisoned not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Sec. 6, That any person, firm or corporation, who shall wilfully, purposely or maliciously change or add to the ingredients of any food, make false charges, or incorrect analysis, with the purpose of subjecting the makers of such foods to fine or imprisonment under this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not exceeding one thousand dollars nor less than three hundred dollars, or imprisoned for not less than thirty days nor more than one year, or both.

Sec. 7, That it shall be the duty of every district attorney to whom the Secretary of Agriculture shall report any violation of this Act to cause proceedings to be commenced and prosecuted without delay for the fines and penalties in such case provided.

Sec. 8, That this Act shall not be construed to interfere with commerce wholly internal in any State, nor with the exercise of their police powers by the several states.

Sec. 9, That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Sec. 10, That this Act shall be in force and effect from and after the first day of October, nineteen hundred and six.

Clinton District to the Front!

At the meeting of the district board at Butler, Mo., a resolution was passed requesting every minister in the district to hold at least one meeting, as district work meeting, before the next convention, with an offering, to be turned into the district treasury for further work in the district. A request is made that all workers report to the president all points where missionary work is needed. Will you not seriously consider this work and let us labor earnestly to bring the work in the district to the front?

The First Reports of the Foreign Offering.

Telegrams and special deliveries about the offering held for foreign missions last Lord's day indicate that the following churches will be in the living link class:

Christian Temple, Baltimore, Md.—Peter Ainslie, minister.

Norfolk, Va.—J. T. T. Hundley, pastor.

Owensboro, Ky.—R. H. Crossfield, pastor.

Winchester, Ky.—Offering will reach $650. Cecil J. Armstrong, pastor.

Anderson, Ind.—Will assume the support of Joseph A. Franklin, one of its own members. T. W. Grafton, pastor.

Franklin Circle, Cleveland, O.—Seven hundred and five dollars and will be increased. Edgar D. Jones, pastor.

Somerset, Pa.—George W. Knepper, minister.

Union Avenue, St. Louis—Will continue a living link. J. M. Philputt, minister.

First Church, Joplin—Offering $700. W. F. Turner, pastor.

Carthage and Jasper county churches, Missouri—Excluding First, Joplin, unite in becoming living link. Newell L. Sims.

Maryville, Mo.—A fine offering; will stay in living link column. H. A. Denton, pastor.

Rock Island, Ill.—Raised $583; will make it $600. O. W. Lawrence, pastor.

Paris, Ky., continues to be a living link—Carey E. Morgan.

North Tonawanda, N. Y.—Apportionment fully reached. Living link pledge assured.—E. M. Todd.

Warrensburg, Mo., becomes a living link.—J. T. McGarvey.

The following churches report good offerings, though they do not reach the $ required to join the living link ranks:

California, Mo.—George L. Snively here. Two hundred dollars for missions. Gr[illegible] day.—Herbert J. Corwine.

Decatur, Ill.—Offering exceeds apportionment. The best in several years.—J. L. Thompson.

Louisville, Ky.—The Broadway Church raised her apportionment, $125.—W. N. Briney.

Johnstown, Pa.—Offering $100, and more in sight. Congregation gave $14.29 last year. Our apportionment was $30, so we have more than trebled it. I began work here last September—my first labor in the ministry.—G. H. Steed, minister.

Hamilton, O.—The Lindenwood church more than doubled its apportionment, giving $25.—W. H. Hedges.

Farmington, Mo.—Offering 77½ per cent above apportionment.—Edward Owers.

Lisbon, O.—We raised three times as much as last year. Will make it $100.—C. M. Yocum.

Sullivan, Ill.—Reached apportionment. Largest offering ever taken by the church. Three additions at night service. Two not reported before.—J. G. McNutt.

Denver, Ill.—Unfavorable weather reduced offering. Amount received, $41.40 but will make up $50, our apportionment. —B. H. Cleaver.

Warsaw, Ind.—Made our offering. One confession.—Marshall G. Long.

Mansfield, O.—"I hope to see this church become a living link by September 1."—Bruce Brown.

Memphis, Tenn.—Offering, $105; raised apportionment; more to come.—L. D. Riddell.

Wooster, O.—Apportionment, $25; offering, $60; possibly more.—J. K. Shellenberger.

Our Budget.

—If your church did not take the offering make arrangements for another Sunday during this month.

—Let there be no unnecessary delay in forwarding the March offering to the office of the Foreign Society, box 884, Cincinnati, O.

—The evangelistic victories continue. We give on another page a report, with illustrations, of the great meeting at Anderson. From our telegraphic dispatches it will be noted that the new converts have lined up for the current expenses and the church has become a living link.

—See announcement elsewhere about the New Hampshire meeting. Brother Yeuell is looking for great results from this effort.

—The assistant editor has returned from the Student Volunteer convention at Nashville. It was one of the greatest and most significant conventions ever held. A report will appear in The Christian-Evangelist.

—Read J. M. Rudy's fine address delivered at our national convention at San Francisco and note what W. J. Wright says about forthcoming evangelistic campaigns.

—Our churches in New York City are about to begin a simultaneous effort for accomplishing greater results in the metropolis.

—Get ready for the Bible school campaign in April.

—Make dates for the Missouri Christian lectureship at Canton and our congress at Indianapolis.

—The Foreign Society has received another gift on the annuity plan from a friend in Canada.

—We whiten another block this week for Hot Springs.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Anderson, Ind., March 5.—Thirty-one more added here to-night—1,214 in our meetings here. This does not include 12 who came at regular services conducted by Brother Grafton Sunday.—Charles Reign Scoville.

—Drake has won the oratorical contest with the Iowa colleges.

—W. T. Henson has been called to Slater, Mo., and enters upon the work at once.

—The church at Auburn, N. Y., has just closed a successful series of meetings.

—The new College of the Bible building at Drake University is to be occupied next week.

—Edward O. Sharpe has just begun a meeting at Winchester, Ill., with Charles E. McVay as singer.

—C. W. Comstock, Columbia, Mo., will preach this year twice a month for the church at Orrick, Mo.

—Be inspired by the good reports from the Foreign Society's offering on another page.

—S. J. Copher reports that the church at Hawk Point, Mo., has been rebuilt and will be dedicated in April.

—Harvey Hazel will take the pastorate at Vancouver, Wash., at the close of the meeting now being held by him at Elma.

—The people reading "Victory of Faith," by E. L. Powell, are delighted with it in price and contents; $1 postpaid.

—S. B. Braden, of Cato N. Y., writes that A. B. Chamberlain, of Troupsburg, N. Y., is a living contradiction of the Osler theory. His work at that place shows that the vim of his earlier days has not entirely abated.

—The church at Seneca, Mo., has raised its apportionment for foreign and state missions, and given $30 to Lawrence county work.

—J. G. Creason, of Lathrop, Mo., is still quite ill, pleuro-pneumonia having followed typhoid fever. Prayer is asked for him.

—We are glad to report that W. P. Bentley, who was invalided home from a mission field in China, is improving steadily in health.

—Jesse T. Craig reports the meeting just held by Brothers Northcutt and McVay at Ipava, Ill., as a fine one in spite of bad weather conditions.

—Many friends will sympathize with Mr. and Mrs. S. G. Inman, of Monterey, Mexico, in the loss of their only child, who was but six weeks old.

—The Iowa Ministerial Association will meet at the East Side Church, Des Moines, April 17-19. F. W. Collins, of West Liberty, Ia., is the secretary.

—Have you seen "The Plea of the Disciples of Christ," by W. T. Moore, one long and intimately connected with our brotherhood and its teachings? Postpaid, 30c.

—James R. McIntyre, of Zearing, Ia., begins March 11 with the church at Grand Island, Neb. There were 52 applicants for the vacancy recently announced in our columns.

—M. S. Johnson reports that the church at Litchfield, Ill., took its foreign missionary offering one week in advance and exceeded its apportionment by raising $34.

—The Roland Street Church, Syracuse, N. Y., is on the eve of a series of meetings to be conducted by State Evangelist Tremaine, assisted by Miss Lulu Clark as evangelistic soloist.

—Brother Menzies reports that the church building at Rath, India, is nearing completion, and E. C. Davis, of Mandha, Ohio's representative, will preach the dedication sermon in Hindi.

—R. H. Newton reports a gratifying increase in missionary interest at his church in Normal, Ill. The definite centennial aim is to double the membership and become a living link church.

—Prof. Herbert L. Willett announces that he will conduct another travel-study class, under the auspices of the University of Chicago, to make a tour of Palestine. The party will sail Jan. 26, 1907.

—An installation service was recently held for the officers and teachers of the Bible school at the Central Christian Church, Warren, O. This school is having the largest attendance in its history.

—Harold E. Monser has sought to get Dr. Foster, of the University of Chicago, to debate with him as a result of the recent book published by the professor, but the latter declines to enter into any public controversy.

—We have just learned with very much regret of the death of David Hickman Moss, a prominent banker and faithful member of our church, at Paris, Mo. We shall hope to publish further particulars in a later issue of the paper.

—L. F. Stephens, who has been holding his second good meeting at Dayton, Wash., reports that all the departments of the work are well organized under J. A. Pine, and that the present building is too small. The question of another building is being discussed.

—A permanent organization for mutual fellowship and help has been effected by the ministers of our churches in central New York. Officers chosen were: President, W. D. Ryan; vice-president, A. Braden; secretary and treasurer, S. B. Braden. The next meeting will be held at Auburn, in April.

Spring Medicine

In thousands and thousands of homes — in cities, towns and villages — three doses a day of Hood's Sarsaparilla are now being taken by every member of the family.

Why such wide and general use? Because Hood's Sarsaparilla has proved itself the Best Spring Medicine, by its wonderful effects in cleansing the system of all humors, overcoming that tired feeling, creating appetite, clearing the complexion, giving strength and animation.

Over forty thousand testimonials received in two years, by actual count.

—George T. Ritchey, president of the Oregon Christian Ministerial Association, announces that he has appointed M. F. Horn, of Eugene, Ore., to fill the vacancy caused by the removal of the former secretary from the state.

—John W. Harrison, who got as far west as Waterville, Kan., on his journey across the continent, feels that he has done as much good as he can at that place, and is now ready to move on. He would like some work to take half or all his time. He is not looking for big pay, but wants to do good.

—Mrs. Minnie Johnston Wrinstead, national organizer of the W. C. T. U., who has a reputation as a lecturer and a preacher identified with the Baptist Church, has united with our church at Larned, Kan., the minister of which, B. E. Parker, commends her to our brotherhood as a successful evangelistic worker.

—The Christian Woman's Board of Missions has published, in view of their Easter offering, a missionary exercise entitled, "The King's Highway," intended for the use of Intermediate and Junior Societies, etc., and written by Jessie Brown Pounds. It will be found very appropriate for this purpose.

—D. B. Titus has resigned the work at Lexington, Neb., on account of his wife's health, and accepted a call to Longmont, Col., to begin April 1, or sooner, if a pastor can be located at Lexington. The salary there is about $1,000. Address Brother Titus, with references. The work is prospering there.

—We rejoice to hear that D. Munro has recovered, after two years of sickness, and is now almost his old self. Brother Munro spent 409 days in the hospital at Ann Arbor, and underwent seven operations. With his recovery comes the news that his daughter, 9 years of age, has just been baptized by him.

—A correspondent wishes to know if the trustees of a local church are part of the official board and should meet with the same and take part in the official business of the church. They are not considered as part of the official board unless they are also elders or deacons, and in such case it is in the latter positions that they are considered as members of the official board. In any meeting affecting the question of church property it would be entirely proper for them to attend as trustees, if their presence were needed.

—Sample copy of "Gloria in Excelsis" has been received and carefully examined. I believe it to be the best selection of songs for true worship we have ever had. The Responsive Readings are wisely chosen and most admirably adapted to the wants of a worshiping congregation. Other aids to devotion and good order render completeness to the whole.—J. C. McReynolds, Wilsons Mills, N. C.

—There are abundant signs of life in the Miles Avenue Church, Cleveland, O., of which T. Alfred Fleming is pastor. Brother Fleming has just concluded his third annual evangelistic service in his own church. Each has resulted in over 100 additions. A new gallery in both auditorium and Sunday-school room has been built, and it is expected to open a new baptistry and a large pipe organ by Easter. The Sunday-school numbers about 450. Brother Fleming had an attack of the grippe during his revival and has just returned from a two weeks' rest in Ontario.

—Thomas C. Clark, whose musical and poetic ability is already known to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, has just been ordained to the Christian ministry at the Hyde Park Church, Chicago. Errett Gates, E. S. Ames, pastor of the church, and Thomas J. Clark, father of the candidate and pastor of the church in Bloomington, Ind., conducted the service. Brother Clark is a well educated young man, and has for some months been engaged as singing evangelist. He is now in a meeting with Frank G. Tyrrell at Houston, Tex. Both these brethren are members of the Hyde Park Church, Chicago.

—It is not often that three women occupy pulpits in a small town at the same time, but this has just happened at Ord, Neb. On account of sickness, our preacher, Oscar Sweeney, could not fill his pulpit, so his wife took charge of both services at the Christian Church, while at the Baptist Church a woman evangelist spoke, and in the Methodist Church a prominent woman missionary from India. A ministers' association has just been formed there, and Brother Sweeney was chosen secretary. The local paper comments as follows: "This is a good move. It shows unity and good will in these servants of the Most High. Now we are going to offer a subject for discussion at these meetings. The question of exchanging pulpits occasionally would be a good theme. Also the advisability of the preacher's wife exchanging pews once in a while. We always feel sorry for a preacher's wife, who is by custom bound to attend only her husband's church. Would it not be a good thing if these wives would occasionally by agreement exchange pews so as to hear the other wives' husbands preach once in a while?"

—I have thoroughly examined "Gloria in Excelsis" and am delighted with it. It is, in my judgment, by far the most complete and serviceable hymnal ever published by the Christian Church. The responses, readings, etc., are very essential in giving full expression to the spirit of worship, and the arrangement is excellent. I like the "Amen" at the close of each hymn. It is both appropriate and Scriptural. The hymn selections are of the best. The naming of tunes after some of our prominent preachers is unique, and at least will not detract from our appreciation of the grand old hymns. As a whole I most heartily commend the book and the earliest opportunity shall see its introduction here.—T. W. Grafton, Pastor.

The A. C. Pierson home in Hiram, O., will be sold to highest bidder by March 15, 1906. Send all bids to Estell Pierson, 1147 Twenty-sixth street, Des Moines, Ia.

—Among the elderly Disciples of Christ is "Grandma" Catherine Hawn, who has just celebrated, at Akron, O., her ninetieth birthday. Her great-grandfather was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, her grandfather a soldier in the revolutionary war, her father a soldier in the war of 1812, her son a soldier in the war of the rebellion, and her grandson a soldier in the Philippine war. She has resided in Akron since 1865, where she has long been a member of the High Street Church of Christ. She joined our communion in 1834. She has seen great changes in church conditions, and tells about how she used to furnish the tallow candles to illuminate the church. "When we held a protracted meeting of four weeks one set of four dozen candles lasted two evenings, so you can see it meant some work," she says. Among those who took part in the celebration on the recent birthday was F. M. Green, who has for many years been a friend of Mrs. Hawn.

—S. G. Inman, superintendent evangelistic work, Monterey, Mexico, writes: "I have neglected to thank you for the good you have done me by your book on 'The Holy Spirit,' because I thought that my tribute would be unnoticed in the great ones you should receive. But I must thank you for taking up the matter with those opposing your view, and showing the awfulness (and I use the word advisedly) of their position, and the harm it is doing our movement. I have always despised a controversy, especially one carried on in our papers, but I think the time has come for some one to speak out on this matter. What a cold, heartless, discouraging position would we on the foreign field occupy if we could not feel the constant presence of the Master's other self leading, encouraging and solving the tremendous problems that face us out here, where earthly friends can help but little. Our whole mission family watches for THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST with eagerness every week. We wish you abundant success in your campaign for a hundred thousand subscribers."

—As a result of a series of meetings held at Blair, Neb., there has been a great revival of our cause there in the last nine months. J. DeForest Austin found the church practically disbanded, there having been no services for some time when he went there last May, and in his enthusiastic way he got the membership to work, and in August Grant Hamm, a graduate of Cotner, was called as pastor and did good work. N. T. Harmon, of David City, has just closed a successful meeting and it is a pleasure to report that in all some 85 have been added to the membership since last May, the building has been improved in many ways, and all debt has been wiped out. There is a fine prospect for growth and increasing usefulness under Brother Hamm.

New Hampshire Meeting Postponed.

Owing to the necessity of erecting some kind of a tabernacle at Manchester, N. H., in which to hold the meeting, Bro. Herbert Yeuell recommends the postponement of the meeting till June, when the weather also will be more favorable in that region. This has been agreed to, and while it gives us a little more time to raise the necessary funds for the meeting the time is short enough and will soon be upon us. It will require several hundred dollars to erect the tabernacle and pay the necessary expenses of the meeting. Thanks to those who have kindly responded to the appeal for contributions for this purpose, but the work of financing the meeting is only begun. Read W. J. Wright's article, "Redemption from a Reproach."

We beg to announce, in addition to the amounts already acknowledged, the receipt of the following sums for the expenses of the New Hampshire meeting: J. E Decker, $1; K. M., 50c.

The Combination Oil Cure for Cancer.
Has the indorsement of the highest medical authority in the world. It would seem strange indeed if persons afflicted with cancers and tumors, after knowing the facts, would resort to the dreaded knife and burning plaster, which have hitherto been attended with such fatal results. The fact that in the last 12 years over one hundred doctors have put themselves under this mild treatment shows their confidence in the new method of treating those horrible diseases. Persons afflicted will do well to send for free book giving particulars and prices of oils. Address the home office, DR. D. M. BYE CO., Drawer 105, Dept. 411, Indianapolis, Ind.

Only Started.

Last Sunday the churches only started in their offering for foreign missions. Many churches gave more than ever before. The distinct advance is encouraging. However, many have not attended to it. May we not most earnestly request that every church respond before the close of March? There is much involved every way. The cry for reinforcements is urgent and persistent from all the fields. If there is not a distinct advance in the receipts the work will suffer. The situation in the far east is changing rapidly. These changes are all favorable to the extension of the Gospel. Japan and China and India are calling long and loud for new missionaries and more buildings and other necessary equipment for the enlargement of the work. The work in Africa is a marvelous success. The workers must be reinforced at the earliest possible moment. We can not be indifferent to the call that comes from Cuba for buildings and other equipment. And the situation is precisely the same in the Philippines. These appeals are to us the voice of God.

Send your offering to F. M. Rains, secretary, Cincinnati, O., and he will promptly send a proper receipt. We are hoping the work will receive due consideration in every church at once.

A. McLean, President.
Stephen J. Corey, Secretary.

WHAT WE HAVE DONE AND HOW WE DID IT.

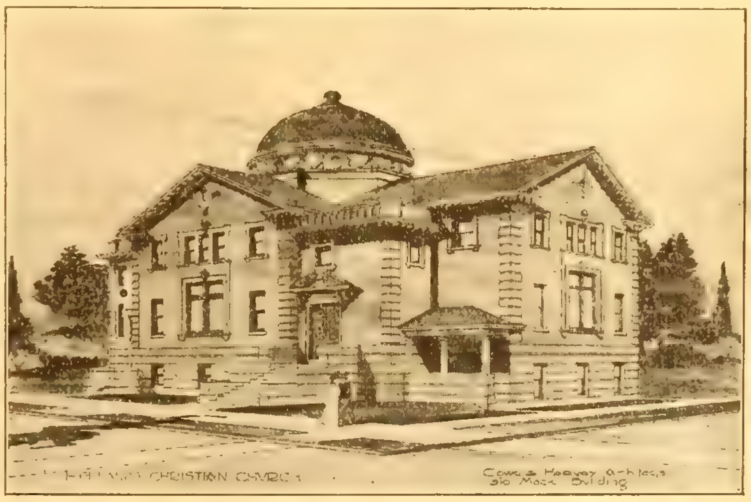
CHAPTER II.

In THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of November 30, 1905, under the heading, "What We Have Done and How We Did It," is told the story of the splendid achievement of the South Broadway Christian Church, Denver, in the payment of the great debt that for so many years had embarrassed the work of that congregation.

It is my pleasure to write of the achievement of another of our Denver churches, no less heroic, a victory no less signal, than that of Brother Tyler and his splendid people.

J. E. Pickett.

The Highland Christian Church was the second of our congregations in Denver. Organized Nov. 21, 1888, its first building was dedicated March 16, 1890. The congregation was prosperous till the panic came, in 1893. Many of its members were left without a dollar and homeless. Pledges made at the dedication of the house could not be paid. Debt accumulated. Creditors, by reason of the stress of their own affairs, became urgent. The church, crippled, embarrassed, helpless, struggled until February, 1901, when it made satisfactory settlements with the holders of mortgage and judgment by turning over everything it possessed and going out to begin anew, without a taint of repudiation or dishonesty, but penniless. The pastor of the church at the time wrote a friend, "We haven't a thing left; not even a church debt."



New Christian Church at Denver.

On June 1 following I became pastor of this discouraged church, then numbering about 250 members. Until about Oct. 1 we continued to meet in the old house, paying rent for it. Then the building passed to other ownership and the congregation went into a small hall.

Early in 1902 the movement for a new location and building was inaugurated. A site at the corner of Bryant street and West Thirty-fourth avenue was purchased at a cost of $1,500. The year following plans were adopted for a building, the full cost of which will be about $25,000, accommodating an audience of 800 people, and in every way adapted to the work of a modern church, and the erection of one wing of the building was begun. On Aug. 30, 1903, the church met in the basement room of this wing, with room, by crowding, for an audience of 200 people. Until Feb. 11 this was our church home. On that day we celebrated the completion of one wing of the building by worshiping for the first time in the upper room. This, with balcony and annex, accommodates an audience of 325 and, with the basement, is well adapted to the various activities of the church.

The total cost of the building to date, with ground, is $9,500; $6,200 had been paid previous to the opening day, $2,000 are provided for by a loan from the Board of Church Extension. Some assets were yet in the hands of the building committee and $1,000 subscribed at the opening day services. All bills will be met promptly and fully and a new career of usefulness and growth is surely before the church.

Three services were held on opening day, William Bayard Craig, D.D., Flournoy Payne and Leonard G. Thompson taking prominent part. It was a day most exceptional in its sweetness, its joy, its power. No greater victory has been won by any church within my knowledge than that achieved by this heroic, persistent, self-denying congregation of Christians in Denver.

The opening of the new church is being followed by a meeting of some weeks with William Ross Lloyd, of Lexington, Ky., as evangelist. Everything seems favorable for a good meeting.

J. E. PICKETT.

An Old Preacher's Appeal.

DEAR BROTHERS AND SISTERS IN CHRIST:

I am a poor old preacher. I am in poor health and have no home. I have 40 acres of rough land, but there is $450 against it It is my chance for a home. If I had it clear I would put up a cheap house and I could make a good living on the land and preach every Sunday. There is a dearth of preaching here. I mean in the backwoods, in arbors and country school houses. The pay is nothing, so to speak, yet pay or no pay we country preachers try to keep the standard afloat. I can abundantly establish all of this by good men and women here. And now to the main point. Now I appeal to you who have your good homes to aid me. My dear brethren, take the load off of my old back and let me preach the rest of my days. I will try to win a soul for every dollar contributed. I close by referring you to Professor J. R. Roberts, of Springfield, Mo.; J. W. Lecompte, of Cassville, Mo.; Hon. John Kingston, of Granby, Mo.; Hon. M. E. Benton, of Neosho, Mo., and the Editor of THE CHRIS-TIAN-EVANGELIST. Your distressed brother in Christ, E. A. FROST.

EASTER GLORY!

A beautiful exposition of the ministries of the National Benevolent Association of the Christian Church. This service will be sent free to all Bible schools that will present it and send the offering to the National treasury for the care of the hundreds of helpless ones in our Hospitals, Old People's Homes and Orphanages. Jesus said, "Whatsoever ye do unto the least of these, even so ye do unto me." The Benevolent Association was the first of our church societies to adopt Easter as the time for offerings. Each of them has an undivided Day for missions. This Association should have at least one undivided Day for this Gospel of the Helping Hand. Order supplies at once.

Geo. L. Snively, Gen. Sec.
903 Aubert Ave., St. Louis.

Discussions will follow the papers at each session of the congress.

Business sessions will be held on Wednesday and Friday afternoons at the close of the regular program.

The churches of Indianapolis will entertain the attendants at the congress for lodging and breakfast.

General Committee—J. H. Garrison, G. P. Coler, Burris A. Jenkins, Robert E. Hieronymus, Herbert L. Willett.

Indianapolis Committee — Allan B. Philputt, Charles B. Newman, C. B. Coleman, F. W. Norton, O. E. Tomes.

Redemption From Reproach.

By William J. Wright,
Secretary of Evangelism.

A century of our history made, and we still, an insignificant factor in the religious life of New England! The oldest, most staid and cultured portion of our land, the best fitted in some respects to hear and accept our plea to restore the ideal features of New Testament Christianity, New England, tired of Unitarianism and seeking a Savior who is more than a good man, with 6,500,000 population, has within the borders of her six states only 22 Christian churches and a membership of 3,200.

This is a reproach to us as a people. The worst feature of the reproach, however, is the fact that in one of these states (New Hampshire) we are without an organization or a representative. We have nothing in the state.

Two years ago Nevada was in like condition, but that reproach has been removed. Robert L. McHatton organized a church in Reno. We are challenged to move upon the last state in which we are not represented, New Hampshire. In our convention in San Francisco last August Bro. J. H. Garrison proposed to organize a church in that state before our next national convention. He guaranteed the pay of an evangelist who would go and organize a strong church. That did not mean that he was to bear this burden alone. It meant that he would raise all he could from among the brethren and contribute the remainder.

The evangelist has been secured, and it is doubtful that for such a work there is a better in our ranks, Herbert Yeuell, of Washington, D. C. His success as evangelist and organizer is phenomenal, as his great meetings and newly-planted churches in different fields eloquently testify. He proposes to erect a great tabernacle and remain two or three months, if necessary; but before leaving, under the favor of God, he proposes to establish a strong congregation in Manchester, N. H., secure a lot, plan a building and call and install a regular minister, thus conserving the fruits of the meeting.

Personally, I want to have fellowship in planting the first congregation which is simply a church of Christ in New Hampshire, the last state in the Union bearing this reproach. A thousand others also should have fellowship. We ought to raise a special fund large enough to pay all the expenses of the meeting and buy a good lot.

1900 Washer FREE!

Any worthy person can have a "1900" Gravity Washer free to try four weeks just by writing for it. We pay the freight and take all risk. You don't risk a penny. Test it four weeks at our expense. If you like the Washer, keep it on the "1900" plan, which we will explain to you. If you don't like it return it at our expense, so you are nothing out. Washes a tub full of dirty clothes clean in Six Minutes. Get it FREE by addressing a postal today to "1900" WASHER CO., No. 5566 HENRY STREET, BINGHAMTON, N. I propose a special New Hampshire fund for this purpose. I invite and urge every friend to contribute to this fund. Let the money pour in at once. We want it now. Send either to the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, St. Louis, or to the American Christian Missionary Society, marking it "New Hampshire Fund," and acknowledgment will be made through the columns of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Let the fund be not less than $1,000. More is needed. Send the money now.

Will Lose $300.

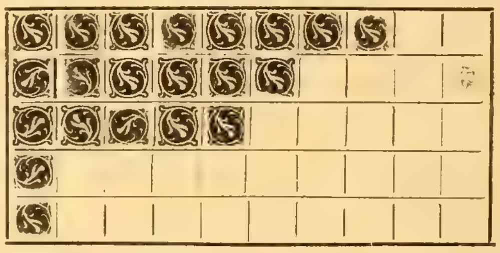
We have reached a point in our rally which guarantees that we will not lose the lot. We will be able to pay another $500 note and the interest in a few days. This will be $1,000 we will have paid since the rally began, but we will lose $300 if we are not able to successfully raise the whole amount. We have three pledges made on condition that they will give $100 each if the whole amount is raised. We will be able to raise $800, I am quite sure, having assessed ourselves $1,000 in the beginning of the rally. Of this amount we have raised $200. Committees are now hard at work, and if they succeed, we need only $700 of outside aid to succeed, and save to the cause here the $300 conditional pledges. Brethren, help us. Help us now. But three weeks of the rally remain.



Send all remittances to T. N. Kincaid, Hot Springs, Ark.

A Fable.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

One of your contemporaries reminds me of a fable: A frog was one day seen sitting by its little pond, swelling itself out of all proportion, as if it would burst its hide. A neighbor frog hopping along and noticing the distended form of its fellow frog, and fearing he would burst, inquired the reason of this demonstration; whereupon the proud batrachian, giving itself an extra inflation, responded: "It is because of my great influence over other frogs, and of my primacy in the frog family of America!" Soon afterward a loud report was heard, and on coming out to see what had happened the neighboring frogs saw only the scattered remnants of his proud frogship, whose vaulting ambition had o'erleaped itself. Hoc fabula docet that we should not think of ourselves more highly than we ought to think. ### As to Dr. Harper.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

If Bro. Frank Oviatt, of Hampton, Ia., will note that all the great newspapers of the country eulogized the late Dr. Harper, of Chicago, and that the weekly and monthly magazines and reviews estimated him as really great, not only in character and scholarship, but in constructive and executive ability as well, he will see who was right, as between THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and "The Christian Standard," and that the latter, like the inebriated individual at the revival service, who voted at the wrong time on the question of where he wanted to go, is in a "hopeless minority" as to Dr. Harper. ### Faith and Feeling.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

In a copy of the Revised Version of the Bible, published by the International Bible Agency, New York, I am surprised to find the following heading and outline:

FOR THOSE WHO LOOK TO FEELING FOR FAITH.

1. Feeling not to be trusted (Jer. 17:9; Luke 18:11,12).
2. God speaks to us through his Word, not through our feelings (Jer. 23:25-30; Palms 119:113-117; John 5:24; Romans 10:12-17).
3. The witness of the Holy Spirit is received by our receiving his testimony to Christ in the written Word (1 John 5:9-13; Eph. 1:12-14; Rom. 16:25,26; Rom. 8:1-4,15,16).
4. Feelings fluctuate, but God's Word is unchangeable (Rom. 3:3,4; 4:20,21; 2 Tim. 1:12; Rom. 8:23, 34-39; 1 Pet. 1:7, 23-25; John 3:34-36).

T. T. HOLTON.

[We are not the only people who are studying the Holy Spirit, as we notice from our exchanges that the topic is one of general discussion among the various religious bodies. That the Holy Spirit testifies through the Scriptures concerning God, Christ and the way of salvation has been our contention from the beginning. But some among us have not laid sufficient emphasis upon the indwelling of the Holy Spirit in the individual Christian, and we have not always discriminated between "feelings" which are physical sensations, and those emotions of love, joy and peace which are the fruit of the Spirit.—EDITOR.]

31 Boxes of Gold

300 Boxes of Greenbacks

For the most words made up from these letters

Y-I-O-Grape-Nuts

331 people will earn these prizes.

Around the fireside or about the well-lighted family reading table during the winter evenings the children and grown-ups can play with their wits and see how many words can be made.

20 people making the greatest number of words will each receive a little box containing a $10.00 gold piece.

10 people will each win one box containing a $5.00 gold piece.

300 people will each win a box containing $1.00 in paper money and one person who makes the highest number of words over all contestants will receive a box containing $100.00 in gold.

It is really a most fascinating bit of fun to take up the list evening after evening and see how many words can be added.

A few rules are necessary for absolute fair play.

Any word authorized by Webster's dictionary will be counted, but no name of person. Both the singular and plural can be used, as for instance "grape" and "grapes."

The letters in "Y-I-O-Grape-Nuts" may be repeated in the same word.

Geographical names authorized by Webster will be counted.

Arrange the words in alphabetical classes, all those beginning with A together and those beginning with E to come under E, etc.

When you are writing down the words leave some spaces, in the A, E, and other columns to fill in later as new words come to you, for they will spring into mind every evening.

It is almost certain that some contestants will tie with others. In such cases a prize identical in value and character with that offered in that class shall be awarded to each. Each one will be requested to send with the list of words a plainly written letter describing the advantages of Grape-Nuts, but the contestant is not required to purchase a pkg. These letters are not to contain poetry, or fancy flourishes, but simple, truthful statements of fact. For illustration: A person may have experienced some incipient or chronic ails traceable to unwise selection of food that failed to give the body and brain the energy, health and power desired. Seeking better conditions a change in food is made, and Grape-Nuts and cream used in place of the former diet. Suppose one quits the meat, fried potatoes, starchy, sticky messes of half-cooked oats or wheat and cuts out the coffee. Try, say, for breakfast a bit of fruit, a dish of Grape-Nuts and cream, two soft-boiled eggs, a slice of hard toast and a cup of Postum Food Coffee. Some amateur says: "A man would faint away on that," but, my dear friend, we will put dollars to your pennies that the noon hour will find a man on our breakfast huskier and with a stronger heart-beat and clearer working brain than he ever had on the old diet.

Suppose, if you have never really made a move for absolutely clean health that pushes you along each day with a spring in your step and a reserve vigor in muscle and brain that makes the doing of things a pleasure, you join the army of "plain old common sense" and start in now. Then, after you have been 2 or 3 weeks on the Grape-Nuts training you write a statement of how you used to be and how you are now. The simple facts will interest others and surprise yourself. We never publish names except on permission, but we often tell the facts in the newspapers and when requested give the names by private letter.

There is plenty of time to get personal experience with Grape-Nuts and write a sensible, truthful letter to be sent in with the list of words, as the contest does not close until April 30th, 1906. So start in as soon as you like to building words, and start in using Grape-Nuts. Cut this statement out and keep the letters Y-I-O-Grape-Nuts before you, and when you write your letter you will have some reason to write on the subject, "Why I Owe Grape-Nuts."

Remember 331 persons will win prizes, which will be awarded in an exact and just manner as soon as the list can be counted after April 30th, 1906. Every contestant will be sent a printed list of names and addresses of winners on application, in order to have proof that the prizes are sent as agreed. The company is well known all over the world for absolute fidelity to its agreements and every single one of the 331 winners may depend on receiving the prize won.

Many persons might feel it useless to contest, but when one remembers the great number of prizes—(331)—the curiosity of seeing how many words can really be made up evening after evening and the good, natural fun and education in the competition, it seems worth the trial; there is no cost, nothing to lose and a fine opportunity to win one of the many boxes of gold or greenbacks.

We make the prediction that some who win a prize of gold or greenbacks, will also win back health and strength worth more to them than a wagon full of money prizes.

There are no preliminaries, cut out this statement and go at it, and send in the list and letter before April 30th, 1906, to Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich., and let your name and address be plainly written.

The Great Revival

By T. W. Grafton

TWELVE HUNDRED AND FOURTEEN ARE ADDED TO THE CHURCH IN THE MEETING JUST HELD BY CHARLES REIGN SCOVILLE AND DE LOSS SMITH FOR T. W. GRAFTON AND THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH AT ANDERSON, INDIANA.

The greatest revival held by a single congregation in modern times came to a triumphant close Monday night, Feb. 26. In the number of additions to the church, in the deep religious interest awakened in the community, in the transforming power witnessed, in the widespread enthusiasm generated, it stands out as a new landmark in the work of modern evangelism.

Chas. R. Scoville.

Those who had part in it are still awed by the manifest presence of God in the great work of grace that has been wrought, and can scarcely yet realize that it was their privilege to share in a triumph that no other church of the past century ever witnessed.

In the 49 days' campaign 1,180 souls were won to Christ and added to the church, more than doubling its forces and making the Central Christian Church of Anderson among the largest, if not the largest, congregation of Disciples in the entire brotherhood.

Several elements enter into this extraordinary victory. The first was the preparation of the church for a great evangelistic campaign. It undertook large things and expected large returns. Six months before the meeting began plans were made and the church organized to reach and care for converts. The Wednesday evening meeting was made a training school for Christian work, and a series of topics were selected with a view to awakening the evangelistic spirit and equipping for personal work in soul winning. Through December cottage prayer-meetings were held in all parts of the city, under the direction of the ladies' aid society, one of the most efficient and far-reaching organizations of the church. In every possible way the revival idea was kept before the people, until everybody became confident of victory.

The standing of the Central Christian Church in the community and its splendid equipment in building and forces had much to do with the magnitude of the results. The Anderson church was a great church before the revival began. It was united and harmonious. Its members stood well, were respected for their Christian worth. Its great building was adapted to the work; crowded to its utmost capacity, it was found to contain by actual count 2,749 people, and after the first week it was always crowded. A larger auditorium would have increased the results, as people were constantly turned away for lack of room.

The Christian Church, Anderson, Ind.

The community was one of adequate proportion for a great work. A city may be too large to be moved or too small to furnish material. Anderson is neither. With a population of 25,000 it was small enough to be reached and stirred from center to circumference, until the meeting became the most important event of the day to the entire population. It was large enough to furnish an inexhaustible supply of material, susceptible to the truth. When the meeting closed, so widespread had been its quickening influence that the material seemed as abundant as at the beginning.

T. W. Grafton.

A most marvelous winter lent its helpful influence. There was no blizzard to break in and check the progress of the work. There were but two or three disagreeable days during the entire series of meetings and they came after the meeting had reached such a point of interest that people paid no attention to sky or thermometer. So the meeting swept on like a mighty tide of the sea.

Another important factor was the music, led by De Loss Smith. As a leader of song he may be surpassed, but as a Gospel soloist I think he is without a peer. Modest and undemonstrative, he sang with a sweetness and clearness and simplicity that was the delight of all who heard; and many a great truth was sung home to the heart which otherwise would have failed to make its impress.

But the man of the hour was the man who stood at the front and by his fearless utterances and mighty personality made resistance to the claims of truth almost impossible. Charles Reign Scoville is an evangelist, every inch, every ounce, every atom. Men have been asking and are asking still the secret of his power. To those who listened to him through this series of meetings, it is an open secret. In the first place, like Paul, he says, "This one thing I do." Every thought and every word from the time he began the meeting until its close was directed to one great end, that of soul winning. Secondly, he utters no uncertain sound in the pulpit or out of it. His theme, first and last, is that Jesus came to save sinners; that the Word of God is the sword of the Spirit; that the only plan of salvation that saves is that of the New Testament; that the men who reject that are lost, and without hope. Thirdly, he is fearless in his attack on sin, all forms of sin. He uses the language of Jesus in branding sin and in puncturing the armor of the sinner. Under his mighty blows slumbering conscience awakes, and as the bells of conscience ring, men fly to Jesus for rescue. Fourthly, he is loyal to the plea and purpose of the Disciples of Christ. He demonstrates the present effectiveness of the truths our fathers preached in the days of small things. He condemns sectarianism and the things that hinder the reunion of God's children. He urges Scriptural terms of pardon and denounces modern substitutes for Gospel measures. Fifthly, is his strong personality and untiring energy. He gives himself and all of himself at each service. He does not try to see how little he can do, but how much. He does not spare himself. He always does more than is expected or demanded of him.

A View of the Interior of the Church, with the Evangelist Preaching.

The results of this meeting have from the start been surprising, surpassing the most sanguine expectation of an expectant church. The first invitation brought response, and from that time not an invitation was given that did not result in people's accepting Christ. At first they came from 6 to 10 at a service. Then by the second week the number increased to from 18 to 20. By the third week the average was about 25. Then the numbers grew to 35. Through the entire series of meetings the average for each day was 24. The largest number coming any one day was 82. The largest at any single service 69. Thus the tide swept on until 1,180 found their way into the kingdom or into the fellowship of the church; 922 were by confession and baptism; the remainder were by letter or commendation, or baptized believers from other religious bodies.

As might be expected, such a forceful presentation of a virile Gospel would appeal to thoughtful men and women of other churches. Almost every religious body was represented among those who came to take their stand on the Bible alone. Among those who came were Lutherans and Catholics, Christian Scientists and Spiritualists, Episcopalians, Presbyterians, Congregationalists, Methodists, Friends, United Brethren and Baptists.

The new membership adds a mighty power to the church. They were not mere religious driftwood caught up by the current and swept into our church yard. They were representative of the best life of the city. While it is impossible to classify, the following will give some idea of the character and standing of the new converts: Three hundred and eighteen were mature men; 196 entire families were united in Christ. Among the converts were 3 physicians, 10 public school teachers, 30 merchants, this term including all classes of trade, where the head of the firm came to Christ, 2 editors of two of the city dailies, one-half the Board of Aldermen of the city, the engineers of nearly all the large manufacturing plants of the city, 28 of the leading farmers of the county, railroad men, street car men, mechanics and all classes of labor.

A great responsibility has been added to the church, which it gladly assumes. A great army of active workers have pledged co-operation with the pastor in looking after the new forces. The city is districted with faithful bands of women, meeting weekly in each district, who will keep in personal touch with the new people in their district. The elders of the church, a godly body of men, have accepted the responsibility of generalship for larger divisions of the city, and will keep in touch with those committed to their care through large committees. So it is expected to keep the church in a living, growing condition, with the least possible percentage of loss from the ranks of the new recruits. The meeting was a great blessing to all who participated in it, and its regenerating influence will be felt throughout our city for years to come.

Iowa.

W. B. Clemmer, of Council Bluffs, has been appointed state superintendent of Christian Endeavor to take the place of S. G. Fisher, who has left the state. The appointment of Brother Clemmer will gladden the hearts of the Iowa Endeavorers because we have no man among us better fitted and who would be more devoted to the work. He has been for several years one of the best Bible school workers in the state and he is equally well qualified to take up the Endeavor work. We commend him to you and trust that he will receive the hearty co-operation of our young people.

In reply to many inquiries I will say that an effort is being made to employ Bro. C. S. Osterhus to labor among the Scandinavians. The I. C. C. Board has made him a proposition that he has under consideration. He desires the whole country for his field of labor, but the I. C. C. has Iowa as its objective point. The proposition from us is that he labor in Iowa for three months, or until the convention, and then hope to link the National Board with us and send him to all the people. During the three months' service it is proposed that he visit the groups of his people in the state, spend a few days at each place and each them in the Bible way more perfectly by organizing them into New Testament churches. It is also suggested that he arrange conferences in this and neighboring states in which those separated brethren (preachers) be brought together in an effort to show them that they are treading the paths our fathers trod and that we are as anxious as they to restore the New Testament church. Be patient, we are moving as rapidly as possible. In the meantime send all offerings for Scandinavian missions to your state corresponding secretary and they will be kept sacred for that purpose. I am in correspondence with W. J. Wright and the National Board is interested in the movement.

We are all deeply pained at the death of G. L. Brokaw. I have been intimately associated with him for several years. He made Iowa a good corresponding secretary. He was an incessant worker and by his patient, plodding industry established a good paper. He was especially kind and devoted in his home and the family have the sympathy of the entire brotherhood.

I spent a week with the church at Last Chance and six made the good confession and one united from the Baptist church.——State Evangelist C. L. Organ closed his meeting at Sac City with 115 additions. J. A. McKenzie had 15 additions at Last Chance. S. M. Perkins had 15 additions at South English. W. S. Johnson had 30 additions at Kellogg at last report. C. G. Stout will hold a meeting for Valley Junction, one of our mission churches. J. S. Newland closed his meeting at Lime Kiln with 8 new members and organized a congregation with 34 members. This church has been in a dormant state for the last few years. Brother Newland has made us a good evangelist. If you have not yet held your meeting let me know. We do not want the winter to pass without having a meeting in every church. We have six evangelists under our appointment and can supply you with one of these or others, if you prefer. We arrange meetings for our own evangelists and others as may be preferred. Send in your offering for the I. C. C. B. S. Denny, Cor. Sec.

Ohio.

John E. Pounds is holding a meeting for William Kraft at Birch street, Cleveland.——D. D. Burt has resigned at Niles on account of failing health. A few years ago Brother Burt had to quit for a year's rest. He has held on to the work at Niles against the doctor's advice till the meeting planned should be held. This will be a good, but responsible, field for some really good man. Brother Burt will have to quit preaching for a time.——C. E. Taylor has resigned at Sebring and will seek another field.——The Central church at Youngstown was re-dedicated on Feb. 18. This congregation was organized Jan., 1895, with 106 members. They bought a three-story residence and fitted it into a church at a cost of about $18,000. This building has been added to by a beautiful front and some interior changes. The building improvement cost $12,600 and the organ and furnishings $3,000. By the advance of real estate the whole property is now worth from $50,000 to $60,000. The audience room will seat 700, and there are about 20 different rooms in the whole building. W. S. Goode has led this congregation for six years, and preached to two crowded houses on the dedication day. The membership is now 500, and the church is a living link in the Foreign Society. Allen Wilson will assist the church in a meeting, following the Buffalo convention.——Charles Darsie has been holding a meeting at Uhrichsville with home forces which has been very successful. Over 50 added at last report.——O. A. Henry has held a remarkable meeting at Bergholtz. There were over 100 additions. This church is only a little over one year old and has taken the whole community.——The Franklin Avenue Church, of Columbus, has sold the present property at the corner of Ohio and Franklin avenues and bought two lots in a locality further east and south. They will build as soon as the weather will permit, putting about $15,000 to $18,000 into the new property.——C. A. Kleeberger will leave the state Sunday-school work March 1 and take the pastorate of the Chicago Avenue Church, in Columbus. With his wide Sunday-school experience we will look for a fine growth at Chicago Avenue.——F. M. Rains was with the church at Warren Sunday, Feb. 18, and of course offered a few suggestions about the March offerings.——Rallies in the interest of foreign missions were held at Perry and Painesville. Mrs. C. E. Mollard, of China, and the preachers of the county were speakers.——D. P. Shaefer has left Sullivan to preach for Hubbard.——Governor Pattison has declared himself as to the "lid" being on in all Ohio cities on Sunday. This will mean closed saloons and no Sunday baseball. Good. While we have laws, let them be obeyed.——The program for the state convention in May at Uhrichsville is now being prepared. In the planning of your travels don't neglect Uhrichsville.——One of our Ohio preachers has taken a wife. Q. A. Randall was married on Feb. 7 to Miss Ella Patrick, of East Liberty. Brother Randall is preacher at Kensington.——The churches of Painesville are about to federate to put out the saloon. By the way, have you been impressed that some of the most pitiable and distressing things that have ever been uttered through our press are being said on the federation question? Have some of our modern writers been going to school where the "Octographic Review" graduated? It will do you good to read carefully the second time F. D. Power's letter in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of February 15. C. A. Freer.

Kansas.

The seventh district convention will be held at Oxford March 6-8.——The ministerial institute meets at Emporia April 10-12. I. J. Spencer, of Kentucky, will be chief speaker.——R. H. Fife has just closed a good meeting with J. A. Longston and his good people at Independence; about 50 accessions.——C. P. Smith leaves the North Side Church, Kansas City, Kan. We are sorry to lose him, but Missouri will be the gainer.——E. N. Phillips closed at Oakland with a total of 33 additions. The church is talking of calling Brother Phillips for another meeting. His work is of a high order.

I visited C. C. Atwood's meeting at Larkin one evening. The interest was growing; additions almost every night. Brother Atwood's preaching is strong and Scriptural.——We recently visited Toronto, where we have a new organization, constituted by George H. Nicol. A house is being erected. J. P. Gustin is the leading spirit.——I have also visited Udall and Benedict, where there are church buildings unoccupied. As soon as advisable one of our state evangelists will be stationed at these points for the purpose of reviving them. There are several places like these in the state. Let us pray and pay for more laborers.

Texas.

We have recently held four district missionary conventions in the Cisco district, Southwest Texas, the Gulf and the Temple district. The state secretary made a tour of 20 days, including these district meetings, resulting in $2,000 in good pledges for district mission work and $184 cash collected in the field. This success was attained by appealing to people to help do the work in their own districts, to be done under the supervision of committees of their own selection, and by men of their own choice. In the same territory three years ago, we secured for such work less than $500 per annum. There is such an advance in every part of Texas, where we have been able to get the ears of the people. In some quarters of the state the brethren plead for help, but carefully guard their own churches from the soliciting secretary, lest their purses might be depleted—not having learned yet that "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth." We have been able to place not less than 20 new men in Texas during the past nine months, and our churches are much better manned than at any previous period in the history of our work. We still have need of a few good men, who are willing to do faithful and difficult work at from $50 to $75 per month.

I recently visited the metropolis of Texas, namely, Houston. Of course, San Antonio and Dallas will dispute this statement, and even Uncle Sam's figures give San Antonio a larger population, but a knowledge of the territory included in the incorporate limits of the two cities gives me a good reason to say that Houston is now the largest city in Texas and growing at a very rapid rate. The church there is keeping up with the procession. A lot that was purchased while I was ministering to that church at the cost of $3,500, was recently sold for $22,500, and the church allowed to keep it for one year, and then take off all the improvements. This really gives them a profit of about $20,000. They expect to purchase a lot in a better location and place a building thereon, which will cost not less than $25,000. A. F. Sanderson, pastor, is a cultured, clear-headed minister of the Gospel, and is successfully leading the forces in that great Texas city toward the goal of a great church. The successful Sunday-school superintendent of this church, William A. Wilson, is one of the busiest men in the city. He devotes himself earnestly, however, and with a liberal hand, to the aid of his school. He has a hold on the hearts of the young people in that city second to no other man in the city.

The Second Church of Houston has exchanged lots and moved the building to a better location, and with a minister for his whole time, they will soon be a power for good in the fifth ward of the city.

Ernest J. Bradley, a splendid young man, now one of our state evangelists, is laboring with the members at Port Arthur, with the purpose of securing for them a regular minister and pledges for his support.——Frank G. Tyrrell is to begin a meeting at Houston about April 1.——S. D. Perkinson, who was engaged as one of our state evangelists, has been delayed in beginning this work, wisely choosing to remain with the church at Temple until his successor has been installed. Brother Perkinson has demonstrated his fitness for the position to which he has been called, and we expect great good to come from his labors.——Virgil L. Graves, another of our state evangelists, has had severe sickness in his family during the winter, but will soon be in the field again, winning souls for Christ as few other men in the state can.——Our state convention this year will be held at Waxahachie, June 11-14 inclusive. An unusually good program has been provided for this occasion. The Chautauqua grounds will be used as the place of meeting. This will give us a pleasant outdoor assembly, which at that season will be very much appreciated. Or course, we expect a representative of the old reliable Christian-Evangelist to be present.——In two and a half years our missionaries in Texas have planted 81 churches, 52 Sunday-schools, have baptized 2,700 converts, built 40 church houses and raised cash in round numbers, $73,000.

"Every morning, for over 20 years, I never went to the toilet without fear and trembling, and I never left it without having suffered agonizing tortures. Many days I did not dare go at all, so much did I dread the terrible ordeal."

These are the exact words of a sufferer from piles and we hear the same thing almost every day. It voices the sentiments of hundreds of thousands of others in this country today, for it is estimated that of every ten persons we meet in church, the street, or the theater, seven are affected with piles.

Martyrs and needless martyrs, too, for since the discovery of the marvelous Pyramid Pile Cure no one need suffer one moment longer. There is now no excuse for having piles and if you continue to suffer from them you do not deserve a particle of sympathy, considering the chance we give you to prove it to your own satisfaction wholly free of cost to you.

Here is a typical case: Mr. Benjamin Shaw, Postmaster of Bland, New Mexico. He had suffered from aggravated piles for years, and was upon the eve of a serious surgical operation, believing that he had reached the limit, and that the operation offered the only possible means of relief and cure. Let us quote his own words in his letter of Oct. 31, 1905: "I was in great agony of mind and body. In the meantime, a gentleman told me of the virtue of your pyramid remedy. I fortunately found it at a drug store, and by the next morning I did not feel that an operation was necessary, and in three days I was able to return home, and a complete cure was accomplished to my great satisfaction and the surprise of the physician."

Send today to the Pyramid Drug Company, 2049 Pyramid Building, Marshall, Mich., and get a sample package by return mail and then go to your druggist and get a box, the price of which is 50 cts., and get well without pain, trouble or cutting.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting.

March 14, 1906.

THE TEST QUESTION.—John 21:15.

Let us sing:

> "More love to thee, O Christ,
> More love to thee!
> Hear thou the prayer I make
> On bended knee:
> This is my earnest plea—
> More love, O Christ, to thee!
> More love to thee!"

Little real love for Jesus is there in the heart of the man who would grieve him for fancied pleasure, gold, place, the applause of men, or who would deny him empire over the hearts of millions who yet have not so much as heard there be a Savior, or who rejects his new commandment—"that ye love one another."

Love in the Bible: Loved Israel in bondage for sake of future holiness, Deut. 7:6-9; God's shepherding love, Psalm 23; Christ died for us while we were sinners, Rom. 5:6-8. He wants expressions of our love, Luke 17:11-19. Love to his is as love to him, Matt. 25:31-40. Appeals to his love permissible, John 11:3. Not to love him supremely is unworthiness, Matt. 10:37, 38.

If we contemplate him, it is easy to love Jesus because of what he has done for us and promises yet to do, but the change of Greek verbs he makes in the 15th and 17th verses indicates he wants us to love him not only for what he does but also for what he is. He would have us love him for the pierced hand and riven tomb, it is true, but also for the beauty of his holiness, the sanctity of his character, his likeness unto the Father, and that in him that inspires all who approach him to become heavenly minded and exalted even above the angels.

Loving Jesus is in itself preparing for the skies. Because of its power for our glorification he requires we love him supremely. Some love their families more than Jesus; but he says such are unworthy of him. To many a theology seems dearer than Christ; they are as men admiring the scaffolding rather than the mansion. Others love themselves more than their Savior, but the souls of such shall be required of them and be banished into eternal destruction from the presence of God and the angels, while up in heaven those appearing to be most loved will be they who on earth loved the Savior most.

There is time in this dispensation for the lovers of Jesus to commune restfully with him and to dream dreams and see visions and, enraptured with his loveliness, to adore him, but evidences of our love most acceptable to him, because most helpful to those he came to aid, will be our acting the good shepherd to some of his sheep, as soldiers of the Cross extending his sovereignty over other lives, as faithful husbandmen cultivating the fruits of righteousness in the hearts of ourselves and neighbors, and as loyal priests in the great temple of Christianity honoring his name and doing good unto all.

When Jesus said: "Lovest thou me more than these?" whether he meant, "more than these other disciples love me," or "more than these boats and nets and their harvest or than the land and the glory of empire," we shall never know. Perhaps he purposely used this vague expression to incite us to place the love of all possessions and the love of others for him in the scale when determining our own love for him who died for us and rose again. The proof is the same in either case, "Feed my lambs," "Tend my sheep," "Follow thou me"—even into those shadows when another shall gird thee and carry thee whither thou wouldst not.

FIRST QUARTERLY REVIEW.

The lessons for the past quarter cover the years of his infancy and early life, and about one-third of the period of his public ministry. If it were not for the additional data furnished by John's Gospel, we would infer that the incidents in the ministry of Jesus occurred within a much shorter period, but John's unique narrative of an early period of work in Galilee and an early Judean ministry and his definite references to feasts at Jerusalem (2:13), and to the time of the harvest (4:35), make it necessary to conclude that at least a year of the public ministry had elapsed before the final call of the Twelve and the Sermon on the Mount.

Without going over the lessons, one by one, let us try to summarize the work of Jesus thus far. What had he accomplished in this year of public work?

1. Before the beginning of that first year of public ministry Jesus had attained two things: First, a unique spiritual development which not only rendered him sinless (which would be merely the negative side of virtue), but gave him the perfection of human character. Second, the consciousness of a unique relation to God and a sense of a divine mission which he was to perform. The evidence which we have does not warrant us in making any very positive statement as to the order and time in which these elements of his equipment developed, but we have no reason to doubt that they did come to him by a process of development and that so much of the process was reasonably complete before the beginning of the public ministry.

2. With his baptism we see that Jesus had become (either in that act or before it) conscious, in a somewhat more explicit sense, of the nature of his mission. It was not simply to be some work for God, some part of his Father's business; it was to be the leadership of this new kingdom of God which John was preaching. It was, that is to say, the Messiahship.

3. The outcome of the Temptation in the wilderness shows a full recognition of the spiritual and universal nature of that Messianic work. He has transcended even the highest of the earlier conceptions of the Messiahship. The Temptation probably represents the profound and searching spiritual experience in which that larger ideal was fully grasped.

4. His ministry of teaching and healing during this first year had won for him a widespread fame and popularity both in Judea and, more especially, in Galilee. It was not an intelligent following, for it was attracted by the superficial aspects of his work and missed the heart and meaning of it. Later, in the interest of real and lasting success, Jesus had to shake off these crowds of superficial admirers, but for the present they thronged about him and gave to his work a deceptive appearance of great and immediate success.

5. The professional religionists of the time, the scribes and Pharisees, were just beginning to take alarm at the unconventionality of this new and popular teacher. His disdain of precedents and authorities, which even the common people noticed, aroused the suspicion of those whose whole conception of religion was walking in the old paths. This opposition of the Pharisees and Scribes was as yet, however, only beginning and had not yet occasioned any trouble.

6. He had won a circle of followers, many of whom had been John's disciples, who understood him better, and from this number he had chosen the Twelve to be his close companions, to receive special instructions, and to be the means of perpetuating his teaching.

7. He had laid down the fundamental principles of the kingdom in a wonderful series of teachings, concrete in form but universal in application, which we find recorded as the Sermon on the Mount.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh.

Here is a Simple, Quick, Effective way and COSTS NOTHING—Send for it and see.

Those who suffer with it know well the miseries of catarrh. There is just one thing to do—have it cured. It can be done. To prove it to you, send your address and the means of a quick and safe cure will be sent to your home free in every way. The idea in giving it to you free is to prove to you that there is a home cure for catarrh, scratchy throat, asthma, stopped-up feeling in the nose and throat, catarrhal headaches, constant spitting, catarrhal deafness, etc., etc., and that the remedy that does it is the invention of Dr. J. W. Blosser, the eminent southern doctor and minister, who has for over 31 years been identified with the cure of catarrh in all its forms.

His discovery is unlike anything you ever had before, as it is not a spray, douche, ointment, atomizer, salve, cream, or any such thing, but a genuine tried-and-true cure that clears out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe the free air and sleep without that choky, spitting feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It will save the wear-and-tear of internal medicines that only ruin the stomach. It will prevent colds and heal up the mucous membranes so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting.

If you have never tried Dr. Blosser's discovery and know that you need such a cure, and want to make a trial of it without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and a thorough free trial treatment and also an elaborately illustrated booklet, "Plain Facts About Catarrh," will be sent you at once, free, so that you can begin to cure yourself privately at home.

Now write him immediately.

CHRIST'S SUMMARY OF CONDUCT.—
Matt. 5:1-7:28.

Daily Readings.

|---|---|
| M. The Savior's Beatitudes. | Matt. 5:1-16. |
| T. Jesus and the Law. | Matt. 5:17-26. |
| W. The New Dispensation. | Matt. 5:27-48. |
| T. The Water of Life. | John 4:1-26. |
| F. The Great Feast. | John 6:1-21. |
| S. The Draught of Fishes. | Luke 5:1-11. |
| S. The New Commandment. | 1 John 2:1-14. |

It is said that in this initial sermon Jesus makes no claim to divinity, and, therefore, that was an afterthought with him or his biographers. But he begins at once such words of life as will make us hearers divine, and there can be no higher proof of his own divine nature.

How picturesquely is the trait of trust in God inculcated! Behold the fowls of the air, your Father feedeth them. Consider the lilies of the field, they toil not, neither do they spin, yet Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these. Let us, too, trust him, and half of life's consuming fires will at once be extinguished and peace will be ours.

There is nothing in Jesus' teaching contradictory to the law or that reveals any imperfection in the law. He shows it was perfectly adapted to a very imperfect people. But the Mount of Beatitudes was higher than Sinai, its auditory was nearer God, the range of vision was wider, the application of its principles is more universal. Nevertheless, we have reason to rejoice we are not under the law, but under grace.

How Jesus is searching our hearts in this immortal sermon for those traits of character that will bar us out of the kingdom. "Forgive us our trespasses as we have forgiven those who have trespassed against us." Who with rancor in his heart against his neighbor can read these words without trembling at the thought of approaching him in judgment who has numbered every passionate wave of revenge that has swept through our bosoms.

The Teacher makes known to us that character is injured as much by cherishing wild thoughts of evil as by actual transgressions of the law. Momus condemned Vulcan because in making man he failed to construct a grate in his breast through which the real purposes of his heart might be read. No need, God discerns the thoughts and intents of the heart and judges them infallibly. They make us what we are for time and eternity.

How the beatitudes, falling from the young rabbi's lips as pearls from a silver strand, must have astonished the multitudes, who were accustomed to consider only the rich, officiary, learned and otherwise worldly successful as possible participants in happiness, as he declared there is happiness for those who mourn, are meek, pure in heart, merciful, peacemakers and even the persecuted for righteousness' sake, independent of those former accessories they had always regarded as indispensable. Let us thank him for opening up to us undistinguished ones of earth a way into our inheritance of happiness.

Censoriousness is another weight holding us down who should rise to the higher altitudes of life and love and service. "With what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged" is true, because there is that in suspecting and attributing ill to others that impels us into the same offenses and judgments, we become like them. The doctrines of Christ, like the laws of nature, are now known to be eternal principles, not ready-made by him to suit the occasion, he simply made them known to us. They would have blessed us had another than the Christ revealed them. We should obey them not only because he delivered them, but because only through obedience do we come into harmony with all good.

Forward!

Shout the victor song! Let fall
The laurel leaf upon the pall!
Lift up the battle cry! Listen the call
Of them who fell, victorious over all!

Forth to the conflict! Armed with the steel
That strikes the heart! Men who can feel
The pain of others, rally to the roll:
The conflict deepens for each earnest soul!

Cast off the outer garments! Shout the cry
Of them who dared to venture and to die.
Fill up the ranks! Fall into line—
Behold the vision of our victory shine!

Above the battle-smoke, the dreadful dark,
Hear the sharp call of "Forward!"—Hark!—
The voice of pleading, with the promise sure:
"I am with thee alway; Watch! Endure!"

The Bronze Vase.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

[Mrs. Revore, mother of the twins, Raymund and Rhoda, when dying tells them that there is a secret which may or may not have great influence upon their later lives. The secret is in a letter which is in a tin box in the bank of the town. The box is to be opened and the letter read only if either one of the twins makes the other very unhappy. The mother dies, and Raymund and Rhoda are left to the mercy of strangers, their mother's half brother in St. Louis having failed to answer repeated letters from Mrs. Revore. After a week's time, the new minister, "Brother Bellfield," tells the children that he will take them into his home.]

CHAPTER VIII.

Yes, Miss Glory was perfectly willing to part with Rhoda and Raymund. "But not before my week is up," she said firmly. "I took you orphans for a week, and a week it is to be!" So, though the children would far rather have given Miss Glory a day off, and though Miss Glory could hardly wait for them to be out of her house, a full week it was. The only one who took open pleasure in the arrangement was Mr. Merlin Aggency. That venerable man of figures had taken a great liking to "the boy," and had such an exalted opinion of his ability to fathom the mysteries of numbers that Raymund lived in continual fear of proving a disappointment to the other. At last, however, the time came to bid Miss Glory and her teeth and her brother good-by. They left the house and walked several blocks before they came to the place rented by the new minister. Raymund carried their entire belongings—a band box filled with a few things of no value, save to the owners, a bundle of clothes, and the green umbrella. The green umbrella had been thrown out in the back lot, the day of the sale. Nobody wanted it, perhaps because it was a green umbrella, perhaps because it was leaky. In the minds of the children it was intimately associated with their mother and recalled many domestic scenes which seemed the sweeter and more precious from their remoteness.

The minister had rented a large house with a wide porch which extended the width of the front and, having made a generous turn, ran along the side to the outside dining room door. "No use our ever taking a small house," he said to Rhoda and Raymund, with his genial smile, "the house isn't built that we couldn't fill!" The children found the next days very busy ones, during which they gradually became acquainted with the household. Before they were on smiling terms with all, it was pleasant to see Wizzen slowly aiding in putting down a carpet, or leisurely carrying some article—usually a small article—from one room to the other. "This is what I like," he said to Raymund, waving his arm toward a pile of furniture, books and straw matting that was heaped together on the bare floor of what would eventually be a parlor, "moving. It makes me hone for my covered wagon." In vain Brother Bellfield hurried about with heavy chairs in his arms; in vain Mrs. Bellfield knelt to drive the tacks with her own hands. Wizzen would leave the most absorbing occupation to stroll out to the pump. "I do not like," he explained to Raymund, who, finding him at the pump so often, expressed a fear that he was feverish, "I do not like unbroken work!"

Mrs. Bellfield made the orphans feel at home from the very first. She was a frail little woman, her hands hard from work, and her strength unequal to the continuous demands upon it. It seemed to the little guests that she was never for one moment at leisure, and it seemed a pity that so much of her labor must be devoted to other people. While the oldest son, Jasper, was at home looking about for some occupation, his wife and three little children were, of course, guests of the house. The three little girls were very troublesome, and had the knack of calling forth all the genius and energy of everybody about them save that of their mother. The youngest cried almost incessantly, the oldest was tearing or breaking something from hour to hour, and the intermediary child showed a persistency in hurting itself that made claims upon the sympathy and assistance of one and all—save the mother. Mrs. Jasper Bellfield, a lady of about twenty-five, was short, dumpy, easily dressed, and had a rounded face that in some way, one hardly knew how, suggested the idea of stickiness.

"I do not know how it is," said Mrs. Jasper Bellfield, when the intermediary had fallen off the porch on top of its little head, and the entire family had rushed to its relief before she could rise from her rocking chair, "I do not seem to have any energy. I think it is the climate."

Brother Bellfield's youngest son, Jack, was about fourteen. He was an extremely handsome youth, full of energy and tease. He did not care for Rhoda at all, because she was a girl; but he showed a liking for Raymund and insisted that they should go fishing at the end of the school week.

"Not without Rhoda," said Raymund. "We always go together. And suppose she is a girl! You can have lots of fun with a girl like Rhoda. She never cries."

"She can't climb, can she?" Jack sneered.

"And suppose she can't!" Raymund returned. "Somebody might as well stay on the ground."

Saturday morning Jack found Rhoda alone and said, "Say, Rhoda, I want Raymund to go fishing with me to-day. But he says he won't go unless you go along. But I want to have some fun. Girls can't fish. I don't want to go if you have to go. I want Raymund to go with me. I wish you'd tell him you don't want to go. Say! You don't want to go, do you?"

Rhoda looked wistfully into the bright face, with its brown eyes dancing in the health of youth and its red lips parted in the enjoyment of living. But she answered slowly, "Of course I don't want to go, Jack, if you don't want me."

"I thought you'd say so," said Jack, with much relief. "Well, I don't want you to go, so that settles it, and Raymund and I will have a jolly time!"

"Where are you going boys?" asked Brother Bellfield wistfully as they started down the alley carrying an old tin can.

"Fishin'," came the answer.

"Susan," called the minister to his wife, who was washing one of the windows, "I believe I'll go fishing with the boys."

"Is your sermon prepared?" called back Mrs. Bellfield.

The minister sighed and threw his leg off the fence. He had not had time that week to "look into a book," as he knew very well that his wife knew. He started toward the house. Mrs. Jasper's youngest was screaming in the kitchen. The minister put his hands to his ears and started for the barn. He was half-way there when he caught sight of the intermediary on the edge of the barn loft, struggling to maintain her equilibrium. With a shout of alarm the agonized grandfather rushed forward. The child fought valiantly to hold herself to the floor, but inch by inch she was slipping over the verge. Brother Bellfield's shout aroused the household. All—except Mrs. Jasper—ran madly toward the scene of the impending catastrophe. Mrs. Jasper got to the door of the house just in time to see the intermediary fall into the arms of its grandfather. "Well, what will that child do next?" she asked mildly, and returned to her rocking-chair, evidently a victim to the climate.

But if Jack did not appreciate Rhoda, his brother Morton was more sensible of her worth. Morton was a young man of about twenty, tall, dark and handsome, with glossy, curly, black hair and a mustache of which, at another time, he would have been proud. This, he confided to Rhoda, was not the time for him to take pride in anything, because he was despairing. This state of mind seriously interfered with his being of much assistance in the moving. He had little time for anything but his despair. "I don't know why I talk so openly to you, Rhoda," he said, with a sad little smile. "Perhaps it is because you, too, have known trouble."

"Oh, yes," sighed Rhoda, "that is the reason! Is she very beautiful?"

"As beautiful as Mother Nature, herself," said Morton Bellfield gloomily. "She is just a year younger than I. She is a blonde —I wish you could see her. I wish I could! But it is better not. It is all over between us. When father moved here I would have stayed in Renniburg if she hadn't broken it off."

"Was there a misunderstanding?" asked Rhoda, eagerly. "Couldn't something be explained?"

"If you can explain why she loves somebody else better than she does me," said Morton, dejectedly, "you will clear up all the misunderstanding! She thought she loved me. We were engaged. And then she found she didn't. But the trouble is, I have kept on just the same." Morton stooped and picked up a stone and laid it gently back upon the ground as if to show that he had not the heart to throw it.

"I am very sorry," said Rhoda, softly. "And there was somebody else?"

Morton looked darkly at Rhoda and drew his hat over his brow, and answered in a slow voice, "There was. There is."

They sat together on the fence a good while in sympathetic silence, growing more attached to each other all the time in that strange way dissimilar souls have of coming together. At last Morton whispered, "Rhoda, I'm going to tell you a secret: Her name is Lily!"

"What a beautiful name!" said Rhoda.

"Yes—Lily," said Morton softly. "Somehow it reminds me of a flower," he added pensively.

"That is just what I was thinking of," cried Rhoda, in quick sympathy.

"Let us never speak of her again," said Morton, with a determined face, as he climbed down from the fence. And he did not, until the next day. Saturday night found the house somewhat set in order, and about 9 o'clock came Brother Bellfield's invalid sister, a lady of perhaps 60, who had to be carried into the house. She could not walk a step, and on account of her helplessness, some one must always be within call. Sunday morning when all prepared to go to church, Rhoda stayed at home, in case Miss Bellfield might want something. Already the death of Mrs. Revore had lost its first cruel effect of acute pain. It no longer seemed to rise between the children and the thought of happiness. Still, though Rhoda, as a child of 12, might have found pleasure in fishing on Saturday, she was glad to escape the sight and sounds of the familiar little church on Sunday. They would have brought back all her sorrow. As Rhoda sat in the room with the invalid, reading the Bible her mother had worn loose, some one knocked, downstairs. The invalid was asleep. The girl tiptoed down to the front door and opened it. A man was standing on the threshold; he entered at once, closing the door behind him. He was dressed in a plain suit of green checks, and his derby hat remained on his head as he stood staring at Rhoda. His face was rather good looking but his eyes filled the girl with a shrinking sense of aversion. There was in them an impurity, a treacherous cunning, from which her pure nature drew back appalled.

"What do you want?" she asked quickly. "They have all gone to church."

"That's why I came," said the man, with an impudent smile. "I wanted to see you all to yourself."

Rhoda was filled with terror as she retreated to the staircase. "Brother Bellfield's sister is upstairs!" she cried.

"No danger her coming down," said the man with a grin. "Now, you listen to me!"

Shall Money Triumph Over Love?

The one predominating subject of the hour is money. If we are at a place of business, a social gathering, or even in the quiet of our own homes, sooner or later a discussion will arise about the necessity and pleasure of possessing it. Some cynical ones, and their number is rapidly increasing, declare there is no good in life but money. They delight in showing cartoons which display poor little Cupid buried under the inevitable bag of gold, while they never fail to point out the account of marriages that no one could possibly suppose were made from love. Is it any wonder the modern young man rather shrinks from marrying and contracting obligations which may make his future life miserable? Can we altogether condemn the practical girl of to-day who hesitates before allowing the marriage ring to be slipped on her finger, knowing how clearly she realizes the cost of present living expenses? It must be confessed I was not surprised when one of my readers recently asked me to discuss the question. "For happiness in marriage is money not as important as sentiment?" We need only to receive a few bills the first of each month to vividly realize what a vast power it has in the world, but to believe that all human joys and blessings revolve around the dollar sign is pitiable and weak. Look back over your life and recall the day, hour or even moment which brought you the sweetest happiness. Perhaps it was when you had achieved a difficult, unusual piece of work or made a noble sacrifice for mother which radiates its own divine glow; it may have been occasioned by your sweetheart's kiss or your first look at a certain wee baby's face that seemed so like a precious crumpled rose. You know best what have been the particular joys in your life, but I am very sure that money had very little to do with them. If they are worth the sacred place you have given them in your memory they did not come to you wrapped in a bank note or reflecting the yellow glint of gold.

Ever since the old pagan days when Nero reigned supreme and gold was fairly thrown into the streets to the present day of civilization and unparalleled luxuries, wealth has been a great demoralizer in the world, and especially has it so affected human happiness. Statistics show that divorces are more prevalent among the moneyed than the poorer classes of society. Many husbands and wives from our rich families avoid the notoriety and unpleasantness of the divorce court, but spend the greater part of their lives apart—separated by the wealth which brought them idleness, satiety and discontent. They know nothing about the humble pleasures, self-denials and mutual struggles which unite only the closer hearts which truly love each other and are faithful.

The public compliment Mr. Longworth paid Miss Roosevelt the other day could not possibly have made her any happier than did the whispered word of praise given by the modest clerk to the girl of his choice. The little wife who goes down town with a few dollars in her purse, but love in her heart, to buy a much-needed carpet, is richer than a lonely, unloved woman ordering a costly Persian rug, for she has in her keeping something that money can not purchase. Five years ago there came to this city two sisters. In a short time the eldest, wearied with being her own bread earner and confident that all she wanted in the world was an unlimited amount of spending money, married a wealthy man much older than her own father. The younger girl chose a poor young electrical engineer because she loved him with all her heart. There have been days of hard work and anxious hours in her life, but the blessed nearness of her husband has made them easier to bear, and all who know her realize how beautiful and secure is her married happiness. The other wife is compelled to obey the disagreeable whims and irritable caprices of a selfish old man, but she married him for better or worse, so has to accept the situation as it is. She knows now that life does contain more exquisite joys than cashing checks.

It has been said that when King Christian, of Denmark, and his wife began their married life, he had the income of a bank clerk, with not the least expectation of coming to the throne. For 57 years they lived together, the "royal lovers of Europe," although a part of that time they were actually in needy circumstances. One of the richest women in this country recently wrote to her clergyman that she felt, because her husband was dead, that the very Deities had forsaken her. "My every dream is shattered," she added; "my vast wealth is only a mockery without the one I love."

Ah, my friends, if you refuse to drink from the cup of love held to your lips because it is not made of gold or silver, you may feel after it has passed out of your reach forever a thirst that nothing in this world can quench!—Helen Hale in The Advance.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Well, Felix is going to move again. He has not been exactly satisfied since he left Plattsburg. I think, perhaps, it's because he has not been used to rented houses. We have been in this rented house about five months, and it doesn't matter how high a rent you pay, it never seems exactly like home. You might pay $25 a month, and you wouldn't feel any better. So I have bought a house here and we are getting it improved and ready for Felix. At first, it will be strange to him, but just as soon as he understands that it belongs to him, he will settle down. There are no mice like those you catch at home. Ever since Felix has lived in this rented house he has worn an expression which said, "These are not so good as mother's mice." We are delayed about getting into our house because the stone pillars for the front porch are not ready. We ordered them only last Thanksgiving, so they haven't had time to prepare them yet. The climate in Arkansas is so delightful that people live to an exceeding age, so they have lots of time to do what they do, when they do it, and there is no use to be in a hurry, because you are going to live so long. So, as Felix has his nine lives and I have my Arkansas climate, we can afford to wait till next Thanksgiving for our stone pillars. Speaking of stone pillars, here is a letter from Leicester Paul, Leavenworth, Kan.: "Mother and I have long enjoyed this page of The Christian-Evangelist, and when we read that it was your birthday and also the beginning of the Advance Society year, I determined to join the Society. I would have been a member before, only it is so little I can do for Charlie and Drusie. I send a dime for Charlie's education fund, if it is only a little. I am 13 and go to school, but think I can keep the rules. Please let me know if I understand them: one verse of Bible daily, one page of history daily, one page of poetry daily, a quotation each week." (It is five pages of history each week, and 30 lines of poetry each week. Otherwise, you are all right. I do not think a dime is little for you to send. If everybody who reads these words would sit down and send a dime for the Education Fund, you would see that it would count up big. Yes, even if they stood up to send it. Somebody writes to ask what all this is about Charlie and Drusie—it is a new subscriber. I'm ashamed to say I have lost the letter, though likely enough not so ashamed as I ought to be. But whoever asked the question, here is the answer: Charlie is a boy with one leg in the Orphan Home at St. Louis; he is older than the allowed age of orphans, and we are trying to raise money to keep and educate him till he is old enough and wise enough to support himself as a shorthand or typewriting business man. He has no one to look to for help, except us. Drusie Malott is a young lady in China who has gone there as a missionary, trusting God to supply her with means to teach the Gospel. She is not sent by any missionary board, so we are trying to pay her expenses while she is out there. I have just sent her the twelfth $5 draft from the Av. S. That makes $60 we have raised for her, and paid to her. If we do not keep her supported there, I don't know what she will do; but I share in Drusie's faith. I believe God will take care of anybody who deserts all to teach the story of Christ, and I believe you of the Av. S. will keep right on sending me money for her support. There is one point I want to call people's attention to: nobody is obliged to pay one penny either for Charlie or Drusie. Help them if you want to; but you can join the Av. S. and be just as much a member without contributing for our orphan and missionary. We want you to join, so you will get a habit of reading good books; books that are not always novels and stories. I like stories and I like to write them. But I would hate to think I had so soaked my brain in fiction that I couldn't enjoy a good poem or an interesting history!)

Grace Everest, Oklahoma, Okla.: "These last two weeks I have had company, scarlet fever; but I didn't forget my Bible verse, quotation, five pages of history, or 30 lines of poetry. Since I couldn't have any of these books in the room—they would have to be destroyed, you know—mamma read to me every day. She kept me with my sophomore class in school, too, by reading each day my botany, ancient history, English and algebra." (There's the kind of mother to have, if anybody is going to make a selection!) "This morning I enrolled at the High School, and as the history teacher was absent, the principal asked me to teach the class. I did, and couldn't down the delight it gave my sophomore self. Papa says he would have given a pretty thing to have seen me from behind the curtain." (That is just like him, to want to get beind a curtain!) "I think it would be a fine way for us to get better acquainted with each other, to write to our fellow-workers. Let's do it. 'The Bronze Vase' promises to be a fine story, but please don't let the orphans go to an orphan asylum, especially if there is any chance of their being mistreated." (You will have to talk to Miss Glory and Mrs. Omer about that; I'd like to know what I have to do with it!) Manie Bayless, Mulkeytown, Ill.: "I am getting better, although I haven't taken up the work again. I love to read the letters and know that others are keeping the rules. If you were up here in Illinois, you could tell winter from summer! There has been a big snow on the ground for nearly a week. Better come up and take a sleigh ride on your birthday. What has become of Madge Masters? I, too, thought you would scare her up, when you went to Arkansas. I will send a dollar to be divided between Charlie and Drusie. I wish I could send more."

Madge Masters (Why! Here she is now!) Fern, Ark.: "How do you like Arkansas by this time, and how does Felix like it? Ozark may be washed away for all I know, as I haven't been there since December, but I hope it is still there, as I expect to go back in March. I am teaching school on Hurricane creek, 15 miles north of Ozark. My cousin, Will Saunders, brought me part of the way up here. When we got to White Rock they told us we could not cross Mulberry creek, but if I just had to get across, there was a man living on the other side who would 'set' me over. We got to Mulberry creek all right and Mr. Fisher 'set' me across, but he said I wouldn't be able to cross Hurricane creek before the next day, as it was so full. By that time I was beginning to wonder what was coming next. The next day they brought me on up here, but as we crossed Hurricane creek the water lacked only two inches of coming over the wagon box. But at last I got to the end of my journey, much to my joy" (and no doubt feeling well set up). "I have a nice school, 31 enrolled, and an average attendance of 20. Some people call this the 'Lost School House,' because you can not see it till you are within about 75 yards of it. Three weeks ago there was a big rain" (yes, I'll be bound there was; we had a big one here last night) "and the creek was so high we couldn't cross to go to school for three days." (Oh, what a holiday!) "I have to cross two branches and two creeks by means of foot logs, going to school, and sometimes they are so slippery we can hardly get over. To-day we had a little excitement. We were all out on the marble ground" (which do you like best, an aggy, or a moon-eyed flint?) "and one of the boys said, 'Look at that smoke! I believe the school house is on fire!' Sure enough, it was. Two of the boys climbed into the loft and knocked off some of the shingles and climbed out on the roof and others handed them water. We got the fire out, and not much damage was done. I am ashamed of the way I have neglected the Av. S. Next summer come down and see where those sweet potatoes grew. I wish you many happy returns of your birthday."

Florence P. Haden, Cocoanut Grove, Fla.: "For five or six years I have been thinking of writing you a letter. Almost from the beginning of the Av. S. I have been interested in it. If you could lie here in the hammock on Brother Garrison's porch and see the beautiful bay with its flitting white sails, and the Royal and Cocoanut palms on the road to the water, with the chain of green islands in the distance, and the steamers passing five or six times a day—

NEEDLESS ALARM.

Here's a poor man coughing away his lungs—at least so his relatives think.

It's cough, cough; hack, hack, hack; all day and sometimes all night.

"Must be consumption," think the alarmed ones.

And of course, there is always a possibility that they may be right.

But in most cases, they're wrong; because Dyspepsia is so much more common than Consumption.

And Dyspepsia causes chronic Cough, just like Consumption.

The dyspeptic cough, it is well to remember, can be quickly cured by Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

No need to be alarmed about it, unless you make up your mind to neglect it.

Then, indeed, you must look out for danger; for the Dyspeptic Cough often grows into a Consumptive Cough if neglected, by the constant lung irritation which it causes.

So the best way is to waste no time, but begin at once the use of these famous little tablets, the timely use of which has saved many a sick person from ending in a consumptive's grave.

Remember, however, if you please, that Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will positively NOT cure Consumption, but prevent it.

Of course, they can always be depended on to cure all the other symptoms of indigestion.

They are a universal cure, for one universal disease.

They cure nothing else; but what they do, they do thoroughly and well.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are the result of the most thorough investigation into the inside causes and the cure, of Indigestion, that has ever been attempted.

They have solved a problem, the answer to which a hundred thousand physicians in America are to-day groping for in vain.

They cure the most severe, long-continued chronic, complicated cases of Indigestion that can be found. They are far ahead of the most modern medical practice, because the most successful physicians of the day, in the cure of diseases of the digestive organs, are using Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets as a basis for their success.

They stoop to Stuart's to conquer.

And Stuart's lift them up, out of the rut.

If, therefore, you are a victim of this dread disease, which counts its victims by the million. Brace up and take new heart, for you cannot fail to cure your trouble, if you will only put your faith in this great remedy, Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

They are positively, frankly, truly, a sure and permanent relief.

well, you'd have to write a new novel, that's all! I want especially to tell you of a dear old lady I saw in Missouri during the World's Fair. I was in a town where one of the horrible wrecks occurred. She was brought to the hotel with her daughter. I had offered to help nurse the wounded, and the doctor sent for me to nurse this couple. During the day I found out that they were members of the church and that the old lady belonged to the Advance Society! Although she was badly bruised and shaken up, and had two ribs broken, she was talking about her Bible verse. I asked her if she would like for me to get a Bible and read it to her. She said she had one in her bag, and would read it herself before the day was over. And she did! I always felt that you ought to know this, for she was past 60 years, I am sure. Of course the Av. S. is particularly for young people, but such an example as this is worth telling, she was so interested in the work. As I advance in years, I realize as never before how many people give up interest in so many things as they grow older. I think for many the Av. S. would give as much pleasure as it does to the young. Feb. 4 I heard the first note from a song bird. It was the cardinal. In a short time there will be a perfect chorus all day long, and the mocking birds sing at night, too. One came right to my dining room door to-day and flew right through the back kitchen. I went out to gather the sapodillas this morning" (something like sweet peas?) "and one sat on a mango tree and almost challenged me for getting his fruit. I have a nice patch of bananas that I should like for you to see." (See? Only see?) "There are over 100 bunches of fruit in all stages of growth. A man, sent from the department at Washington, made me feel very proud by telling me I had four or five of the first varieties of trees to fruit in America, and the finest specimens he had ever seen! If I ever take a trip to Nassau or Cuba, I will write a letter for the Av. S. This is just to show that some one 'way down below Dixie has appreciated and enjoyed the Av. S. work. I used to read the page to my husband and many a good laugh we had over it—when he was too busy to read it himself. When he became too ill to read, he had me read to him most of the time, and I feel it was a great compliment to you that he listened with pleasure to 'Shem' and 'Red Box Clew'—the last book I read to him. I had the pleasure of meeting you with your father and mother once at Pertle Springs. Ever since I was a little girl I have known of your father, through The Christian-Evangelist. I feel so well acquainted with you, and yet I know that you do not remember me." (How I should like to say, "Oh, yes, I do!" But what a pleasure it is to receive such a letter! Look at the effect of Av. S. work—to lead a person to carry her Bible in her bag when going to a World's Fair! After such a proof as that, who will say the Av. S. is afraid to be known by its fruits?)

Ashley S. Johnson, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn.: "Hurrah for you! Never got a dollar with more pleasure! Gratefully yours." I just haven't room for other letters. In two weeks you will hear from Drusie, without fail, and Charlie, too. Mrs. Potts will tell of a little plan for helping Charlie with his education, and we will have a letter from the Mr. Hughes to whom Charlie's mother willed him when she way dying. And Bertha Beesley will tell us whether or not she is married. I received the sweetest birthday letters—and a valentine from Gower, and a printed letter from W. R. Warren, centennial secretary, Pittsburg, Pa. It asks me if I never feel like helping missionary causes, and if so, do I do anything to interest others; and if I can't go to foreign lands, do I help any one who has gone? He asks, "Have you invested enough time, interest and money in real missionaries to feel that you are in partnership with them?" Now, if Brother Warren had invested a little time in reading this Av. S. page he'd know the answers to his questions. He might reply that this was only a printed circular. Of course it is, but it must be as much in earnest as a written letter, or it wouldn't be any use to print it. I don't want to get printed letters addressed, "J. Breckenridge Ellis," asking me if I am interested in missionaries, and why I don't do something to show my interest! It's discouraging! Here I've been working to help Drusie for three years, and a letter comes, asking me such needless questions. Dear me! I acknowledge with pleasure a souvenir remembrance-card from Venice, Italy. Over yonder they call the town "Venezia." Foreigners have such queer ways! By the way, judging from the illustration, Venezia is some wetter than Bentonville. Since I last wrote to you, I have been saddened by the death of one of the first to take interest in the Av. S.—Mrs. M. J. B. Willmott, of Kansas City. Only a few weeks ago she wrote to express interest in "The Woodneys." She was the third person to contribute to our orphan work, and she has several times sent money for our missionary. It is such things as these that we love to remember when our loved ones are no longer with us.

Give the Children a Chance.

Mothers should not allow their love to interfere with the best interests of their children. The career of many a man has been ruined by his mother whose love would not let him leave her when the best opening for future success came to him. Many a girl has refused the man who would have made her happy and comfortable because marriage to him would have taken her far from home, and her mother was not willing to let her go away. Too often girls have married men near home because their mothers wanted them to do so, and have ruined their lives, and men have been kept in a condition of lifelong poverty because their mothers objected to the way which would have led to prosperity and usefulness. Mother-love is one of the very best and most precious gifts of life, but mothers should be careful that their love does not wreck the lives of those whom they would not harm for the world. As a rule, fathers, although they may be as reluctant as the mothers to part with their children, take a larger and more unselfish view of their prospects for life and will not stand in the way of their best interests, but mothers too often do not look beyond the limited circle of the satisfaction of their love.

DR. PRICE'S
Cream Baking Powder

Good Health depends upon the food you eat.

Adds to the healthfulness of all risen flour-foods, while it makes the food lighter, sweeter, finer-flavored, more delicious.

Exercise care in purchasing baking powder to see that you get Dr. Price's, which makes the food more wholesome and at the same time more palatable.

Note—There are many mixtures, made in imitation of good baking powders, which the prudent will avoid. They may be known by their price, being sold for ten to twenty-five cents a pound, or a cent an ounce. They are made with alum, interfere with the healthfulness of the food.

To Every Reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—For some time I have talked to the subscribers of this publication collectively, through the medium of advertisements. I want now to talk to you individually. While you may not be personally afflicted with your eyes yet there is no doubt whatever but that a member of your family or some dear friend or acquaintance is suffering, and in immediate need of treatment. I want to influence you, if possible, to investigate my treatment, a treatment which has saved thousands from blindness and which has met with the unqualified endorsement of the press, the pulpit and the general public. I want to bring to your attention especially, the endorsements of Bro. H. C. Hall, president of the company which publishes the Christian Standard, Lookout and Weekly, and the testimonials of such well-known workers as Rev. Chas. A. Young, editor of the Christian Century; W. D. Cree, of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST; Rev. Bruce Brown, Rev. John W. Allen, Rev. J. H. O. Smith, Rev. Lloyd Darsie, Mrs. (Rev.) S. Rohrer, Mrs. Calla Scott Willard, superintendent of the Bible Study Club of Bethany, Neb., and numerous other persons with whom you are either personally acquainted or of whom you have heard through their great work. All of the above-named have been in a position to personally speak of the modern methods which I have employed for the treatment of the eye. Until comparatively recently, the most ordinary eye troubles were looked upon with terror and misgivings, and well they might be. Crude and most painful methods of treatment were resorted to, and in a majority of all cases, eye surgeons demanded operations of grave danger. No doubt the knife has ruined more eyes than all other causes put together. This so impressed me when I first commenced the study of medicine, that I decided then and there to devote my entire time in an endeavor to improve upon the barbarous and unsuccessful treatments then in vogue. How successful I have been is best attested by the thousands of cured patients scattered over the entire world. Right here, however, I want to impress upon my reader the fact that any one who claims to cure every case of eye trouble, is advertising an impossibility. I claim that the treatments which I employ (the result of my life's labor), are unsurpassed, and I must even say that there are some cases beyond all human help. There are two things to which I particularly attribute my success. In the first place, every case, however trivial, receives my personal attention, and the treatment, if the case is placed in my hands, is under my direct personal supervision until pronounced as cured. The other stepping stone to my success I am quite certain has been equally important. It has been my desire in making a diagnosis of a case to give my honest opinion, and if there is no hope, I candidly say so. You need have no fear, therefore, in referring any case to me for my opinion.

Some physicians, no doubt, have natural ability far above others, and their power of creativeness and observation enables them to devise and originate and apply treatments of superior merit. The precaution to be observed by individuals contemplating submitting their eyes to treatment, is to select the particular skilled oculist whose treatment in individual cases has been most successful; on the other hand, to avoid the oculist and especially the general practitioner and optician whose plans of procedure require long periods of time in acquiring results that are even doubtful to him. To be able to select the proper course of medication and the particular modification of well-tested procedures of cure in every case presented to be cured, requires tact and special ability that comes from intelligent application, scientifically directed study, natural adaptability to the specialty chosen, abundance of perceptive capacity to take advantage of modern discoveries, and creative skill to apply them in specialty eye practice, and an unlimited practical experience of years in the management and treatment of eye diseases, together with a thorough knowledge of the general sciences of medicine and surgery. My life-long experience with eye diseases as an eye specialist, and the reputation that I have attained in America and Europe, certainly can not fail to assure all that they will receive most honorable and skillful attention at my hands.

I am particularly anxious to learn of every case which has suffered unsuccessful treatment or which has been pronounced incurable by physicians or oculists. Do not let your unsuccessful experiments discourage you. Write me a full history of the trouble and I will be pleased to give the matter my personal attention and give you my opinion. THIS OPINION AS WELL AS MY ADVICE WILL COST YOU NOTHING WHATEVER AND WILL NOT PUT YOU UNDER ANY OBLIGATIONS OF ANY KIND OR NATURE. This is a fair proposition. You may rest assured that if I consider your case beyond relief that I will candidly tell you so. I have no false hopes to hold out, neither do I make any promises which I can not fulfill. If, later, you decide to place your case in my hands for treatment, you will find my fees reasonable and within your grasp. GIVEN a basis of Church Federation that guarantees perfect freedom of action to the co-operating bodies to be true to what each believes to be its providential mission, while serving to combine their influence and strength in behalf of moral and social reform, to economize resources by the avoidance of unnecessary overlapping, and to care for the neglected and ungospeled masses of our great cities, thus giving visible expression to the unity that already exists and promoting in the most practicable way the fulfilment of Christ's prayer for the unity of his followers, the religious body that puts itself in opposition to such a movement antagonizes the divine purpose and dooms itself to sectarian limitations, rendering null and void any claim it may have made to be an exponent and advocate of Christian Union.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

J. H. Garrison.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Doubling Our Centennial Membersh

HERBERT J. CORWINE.

Every preacher and congregation among us should have a part in this mighty effort to restore the Christianity of Christ in this present world.

It will go without questioning that the blood of some of our best preachers and churches will be shed in this glorious conflict without just recompense of praise or public mention. Let us manage to give God the glory.

The Moniteau County Christian Co-operation, the executive board of which is composed of members of the California church, has enlisted. I shall endeavor to present the plan and offer some suggestions. We have in contemplation a county camp-meeting, supported by the prayers, presence and purse of the eight congregations of the county.

This meeting in all probability will be held in a tent, the tent to be pitched in the most fruitful community and within close proximity to two or more churches. The board has been fortunate in securing one of the leading evangelists of America for this "county camp-meeting," which will likely be held in the country, 12 miles south of California. After the first "upheaval" the time and place of the revival shall be determined at the county convention by a majority vote of the delegates sent to said convention by the various congregations, thus stimulating the convention, in fact, assuring the success of such an enterprise. For instance, if Shiloh should want the "big meeting" located at or near her church she must carry the proposition in the convention next preceding the revival. By this plan of co-operation the Disciples of Moniteau county hope to increase their number from 1,000 to 2,000 by 1909. The leading congregation of the county must take the initiative, and in a large measure assume the responsibility of such an undertaking. Is it not true that the leading members of the town and city church come from the country? Were not your leading spirits in prayer-meeting, Sunday-school, C. W. B. M., aid society, etc., baptized by an old veteran of the cross in the flowing stream or quiet pond hard by the little church on the crossroads? If so, why not manifest our appreciation in a way which will make it possible for us to receive other great and good men and women from the country church. I send this one way to solve the country church problem. It is simply a matter of reciprocity.

What has Callaway county done for Fulton? What wondrous works Fulton could do for Callaway by helping them secure a Brooks, Harlow, Yeuell or Small for a camp-meeting, to be held between Hams Prairie, Mokane, Dixie and New Bloomfield. Take Columbia and Boone county, Mexico and Audrain, Moberly and Randolph, Carrollton and Carroll. Brethren, keep your eye on Moniteau county and Allen Wilson along about next August.

By the way, we have solved the prayer-meeting problem. Write for particulars. We had more men at prayer-meeting last Wednesday night than women. Since the triumph over the monotonous grind of a few faithful souls we are made firm in the conviction that the midweek service occupies a chief and important part in the affairs of the church. Why not add the prayer-meeting to the list of the many things to be redeemed and set in motion by 1909? We need more evangelists, more sympathy for evangelists, more spirituality among evangelists.

I have taken it for a long time, and hope to be able to have it as long as I am permitted to stay on earth. It has afforded me much comfort and satisfaction in my journey to the better land—the land of Beulah. I trust your life may be prolonged many years to do good. I send best wishes for the success of the movement to greatly increase the circulation of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

IDA W. HARRISON.

It is Preposterous.

Its Ways are Those of Peace.

Visiting ministers say that we are the most harmonious congregation they know of. I tell them the principal reason is that we use the Christian Publishing Company's literature, which is unity to the core.

Asherville, Kan. A. N. NOELL.

A Safe Guardian.

The young man to whom I am sending THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is a bright, ambitious fellow taking a post graduate course in the Yale Divinity School, and will make his mark in the world by doing great good, if he stays on the right track. Do not fail to send him the paper as soon as you get my check. H. M. BROWN.

The Paper of Progress.

I am very glad you are to help THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Our brotherhood needs a religious magazine to hammer away at the union idea. There was a time when good people opposed kerosene lamps; then they were against electric lights; now they frown on our federation. Get THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST into 100,000 homes—and here's to you! J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

One of the pre-centennial achievements fondly hoped for is a greatly increased attendance upon our midweek prayer-meetings, the increased piety of our people resulting therefrom, and the doubling of our church membership. To those interested in such matters we commend the adjacent article by Herbert J. Corwine, who is doing a noble part for the attainment of these results.

That Awful "Blue Pencil."

I feel like saying, "God bless THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST," but I fear you would abridge it. JOHN BALLINGER.

We appreciate the joke. Plenty of room is made in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for spirited news, instruction in righteousness and devotional reading only by constant vigilance and vigorous use of that same blue pencil, however.

A Federationist.

With disgust I have read the editorials opposing the plans of federation as set forth in the great New York meeting. I have taken the ——— for many years. From what quotations of yours I have seen in it you seem in hearty accord with the federation movement, and if this be so I will subscribe for your paper. I regard that New York conference as the forerunner of the greatest events that have yet transpired in the Protestant world.

H. C. BURROUGHS.

This brother has seen what thousands of Disciples who have been a little puzzled as to their proper course, by reason of the attacks made on the New York conference, will yet see—that church federation is a divinely appointed step in the process of consummating that Christian unity for which our fathers have contended for the past century, nearly.

Current Events

The Senate.

Political interest at present centers in the Senate. The statehood bill comes to a vote on Friday. The Foraker amendment provides that the consolidation of New Mexico with Arizona and Indian Territory with Oklahoma shall be effective only when accepted by each of the present territories voting separately. It is surmised that Arizona and New Mexico together would give a majority in favor of joint statehood, but that Arizona in a separate vote will very likely reject it. The adoption of this amendment will introduce two chances for the failure of the joint statehood project. In the first place, the House may refuse to concur in the amendment and the whole measure fail. In the second place, if the House accepts the amendment and the bill is passed, Arizona may reject the offer in the hope of separate statehood later on. (See further statement elsewhere on this page.)

The fight on the railroad rate bill in the Senate is also coming to a focus. To the passage of this bill, the President has bent all his energies and his concentration of purpose greatly strengthens its chance of passage. In putting the bill in charge of Senator Tillman there was an apparent attempt on the part of some of the influential Republican insurgents to weaken Republican sympathy for it by making it appear to be a Democratic measure. But Mr. Tillman is behaving himself exceptionally well and the device seems unlikely to accomplish its purpose. The success of the bill, however, is still very doubtful. The Senate does not want to pass it and if it does so it will be under a species of compulsion.

Spelling Reform.

The question of spelling reform will not down. So many of us never did know how to spell, and so many more—editors and teachers especially—are daily affronted by perversions of English orthography that any project to simplify the subject has many advocates. The department of superintendents of the National Education Association, recently in session at Louisville, Ky., adopted a resolution favoring simplification in the spelling of twelve common words. The resolution was in the form of an overture to the National Education Association recommending that in the publications of the association the following new spellings be introduced: "Bizness," for business; "enuf," for enough; "fether," for feather; "mesure," for measure; "plesure," for pleasure; "red," for read; "ruf," for rough; "trauf," for trough; "thru," for through; "tuf," for tough; "tung," for tongue; "yung," for young.

It will be only a step from the use of this new orthography in the official publications of the association to the teaching of the same in the schools and this may be an entering wedge for a more far-reaching reform. But it is hard to change the spelling of a language deliberately and in cold blood. Spanish spelling was slightly changed not many years ago, but the alterations were trivial compared with those which will be needed if English is ever to be made even approximately "fonetik." The trouble with English is that it solidified too soon. It is a splendid language almost spoiled by being taken off the stove before it was quite done. In good old Tudor days the language was in a fluid state and spelling was largely a matter of individual taste. It was gradually becoming more and more simple. Spenser was simpler than Chaucer and Shakespeare was simpler than Spenser. But the great Shakespeare and the equally great King James version of the Bible acquired the force of authorities for orthography before the language was really ready for authorities. After that, nobody dared to spell otherwise than according to the rule of these authorities. Then began the reign of dictionaries and the chains of our slavery to unphonetic spelling were riveted fast. The apocopation of the final "me" from program and the elimination of the "u" from honor are almost the only achievements of the past century in the direction of simplicity. Perhaps we shall never be wholly free, even with the aid of the N. E. A., but until we are there will be a serious obstacle in the way of making English the universal language.

General Schofield.

General John M. Schofield, last of the civil war commanders, died at his home in St. Augustine, Fla., March 4, at the age of 75. At West Point he was a classmate of Generals Sheridan, Hood and McPherson. He was for a time professor of physics in Washington University, St. Louis. At the outbreak of the war he re-entered active service and became major-general of volunteers. He was secretary of war under Grant, was at the head of the military academy at West Point for five years and was in command of the United States army from 1888 until his retirement as lieutenant-general in 1895. His history of the war and of his own military experiences was published about ten years ago under the title, "Forty-six Years in the Army."

The Statehood Bill.

Some preliminary remarks are above on the statehood bill. The Senate duly passed the House joint statehood bill, with all the provisions relating to Arizona and New Mexico stricken out. Senator Foraker's amendment was accepted. As amended by the Senate, the bill provides for the creation of the state of Oklahoma out of Oklahoma and Indian territories under the adoption of a constitution. The state is allowed the usual quota of executive, judicial and legislative officials, two United States Senators and five members of the national House of Representatives. A constitutional convention, with 110 members, 55 of which are to be chosen by each of the territories comprising the state, is provided for, and all male citizens or male Indians 21 years of age are made eligible to membership in it. There is an especial provision protecting the Indians in their rights and continuing the prerogatives of the national government to control their affairs. The sale of intoxicating liquors in what is now Indian Territory is prohibited for 21 years, and longer unless the constitution is changed.

Sections 16 and 36 of each township of land in Oklahoma are set aside for the benefit of the common school system, as is also 5 per cent of the proceeds of the sale of public lands. There is an appropriation of $5,000,000 from the national treasury for the benefit of the schools. Provision is made for the support of higher education and charitable institutions. Two districts for United States courts, one in Oklahoma and the other in Indian Territory, are provided for. Guthrie is made the temporary seat of government, but the House provision continuing it in that capacity until 1915 was eliminated.

Storms of the Week.

The past week brought tidings of an unusual number of destructive and fatal storms. At Meridian, Miss., a tornado destroyed about sixteen blocks of the city, causing twenty-one deaths, between two hundred and three hundred injuries, and a property loss of over one million dollars.

A belated report has been received concerning a great storm about three weeks ago in the Southern Pacific ocean. The scene of its greatest destructiveness was the Society and Tuamotu Islands, where a tremendous tornado caused inundations of the low lying islands, as well as great destruction by the wind itself. It is impossible to estimate with accuracy the loss of either life or property, but some of the reports declare that the number of fatalities will be in the thousands and the property loss well up in the millions.

On the west coast of Norway a fleet of fishing vessels out of Trondhjem was caught in a severe storm and only sixty out of three hundred vessels have since been heard from. Many are known to have been wrecked and probably most of them have been lost with all on board. The crews of the fleet numbered about 1,300.

About 800 Finnish fishermen, including the families of many of them, are adrift on ice cakes in the Baltic sea. In winter many of them live in huts built on the ice many miles from shore. A sudden breaking up of the ice carried 1,000 persons out to sea, and but 200 of them have been rescued.

The Cannon Boom.

It is asserted by the political wise men that Speaker Cannon's presidential boom will be launched at the coming Illinois state Republican convention. The report seems credible. The speaker is, in a sense, the leading man of his party, second only to the President. The immense power wielded by the speaker of the House in recent years must suggest immediately to any holder of that office that his next step is into the presidency. "Uncle Joe" Cannon has acquired a large degree of personal popularity throughout the nation at large. He has always been singularly indifferent to political prestige in his own state, or singularly unsuccessful in its attainment and in spite of several efforts, has never been able to get into the Senate. But if the party at large insists, Illinois would doubtless accept the honor and announce Speaker Cannon as her "favorite son."

Christian Union: A Historical Study.

I. The Apostolic Age.

8. Summing Up Results of Our Study Thus Far.

Before we pass on to a brief study of the Post-Apostolic Age, let us pause long enough to gather up some of the principal results of our study of the first century, as respects the unity of the church of that period.

1. The Church of the Apostolic Age was one and undivided. It existed in numerous local assemblies or churches, some of them widely separated, geographically, but all constituting the one Church of the one living and true God. There were no denominations, in our modern sense of that word, the members of which regarded themselves as belonging to separate and independent bodies, differing from each other in their bases of fellowship and conditions of membership. A member in good standing in any one local church was, by virtue of that fact, eligible to membership in every other church.

2. The bond of unity in that age was personal faith in and allegiance to the Lord Jesus Christ. No other faith than this was required as a condition of church membership and fellowship. "What think ye of Christ; whose Son is he?" was the great and decisive question of that age. Whoever confessed him, as Peter did, as "the Christ, the Son of the living God," and was willing to turn away from his sins, was straightway baptized into the name of Christ, and numbered with the saved. This was the simple creed, and this the simple method of initiation. There were only two ordinances—baptism and the Lord's supper—the one commemorating Christ's death for our sins, and the other his burial and resurrection from the dead. Baptism symbolized also the believer's death to sin, and he was henceforth expected to "walk in newness of life." It was in view of these facts that Paul could say, "There is one body and one Spirit, even as also ye were called in one hope of your calling; one Lord; one faith; one baptism; one God and Father of all, who is over all, and through all, and in all" (Eph. 4:4-6).

3. The fruit of this common faith in a common Lord was the love these disciples bore to one another. Jesus had taught them the "new commandment," that they should love each other even as he had loved them. This was the great distinguishing feature of the Christians of that age. "By this shall men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another" (John 13:35). The apostles repeated the instruction of Jesus in this respect. "Love is the fulfilling of the law," said Paul. "We know that we have passed out of death into life," said John, "because we love the brethren" (1 John 3:14). Love for one another was connected with faith in Jesus, as constituting the divine requirement of men: "And this is his commandment, that we should believe in the name of his Son Jesus Christ and love one another, even as he gave us commandment" (1 John 3:23). "Above all things being fervent in your love among yourselves; for love covereth a multitude of sins," said Peter (1 Pet. 4:8). The apostles are frequently spoken of as preserving unity by their official authority; but it is clear that they relied not upon their authority to promote and perpetuate unity, but upon the bond of allegiance to Christ and love for one another. They did indeed serve to preserve unity in the Church of the first century, but it was by refusing to lord it over men's faith and by their wise emphasis upon the things which unite.

4. As to organic unity, the Church was conceived of as a divine organism—the body of Christ—of which he was the living head. All who received life through Christ were regarded as being a part of that divine organism. That was the ideal Church of Paul. There was no one external ecclesiastical organization with grades of officials, from lower to higher, culminating in a supreme earthly head, whether that head be considered a pope, a council or an assembly. The self-governing congregations appointed bishops and deacons to look after their spiritual and temporal needs, and evangelists to carry the good news into the regions beyond, and that was about all the ecclesiastical machinery of that age. And yet, the union of the Church in that age was a visible union. Real, vital union among believers, such as results from vital union with Christ, never fails to manifest itself. Love can not be hidden. It does not conceal itself under the form of separation, harsh and unkind criticism, strife and open opposition, and plead an internal, unseen and spiritual love which does not deign to come to the light! Real unity unites. It abhors division as nature does a vacuum. It shows itself in mutual counsel, sympathy and co-operation. If one love the Lord with all his heart, can he hate another one who also loves him and is seeking to extend his reign? But if he love his brother, who also loves Christ, will he not unite with him in honoring their common Master by seeking others to love and serve him? The unity of the early Church, in spite of its diversity of opinions, manifested itself in avoiding divisions and in holding steadfastly to the "one Lord, one faith and one baptism." It showed itself in brotherly love (except in the case of certain factious spirits who loved their traditions and personal interests more than their Lord), and in such co-operation as was possible at that time. It triumphed over the personal preferences and partial views of truth, which said, "I am of Paul," "I of Apollos," and "I of Cephas," and brought all at last to "glory not in men," but in Christ, and to give him the pre-eminence in all things.

We go not back to the Apostolic Age for its types of actual Church or individual Christian life, for except in rare instances these were infantile and imperfect; but we do well to go back to that creative period for its splendid ideals, yet to be realized, and for those inspired and inspiring truths and principles, which, applied to our own times, will give us a united Church and a nobler Christian civilization.

Federation the Death of Sectarianism.

Our confidence in the ability of truth to take care of itself in any encounter with error, if we may be permitted to say it, has been a determining factor in our attitude toward all the questions that from time to time have risen among us for discussion. Historical criticism of the Bible has never alarmed us, because we have not doubted that whatever error there might be in it would be overthrown in the process of investigation, and that whatever truth there was in it would prove a blessing to Christianity and the Church. This confidence has been abundantly justified thus far, and there is much to be hoped for yet. When the question came up of establishing Bible chairs and Bible colleges under the very shadow of our state universities, we gave it our hearty advocacy, believing that any teaching of ours that could not stand the searchlight and critical examination of a university center could readily be dispensed with.

Now such is our confidence in the impregnability of our essential position as a religious movement, and in its adaptation to the needs of the religious world to-day, that when the question arose as to our entering into more systematic co-operation with our brethren of the evangelical Protestant bodies we had but one question to ask: Can we do so with perfect freedom to carry out what we believe to be our providential mission? On investigation we found that every other religious body demanded the same freedom and that federation would be absolutely out of the question without the guarantee of such freedom of action. This decided, it was apparent that we had nothing to lose, and that Christianity had much to gain by ceasing our warfare upon each other, carried on largely in ignorance of each other's real spirit and teaching, and entering into such co-operation as is practicable in doing our Master's work, where we would come to know each other and to learn from each other, and so to realize the unity for which Jesus prayed, not by debates, but by working together and getting closer to our common Lord.

If we had less confidence in the inherent strength of our position to stand being brought into comparison with others, or less confidence in our brethren to be true to what is essential and vital in our own plea while co-operating with others, we might oppose federation and stand out for isolation. In fact, if we believed in the perpetuation of denominationalism as the normal state of the Church, and were opposed to real, visible Christian union, we would oppose federation with all our might. For nothing can be more apparent to those who have eyes to see than that the more Christian people of different religious bodies co-operate in doing the Lord's work, the less there is of denominational arrogance and sectarian bitterness, and the more united the people are in feeling and fellowship. So manifest is this that we do not expect the ultra sectarian and extreme denominationalists in any of the religious bodies to favor this federation movement. Isolation is the life and co-operation is the death of sectarianism.

The growth of the Christian union sentiment in the last quarter of a century is recognized by all. But this is the period of the greatest intermingling and co-operation of the different religious bodies through Y. M. C. A. work, union Sunday-school work, Christian Endeavor and other inter-denominational movements. If we are capable of learning from the events transpiring before our very eyes we can not fail to see how God is unitizing his people, and by what method he expects to bring about their complete unification.

What "Churches of Christ" are Meant?

Brother B. F. Shoemaker, of Alburnett, Iowa, asks for an explanation of a statement in our editorial in our issue of February 22, entitled "Are They Scriptural?" in which we expressed our belief that "most, if not all, of the churches mentioned"—that is, the churches of the various evangelical Protestant bodies—"are far more loyal to Christ's teaching and spirit, as a whole, than many of the churches calling themselves 'Churches of Christ.'" Our brother says: "This is, to say the least, a strong reflection on churches of Christ, and we are all uncertain how many, or which, churches are included in the statement."

This uncertainty, we think, does not arise so much from any ambiguity in the article as from some comments which have been made upon it in another publication. The connection in which the statement occurs makes it very clear that we referred to the class of churches calling themselves "Churches of Christ," in contradistinction to the Christian Church or Churches, and which claim as their leaders such men as the editors of the "Octographic Review" and the "Firm Foundation"—two sectarian papers that are doing all in their power to divide the brotherhood on a few small hobbies which they are riding. These leaders, and the churches which they inspire, seem to us to be guilty of more grievous departures from the whole spirit and teaching of Christ than the other churches referred to, and in this judgment we are sure the vast majority of our readers will concur. A Scriptural name is a good thing, but to make it a substitute for the spirit of Jesus Christ, for brotherly love, for the spirit of unity, and devotion to missionary work, and for that charity without which all our names and creeds and practices are but as "a sounding brass and clanging cymbal," is an utter perversion of New Testament Christianity.

The Christian-Evangelist and the Christian Standard.

We owe a word of explanation to our readers. Against the protest of many of our friends we have attempted to carry on a fraternal discussion with the "Christian Standard" in the interest of a clear understanding of a living issue which has arisen among us. Those who, it would seem, understood better than we the animus of the present management of that paper warned us that it would conduct no such discussion as we proposed. The truth of this statement has become increasingly manifest for some time. But in its issue of March 3, which has just come to our notice, the editor absolutely throws to the winds all pretense of fairness and justice and so grossly misrepresents The Christian-Evangelist, and all others who stand with it, that we can not, with any sort of self-respect, pay any further attention to its utterances. It may be some melancholy compensation for the failure of our well-meant effort to show that editors could disagree, and yet conduct a fair and courteous discussion, that the "Christian Standard" has revealed its real spirit and aim, so that brethren need not longer be deceived by its claims.

Notes and Comments.

A sister objecting to the position of The Christian-Evangelist on the subject of federation, says: "I am once and for all for real Christian union, but never for anything less." That is to say, she is in favor of trees, but opposed to acorns and small saplings! She is in favor of the "full corn in the ear," but opposed to the blade and the undeveloped ear of corn! She is in favor of men and women, but opposed to boys and girls! She is in favor of the end, but opposed to the beginning and all the middle stages! She is in favor of a full-grown Christian, but opposed to babes in Christ that are growing toward maturity! No, she is not opposed to any of these things. She is opposed only to making the first of all these things a substitute for the second. And hence she is opposed to making federation—an imperfect form of union, but the best that is possible just now—a substitute for Christian union as taught in the New Testament. And in that we are perfectly agreed.

An Iowa reader writes:

"Union in Christ is God's plan. Federation is of man. I am in favor of Christian union as taught in the New Testament and unalterably opposed to church federation as outlined by the New York conference that smacks of popery."

No one ought to be "unalterably" opposed to anything whose nature and spirit he does not understand. This well-meaning brother does not seem to know that the basis of federation proposed by the New York conference declared for "union in Christ" as the only possible basis of co-operation! He does not even know that it disclaims any authority whatever over the co-operating bodies, but thinks it "smacks of popery"! By the way, is it not a most remarkable fact that of all our brethren who attended the Inter-Church Conference in New York, old and young, easterners and westerners, conservatives and progressives, not one of them, so far as we have seen or heard, has raised a note of objection either to the spirit or aim of the conference? All its critics are from those who were not there, and have not taken pains to inform themselves as to the proceedings of that history-making assembly! That is a most significant fact.

"Federation is of man!" exclaim a number of the opponents of this modern method of co-operation. So is the Reformation which we plead, and which we believe to be of great value to the world. But we believe the men who inaugurated the movement were led by the Spirit of God. So we doubt not the divine Spirit is behind this movement to bring the different churches into closer co-operation in promoting his kingdom. Neither the devil nor sectarianism has any interest in or sympathy with this movement to get the different religious bodies to cease fighting each other and to combine their strength in fighting "the world, the flesh and the devil." Satan divides churches, but he is not in the business of uniting them or promoting their fraternal co-operation. That is God's work. Is there not grave reason why brethren should cease opposing this movement for federation, lest haply they be found fighting against God?

Whoever expected to see the experiment of good old King Canute repeated in our day? The flattering courtiers of this ancient king made him believe that he possessed divine power, and that he could by his command resist the incoming tide of the ocean! He tried it, but was compelled to beat a retreat before the heedless tide that kept coming in in spite of his majesty! Now, a modern Canute puts himself in front of the incoming tide of Christian unity and co-operation, and commands, "Back! ye advancing waves!" But these waves, having their impulse in the heart of God and in his infinite purpose, continue to advance and will continue until sectarianism, and all its evil brood of envy, division, strife and bitterness, shall be swept from the face of God's earth. "And let all the people say, Amen!"

Editor's Easy Chair.

During our stay at Albuquerque, we made a day's visit to the Indian pueblo, Isleta, 13 miles south of Albuquerque, on the west bank of the Rio Grande River, and on the line of the Santa Fe Railroad. It is the largest of the Tanoan pueblos, having a population of over 1,000. As one winds through its crooked, narrow streets, between rows of low adobe houses, flat-topped, with ladders leading up from the outside to the roof, and notes the costume of its inhabitants, and sees the women picturesquely clad carrying their water jars on their heads, he feels himself transported to the ancient past and looking at scenes which belong to other lands and other times. We persuaded one of the native women whom we met on the street by giving her a small coin to permit us to take her picture. She is probably one of the belles of the town. We present her picture here. Our readers will have no difficulty in distinguishing her from an American lady who was with us and who came in the range of our kodak as we took the snapshot. The old church here claims to be very ancient, and looks it, both without and within. It is Roman Catholic, of course, and all the Indians and Mexicans hereabout are devout Catholics. We were permitted to enter several of the houses, and found them scrupulously neat. We took a number of interesting pictures, one of which, taken from the top of an ash heap which in centuries of use had made quite a hill, commands a good view of the village, showing the upper part of the old church which has probably resounded to the chant of priests for at least 250 years. The women make pottery and the men cultivate their little patches of ground in the rich bottom of the Rio Grande. They are not disturbed by the questions of statehood, higher criticism or federation, but no doubt life among them has its simple joys and sorrows, its comedies and tragedies, even as among others.

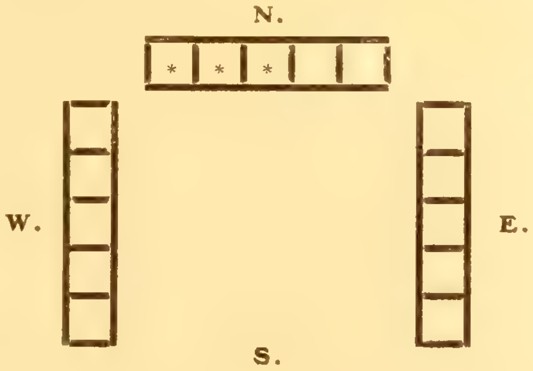
On Monday morning, March 5, we returned from Albuquerque to Santa Fe, whither the college man of our party had preceded us a few days, and where he has decided to pitch his tent, literally, not figuratively, for the year or more that it may be necessary for him to remain in this climate. The high altitude makes it a delightful summer climate and the pure dry air, laden with the fragrance of the cedar, the pine and the pinion, makes it Nature's own sanitarium. At this writing we are quartered at the ranch of Mr. M. J. Nagel, a German florist and landscape gardener, mentioned in a former communication. His place is located about two miles a little east from south of Santa Fe, at the foot of the Sangre de Cristo range of mountains, and is about 200 feet above the city, and looks down upon it. The stone house of one story consists of 15 rooms, built about a rectangular court, as indicated in the following diagram:



The starred rooms indicate our quarters which, with a porch in front, looking south, command a wide view of as beautiful a valley as one can find anywhere, rimmed with distant mountains on the far southern horizon. This valley, yet in a wild, uncultivated state, but covered with young cedar and pinion, has the appearance of a magnificent orchard, which it will one day be, under the transforming influence of irrigation and industry. About this beautiful valley stand, like angel sentinels guarding it, the snow-capped peaks of two or three mountain ranges. Surely one may rest awhile in contentment amid such scenes and feel himself face to face with God in such surroundings.

This has been what they call out here a typical Santa Fe day—clear, bright and warm in the sunshine, with enough nip in the air to make a light overcoat feel comfortable. Between the hours devoted to literary work we keep out of doors as much as possible. This forenoon we walked up one of arroyos, or canyons, leading up through the foothills into the mountains, finding much to admire in the blue of the sky, the red and green of the mountains and the varied colored stone over which we walked. The crystalline air makes distant objects seem near. This afternoon we drove into the city to post our literary output and to get the mail. And such a mail as it was for an Editor seeking rest! But most of the letters were kind, and for that fact we are grateful. And then we have been glancing through a bundle of papers forwarded to us. How excited some of the brethren are becoming over the peaceful and fraternal subject of federation! It is like quarreling over the subject of whether we ought not to love one another more! Some papers have a genius for leading their readers into a tantrum on almost any subject that requires sober, deliberate and fraternal consideration. And then they deprecate the harm such discussion might do to our missionary interests! There has been no discussion in The Christian-Evangelist that is going to interfere in the slightest with our missionary work. Our readers all believe in both foreign and home missions, and they do not propose to allow either of these interests to be sidetracked by the discussion of any living issue. They believe in closer co-operation among Christians, because they want to see missionary work done on a larger scale.

How glorious is night out here on these New Mexican plains! We have just been out under the glittering dome of heaven, which filled our soul with awe, and with humility. The moon, three-fourths full, has climbed above the eastern mountains and fills all the valley with a flood of silvery light. The stars of larger magnitude shine out of their far depths with a mild radiance, which rebukes our fretfulness and impatience. Yonder North Star, from time beyond date, without speech or language, has guided the traveler on the trackless desert and the sailor on the pathless sea. These will shine on and make glorious other nights through the unborn centuries of the future, when the hand that pens these lines, and all the countless tribes that now live upon the earth, shall have returned to dust and sleep in forgotten graves. "O, why should the spirit of mortal be proud?" Why should we be arrogant or contentious in our little day over matters about which we know so little? Let the solemn night, with its silent glory, teach us humility, patience and reverence. How still it has become! The cry of a lonely coyote was just heard, but no noise comes to us from the city whose lights glimmer in the distance. It is a calm, glorious night, and this high altitude makes us closer neighbors of the stars. Under the starlit dome we shall lie down to sleep under the ever watchful care of the Father of lights.

The Fundamental Need of Evangelism*

By J. M. Rudy

I have heard that in a revival meeting in the state of Kentucky, while one of the leaders in this reformation was in the midst of a sermon, a stalwart man arose in the center of the house and beckoned earnestly to the preacher.

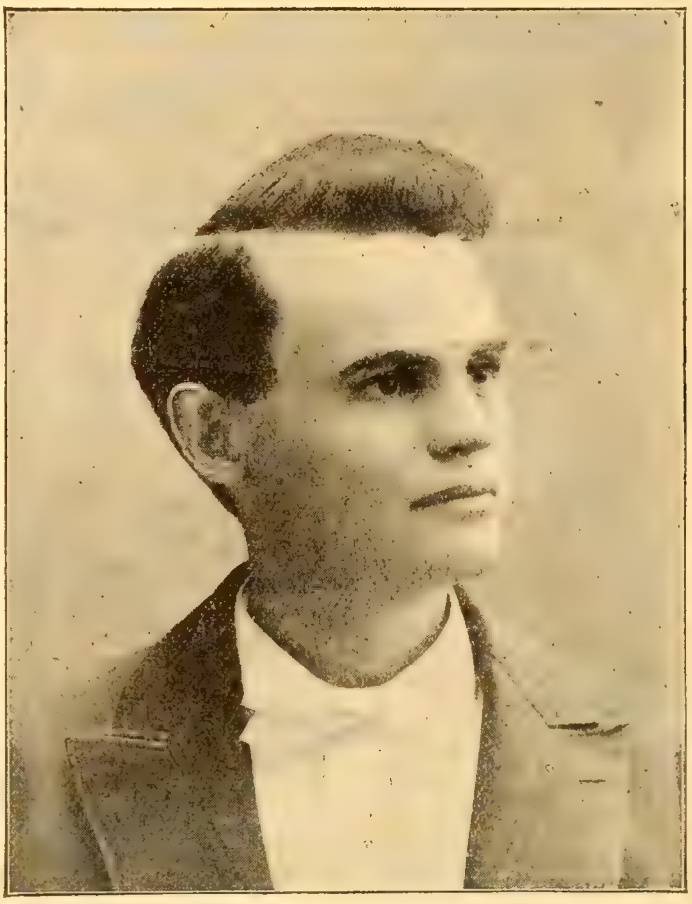
The speaker ceased at once, and the gentleman in the center of the audience said: "Sirs, I believe, with all my heart, that Jesus Christ is the Son of God." This was apostolic and should be common among us as a people. We are only too apt to forget that confessions are for the lips of the confessors instead of the preachers, and that conversion is not an experience brought about by human manipulation. In every true conversion there is something taking place for which God and God alone can account. Said Alexander Campbell: "I have no confidence in any conversion which is not begun, carried on, and completed by the Holy Spirit." "You hath he quickened who were dead in trespasses and sins." The little boy who thought to render merciful assistance to the complaining chick which seemed unable to break its prison of shell found at last that his help had not only hindered but had destroyed life. Let the Church—and this means teachers, preachers, evangelists, members—look anxiously to the matter of furnishing the conditions in which, through which, and under which God promises to work mightily; then let the Church treat the Holy Spirit as if he knows his own mind and mission and work.

If the Holy Spirit should express his opinion of the gratuitous efforts of some evangelists to explain why and how he, the Spirit, carries on his work, we suspect such evangelists would, like one of old, cry out:

"I will lay mine hand upon my mouth," that is, if you can conceive of such humility coming to the hearth of one who presumes to dictate the methods of the Spirit of God.

The evangelist can never too deeply impress the heart of a sinful man that, through the assent of his own will in conversion God enters his life and rules and masters that life. It is the coming of a personal sinner into a new personal relationship. Because it is this, the kingdom of God is very dangerously represented, if not really misrepresented, when it is put on a blackboard at the top of a little stairway with its three steps—faith, repentance, and baptism. When James and John came pleading to be exalted, one at the right, the other at the left, of their Lord, Jesus did not draw the picture of a ladder with its three rounds leading into the kingdom. The kingdom of God is not a thing of stairways and steps, bars and circles and squares and black and blue and green and red lines on a map.

Beloved, the kingdom of God cometh not by chalk and blackboard demonstration or representation. Painted muslin is a good thing, but when it comes to teaching people by charts and maps the full meaning of entrance into the kingdom of God, it is too much like making love by the rule of three or running courtships on schedule time. Everybody who has had experience knows that this is impossible. Matters of the heart, the soul, the spirit, are to be gotten, not through outward pictorial illustration, but through inward experience.



J. M. Rudy.

"Can ye drink of the cup that I drink of, and be baptized with the baptism that I am baptized with?" The door into the kingdom is the person of Jesus Christ and the grasping of him through the obedience of faith is a profoundly vital experience. When it is not this, it is nothing, speaking spiritually.

By constantly citing and picturing how they rendered obedience who listened to the apostles preach and urging their form of obedience as a reason for our obedience to-day is, to say the least, a dangerous procedure. What we see in forms of obedience constitute but the outward aspects of conversion. If we are not careful as a people in our evangelism, we shall invite the serious charge of being more concerned about just what they did and how they did in the Acts of the Apostles than we are about the awful need of what they did, and the deep reason for such obedience. We must urge something more than historic illustrations as reasons for present surrender to Jesus Christ. We have a more important obstacle in the way than mere ignorance of what the New Testament confession or baptism is. We must not forget that there is a New Testament repentance to be translated into a present day experience. Men and women are not dead because they have never confessed and never been baptized. They are dead to God and to holiness because they are in sin, and this fact necessitates the power of God in regeneration through the Holy Spirit. Let the evangelist who represents us beware of trying to convert simply by means of New Testament examples of obedience without a deep, heart-searching conviction of sin.

The speed of the cannon ball and the distance it travels depend upon the force with which it is thrust from the cannon's mouth. The service that a new convert renders, his devotion and his steadfastness, depend in no small measure upon the spiritual impetus received at his conversion. The problem of the evangelist is therefore not simply to get people to make a start, but to get them to make such a start as will make the Christian life fascinating and captivating life.

Old Ulysses found the lotus berry of ancient Egypt so sweet that all the sweets of his native country were no longer sweet to him, and while at Troy he longed for that which had made him forget all else. The convert is to sing, and to continue to sing, out of the depth of his experience of the new life in Christ,

E'er since by faith I saw the stream
Thy flowing wounds supply,
Redeeming love has been my theme,
And shall be till I die.

Where there is no heart-change there will be no life-change, for out of the heart are the issues of life.

But there is a change.

I heard the voice of Jesus say:
Come unto me and rest;
Lay down, thou weary one, lay down
Thy head upon my breast.

I came to Jesus as I was,
Weary and worn and sad,
I found in him a resting-place,
And he has made me glad.

I heard the voice of Jesus say:
I am this dark world's light,
Look unto me, thy morn shall rise,
And all thy day be bright.

I looked to Jesus and I found
In him my star, my sun;
And in that light of life I'll walk,
Till traveling days are done.

After the method—the message. It is Balfour, the English statesman and scholar, who has reminded us that there are thought-zones; that men who live in these zones or belts, all unconsciuos to themselves, are affected by the prevailing mental mood. They seem to be as little responsible for subscribing to certain doctrines and theories as they are for the processes by which their food is digested. And is there not much truth in this observation? The providences and processes of God seem to go on as it were beneath the surface of human consciousness. Again and again has history illustrated

FEDERATION — A Symposium

Some Questions on Federation.

The following letter was sent out by the Editors to a number of brethren, and we begin in this issue the publication of their replies.

In view of the discussion which has been in progress among us for some time on the question of the federation of the churches, THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST desires to publish a symposium on the subject for the benefit of its readers, and with the purpose of molding public sentiment rightly on this important issue which now confronts us. Will you kindly, therefore, favor us with brief answers to the following questions which seem to us to embrace the points in discussion:

1. Defining church federation as an agreed-upon method of co-operation in those things which the co-operating churches hold in common, and in which each co-operating Christian body has full freedom to be true to its convictions of truth and duty, are we not, as advocates of Christian union, logically committed to the federation movement as the next practicable step in the direction of the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for the unity of his disciples, and as a practical manifestation of the degree of unity which already exists?

2. Do you approve of the Basis of Federation submitted to the evangelical churches of America for their approval, by the late Inter-Church Conference in New York City, as presenting a practicable plan for such co-operation?

By N. M. Ragland.

1. As evolution was the great word in science during the last half of the nineteenth century, so federation is the great word in Christianity in the morning of this twentieth century. The body of people known as the Disciples of Christ must assume some attitude to this effort looking to a better understanding and a closer union among all Christians who hold so much in common. There are three attitudes that may be assumed—apathy, antipathy and sympathy. Many good people, no doubt, have not seriously considered the subject, and are therefore indifferent. Others, through mistaken ideas as to the spirit, the purpose and the method of the proposed federation, are antagonistic. Certainly a majority of the intelligent, spiritually minded and representative Disciples of Christ are in hearty sympathy with church federation as it was so admirably defined by the New York conference. It is a primary step in the direction of the reunion of Christendom, a consummation that the Disciples of Christ have been steadfastly advocating almost a century. The Disciples are bound by the very principles and the practices that make them a distinct body among the people of God, to give hospitable welcome to the federation movement. The position, the history, the traditions and the future usefulness of the Disciples of Christ alike demand that they foster and encourage every effort to bring all Christians into closer unity and sympathy both in work and worship. This is evidently the purpose of church federation. Every effort to oppose it leads to still further division.

2. The proposed basis of federation is one that self-respecting religious bodies can accept. It is reasonable, consistent and satisfactory. If worked out in the spirit of our Lord it will eventually lead to the unity for which he prayed. Opposition and unseemly controversy among brethren will lead in the opposite direction. It is a time for serious and prayerful thought. Those of us who are on the firing line know that the hearts of the people who are bearing the heat and the burden of the day beat in sympathy with this movement to unite all Christians in an effort to provide Gospel privileges for those who sit in darkness and in the region and the shadow of death, both in our own land and in the lands beyond the seas.

Fayetteville, Ark.

By A. W. Kokendoffer.

It is regrettable that the first great cooperate advance, made by the denominations toward Christian union, should provoke among us such invidious suspicion and such bitter denunciation. Is this feeling warrantable? I think not. I do not believe that this movement was projected to more thoroughly buttress denominationalism, nor to absorb "the Christian Church." I dare affirm that the prayer of our Lord, that all may be one, is becoming operative. It is inspirational to me, and not depressing, to so believe. Brethren, by our sympathies let us abet the Master's prayer.

But does church federation augur danger? Yes and no. We have as a people weathered many a storm, and were thereby made stronger. Then, we are not a legislative body, but congregational and independent. Let the entire brotherhood be committed to this movement, and there is no tribunal sufficiently authoritative to compel the church which I serve to federate unless the church itself deem's it best. Each congregation, or sometimes a community of churches, becomes the custodian of its own method of work and worship. What might prove a blessing in one place might prove a curse in another. Shall I in toto oppose a thing of such diverse influence? If I did then I might logically oppose the Gospel, for does not Paul speak of it as a savor of life unto life, or of death unto death? But let us discuss the question dispassionately. Put up the sword into its place, don the Sunday garb, and speak and write in the spirit of prayer. This may be a Goliath and God may have his David, but humility characterized the David of old. The danger is not in federation, per se, but, Gospel like, in urging it under adverse conditions. We have been judicious in introducing the organ in worship, and pressing the claims of organized missions; shall we be less discreet now? No progress comes without heroism and the risk of loss. Here is a great stream. It has burst from a great and unexpected source. What a refreshing, if properly controlled! Enlargement and deliverance must come. Who knows but that we are in the kingdom for just such a time as this? The danger arises also from tirades of abuse begetting prejudice. The minds of those we would influence are poisoned. As a people we are marked, and our movements watched with suspicion. Oh, that we might go untainted into this battle of Armageddon!

To question 1, in this symposium I answer yes. We who are loyal to the Gospel must be in the conflict. Let others follow afar off with Peter, in this new crucifixion. I want to be with John. If I find traitors in the camp I want to stand so close to the Master and his great prayer for union that each may go speedily, Judas-like, to his own place.

To question 2, I have read this basis of federation carefully. It may not be perfect, but it is a working basis for union. It does not demand a surrender of the truth. It does not read, till death do us part. Wherever possible let us work it for the final unity of believers; wherever not let us Christianly beg to be excused.

By Chalmers McPherson.

You ask me to answer two questions concerning the proposed federation movement, which I do as follows: To the first question, "Yes." To the second, "Yes."

But let me say further:

1. If the constitution recently adopted by the Oregon Federation of Churches is a correct interpretation of that proposed by the New York conference, I am unalterably opposed to our having anything to do with it. To my mind the two plans diametrically oppose each other at a vital point.

2. In view of the widespread failure of our people thus far to agree upon the proposed federation, or even to understand alike what it proposes, I oppose the introduction of the question at all into any convention of our missionary societies. The work of these organizations should not be crippled by the injection of such heated discussion to be followed by results which present indications seem to promise. Our missionary enterprises are poorly prepared to endure such a trying ordeal. The cost of such an experiment might be ruinous and the brotherhood should avoid it.

3. And yet we should give an answer to the call of the earnest men who believe they are taking steps which look to an ultimate accomplishment of that for which our Lord so earnestly prayed. But who can give this answer? No partial gathering of our people can speak authoritatively for all. Why not ask THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to invite our other papers to unite with it in a call asking our people to assemble in a mass meeting in the city of Buffalo next October to consider this question and to frame their answer to the invitation? Congregations desiring to do so could instruct their messengers to represent them.

4. This meeting (if it should approve the movement) should make a clear, unequivocal announcement as follows:

(a) That the action has no binding force upon any one except such congregations and individuals as are present or represented in the meeting and approve its findings.

(b) That the invitation is accepted only upon the condition that the definition given in the question asked for this symposium by THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is correct.

No step should be taken which could even temporarily cripple our missionary work or tend to the alienation of our people from each other. Any probable fruit of federation purchased at such expense would be too dearly bought.

If there is in this an opportunity to give our plea for union a stronger hold upon others, and to take a step toward the true oneness of those who serve the Christ we should all be able to see it and accept it. Surely our brethren can see eye to eye in this matter. None of us wish to betray the cause to which we have given our lives, and none would willingly throw an obstacle in the path of the achievement of the great plea which we have so long preached. Our purpose is one. Let us work together.

The Dutchman's Dilemma

By W. T. Moore

Have I been dreaming? Am I in a hypnotic state? Or have I in some way lost my touch with past events? Really, I would be concerned about myself were it not that I am not altogether unacquainted with the influence of the odium theologicum upon the minds of even very good men.

I notice that some of our super-sound brethren are becoming agitated lest our coming convention, to be held at Buffalo, will appoint delegates to the next federation conference, or in some other way indorse the "Inter-Church Federation" movement. It is claimed by these brethren that nothing which is not distinctively missionary should be considered in that convention. With this view of the matter I have considerable sympathy. I have always been opposed to making our missionary convention an omnibus for every outside matter. For this reason I believe that we ought to have a convention especially for the consideration of these outside questions, and thus keep our great national missionary convention free to serve its original purpose.

But I am in favor of appointing delegates to the Inter-Church Conference for the very reason that our missionary convention should be kept as strictly as possible to missionary work. In short, the objection which has been made to our taking part in the federation movement furnishes me with exactly the ground on which I am in favor of taking part. The whole question resolves itself into a simple proposition, viz.: Is the federation movement in the nature of missionary work? It seems to me that to ask this question, from a Disciple point of view, is practically to answer it. What has been one of the main contentions of our movement from the beginning until this present moment? Is it not that the union of Christians is absolutely necessary in order to the conversion of the world? If this is not one of our main contentions, then I own frankly that I know nothing about our religious movement. But, surely, I am not mistaken in this respect; but if this is our contention, then it seems to me that the federation movement affords us a great opportunity, since it certainly is an important step toward the end we have in view.

Now, it seems to me the only objection that can possibly be made to our co-operation with the federation movement is that it can not and will not help the union of Christians. Of course, this is a legitimate question; but I think it is altogether unreasonable to judge of the federation movement in this respect until it is shown clearly that its tendency is in the wrong direction. Should this finally appear to be the case, I would be among the first to withdraw from all co-operation with it. But, having been present at its first great meeting, I am bound to say that the general trend of the discussions deeply impressed me with the fact that the movement is overwhelmingly in favor of Christian union. However, it should be well understood that Christian union is not the immediate end in view; nevertheless, as a preliminary step, the federation idea is altogether in the right direction.

This being the case, I hold that co-operation with this movement is the very best kind of missionary work; and it really seems to me that what some of our brethren are saying is enough to make such men as Alexander Campbell, Barton W. Stone, Thomas M. Allen, Robert Richardson, Walter Scott, Isaac Errett, and, indeed, nearly all the old heroes of our religious movement, turn over in their graves if such a thing is possible. This is why I wonder if I have been dreaming. I have been associated with our religious movement from almost the beginning, and I know that the men I have referred to would have welcomed most heartily just such a conference as was held in New York. Indeed, it is my opinion that, as Brother Power has already said, Alexander Campbell would have traveled 10,000 miles to be present at such a meeting.

But it has been intimated that our presence at this Inter-Church Conference is practically an indorsement of denominationalism or at any rate an indorsement of denominational union. Now, this view of the matter, in the light of all the facts of the case, is simply absurd. The question of organic union has never yet been even submitted, much less discussed, except as a probable thing in the future. Will our restless brethren kindly wait until they see what kind of union is proposed? And do they not think it would be well for us to take some hand in shaping the union sentiment to the end that it will be a union that we can approve? It is assumed by these objectors that our presence at the federation conference is an indorsement of some kind of union, though it is difficult to understand just what this kind is, since no organic union of any kind has been proposed, only a plan of organic work.

And this, I believe, is the very first step in securing practical union. Nobody is required to indorse anybody or anything in the federation movement. It is not a question of indorsement at all. It is simply a question of conference and co-operation with respect to many lines of work wherein we are all now practically agreed.

But this co-operation gives Disciples of Christ a splendid opportunity to make known and enforce their magnificent plea. I can remember when all of our leading men would have given everything they possessed for such an opportunity, and I have been simple enough to believe that all our brethren at the present time would be delighted that they have seen the day when they are permitted to stand on a free platform with other religious bodies and tell the world what we believe and teach.

Now, with this splendid opportunity, are we ready to play the part of the Dutchman, who, when hearing that the bank where his money was deposited was about to suspend payment, rushed to the bank, wrote a check for the whole amount he had there and handed it to the cashier? The cashier immediately counted out his money. This somewhat astonished the Dutchman, who said to the cashier: "Vot, you got 'im? Den me no want 'im; but you no got 'im, me want 'im sure."

Now, it seems to me that the very thing we have long desired has really come to us, but if we intend to play the Dutchman in the case and declare that as the opportunity is now ours we will not embrace it, then it seems to me we shall be wholly unworthy to meet the responsibility of the providential opening to us. It is very easy to crack our own party whip and rally the small men to a sectarian camp, and thus illustrate in our own conduct what we have always repudiated in others. If I felt that this outcry against what I consider to be the first step in the direction of practical Christian union fairly represents our brotherhood, I would utterly despair of any worthy outcome of our religious movement. But I am certain that these brethren have not seriously reflected upon the position they have assumed, or else they have never understood what our religious movement means.

THE EDITOR

Explains How to Keep Up Mental and Physical Vigor.

A New Jersey Editor writes:

"A long indulgence in improper food brought on a condition of nervous dyspepsia, nearly three years ago, so severe that I had to quit work entirely. I put myself on a strict regimen of Grape-Nuts food, with plenty of outdoor exercise, and in a few months found my stomach so far restored that the process of digestion gave me pleasure instead of distress.

"It also built up my strength, so that I was able to resume my business, which is onerous, as I not only edit my own paper, but also do a great deal of 'outside' writing.

"I find that the Grape-Nuts diet enables me to write with greater vigor than ever before, and without the feeling of brain-fag with which I used to be troubled. As to bodily vigor—I can and do walk miles every day without fatigue—a few squares used to weary me before I began to live on Grape-Nuts!" Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

A Great Literary and Religious Sensation

By William Durban

All students of bibliography well know that many literary aspirants have leaped into fame at a single bound. Lord Byron awoke one morning to find himself celebrated. Charlotte Bronte wrote a book in the Yorkshire hills which immediately on its appearance convulsed the great heart of England. Sir Walter Scott gained renown by his "Waverly," although it was published anonymously. Mr. Rudyard Kipling, with his "Jungle Stories," instantly achieved success, as did R. L. Stevenson by his marvelous "Treasure Island." Bret Harte set all the Anglo-Saxon world talking by a single hit, as also did Mark Twain. The same thing happened in the case of Bellamy with "Looking Backward," and in that of Anstey with "Vice Versa," and again in that of Shorthouse with "John Inglesant," while every one knows how "Lorna Doone" was the making at once of R. D. Blackmore. But a young man has arisen who is astonishing England and is the talk of the hour.

Guy Thorne.

Comparatively few of the ablest writers belong by birth to our great cities. There are notable exceptions. Dickens was born in Portsmouth, and Milton in London. But the vast majority of our literary geniuses have been natives either of country villages or of small provincial towns. Exactly the same may be said of the overwhelming majority of the finest preachers. Shakespeare first saw the light in the little town of Stratford-on-Avon. Johnson was born and bred in Lichfield. Joseph Parker was a native of Little Hexham, in Northumberland, and Spurgeon was born in a tiny village in Essex. Guy Thorne is the literary lion of England at this moment. His name was utterly unknown a few months ago. He is a young Cornishman, and so belongs to a stalwart section of the British race. Cornwall is the home of physical beauty, of fascinating folklore, of ancient Arthurian romance so much employed by Tennyson in his loftiest moods. It is not wonderful, therefore, that a new intellectual light has flamed forth in this region among the wild moors of the rock-bound and sea-girt peninsula. Guy Thorne is a son of the manse, his father being a vicar in the north of England at this time. The youth himself was educated at Oxford University, but was too erratic in his studies to attain academic distinction there. After this course he went back to his beloved moorland to revel in the scenes of his childhood and to attempt the pursuit of authorship which has brought him into such prodigious notoriety.

The Orthodox Onslaught.

I rank myself with that moderate school of modern theological students who have no sympathy with either narrow evangelicals or reckless latitudinarians, with either ultra-conservative doctrinaries or reckless destructionist critics. The consensus of critical opinion in Germany is at this moment settling down in favor of the mediate position, and British sentiment is following suit. Now, a remarkable indication of the tendency of the hour is supplied by the enormous success of Guy Thorne's sensational novel, "When It Was Dark." It may be that this extraordinary work of imagination has by this time been reprinted in America and is being circulated broadcast there. In that case my readers need no description from me of the nature of the volume. But, as the contrary may be the case, I should think it well to give an idea of its aim. I say advisedly its aim, because this book emphatically belongs to the category of novels with a purpose. What is that aim? It is simply the absolute destruction of the destructionists and destructionism. The book is an intensely religious one, as well as a most exciting and thrilling one. It owes its sudden fame to a singular circumstance. It happened to be read by the Rev. R. J. Campbell, the popular preacher at the City Temple, London. He was so impressed with it that he sent it on to the Bishop of London, commending it to his notice. The Bishop was equally interested, and at once mentioned it eagerly in the pulpit, bestowing on it the very highest praise. The book was the subject of like eulogy in the pulpit of Westminster Abbey. In the whole history of literature I suppose no secular book, no story or romance, has ever had such extraordinary fortune as this. Little could its author, when writing it in an unpretending little cottage on a secluded moor, where he would hear little besides the wild beating of the waves on the rocks near by, or the shrill notes of the plover and the plaintive scream of the gulls, have anticipated the reception which awaited it and the outburst of enthusiasm which it would occasion.

The subject of this novel is the denial of the resurrection of Christ and the consequences of that negation. The plot is simply this. A wealthy manufacturer who is at once a Jew and an infidel determines to undermine Christianity. He happens to be acquainted with the most learned orientalist in England, an expert at the British museum, a hypocrite who poses as a pious man, but is deeply in debt through his secret entanglement with an extravagant actress. The Jew bribes the professor, offering him an immense sum to go to Palestine to carry out a terrible plot. The professor shivers at the offer, but his difficulties constrain him to accept it and he departs for the east. After some weeks a telegram reaches London and is published in a newspaper. This message creates the greatest consternation the world has ever known, for it announces that in the sepulchre of Jesus Christ an inscription on a rock has been unearthed, which is a confession by Joseph of Arimathea that he had stolen the body of Jesus Christ and had secretly deposited it elsewhere so that the story of the resurrection was a fable. The effect of this message is appalling, for at once all the powers of evil celebrate a mad carnival of infernal joy, the agents of iniquity of every species are triumphant, Christians everywhere are broken-hearted, thousands of churches are almost deserted, and the world seems to be lapsing into hideous paganism. The delineations of these consequences of unbelief are indescribably vivid, but suddenly the lying conspiracy collapses. Providence is at work behind the scenes. The satanic forgery is discovered by curious means, and its agents come to tragic ends.

About Churches of Christ.

I was present yesterday with my brethren on the English executive, constituting the Board of the Christian Association of Great Britain, in co-operation with the American churches of Christ. It gave great pleasure to us all to learn from letters received that Brother Mitchell, late of Liverpool, is at work happily on your side of the ocean. Also that Bro. E. M. Todd, so long our secretary, has found a felicitous settlement at North Tonawanda, N. Y. It is gratifying to be able to report that, whereas a few months ago half our churches on this side were without pastors, now all have

She suffered from nervousness by day and sleeplessness by night.

"Up to three years ago," writes a young woman, "I was in the habit of drinking coffee freely and did not realize that it was injuring my health till I was suddenly made the victim of nervous headaches so violent that I was compelled to give up household activities and stay in bed much of the time. Then insomnia came upon me, and the wretchedness of sleepless nights was added to the agony of painful days.

"This lasted till a year ago, when I was persuaded by a friend to give up coffee entirely and use Postum Food Coffee. The result was, in less than a week I began to feel the change for the better, my nerves grew stronger, and I began to sleep a little. Day by day the improvement continued and in a short time I was restored to health. My headaches left me, the nervousness passed away entirely and I enjoy good, sound sleep every night.

In Greater New York and vicinity the Disciples of Christ have eight growing churches. This means eight churches in a district of five million people. The membership of the largest church is four hundred and the smallest less than one hundred. At a recent meeting of the ministers of these churches it was discovered that six out of the eight were to have meetings about the same time, that is to say a simultaneous campaign without previously planning together. Some time during the week in which all the meetings will be running they are planning for a great Sunday afternoon service at the First Church, 323 W. 56th street, at which all the pastors, evangelists and singers will be present.

O. P. Spiegel.

The writer of this sketch having observed the victories and needs of our work from coast to coast, has come to the conclusion since coming to New York City that the work here represents the greatest victories in what has been accomplished and the greatest need in what is now required of any field open to us. Besides giving an account of the evangelistic campaign we wish to give some idea of what has been done here in the years past and what we now have. The address of each church and each pastor will be given and might be profitably used by outside friends and pastors to help the brethren here locate some of the many hundreds of Disciples who are living in New York without having connected themselves with any of the churches. There are more Disciples outside our churches (formerly Disciples) in Greater New York and vicinity than connected with the churches here. If pastors and friends would take the little trouble to inform the New York brethren when members of the western churches come to New York much of this might be avoided. We have three churches in New York proper. The First Church, located at 323 West 56th street, is the oldest and most centrally located. It is within three blocks of the southern end of Grand Central Park and Columbus Circle, the greatest street car exchange in the city. Its location makes it accessible from any part of Manhattan by surface cars, elevated or subway. The church is now without a pastor but will join with the Lennox Avenue Church in the Scoville meeting. Among many prominent preachers who have ministered to it we remember at present Dr. B. B. Tyler, Wallace Payne and B. Q. Denham. Dr. Tyler is fondly remembered both by the church and many prominent men outside the church. He caused the church and our plea to be respected in the city. It was only this week that Dr. M. R. Vincent, for many years a successful pastor of a large Presbyterian church in the city, and now Baldwin professor of sacred literature in Union Theological Seminary, said: "After reading a statement of the position of the Disciples of Christ sent me by Dr. Tyler, I wrote him that they had the position on which all Christendom could unite if a slight modification were made." The modification he referred to was to recognize pedobaptism as well as immersion. The First Church has a great past and a greater future before it. It is now a hundred years old and has the best opportunity of becoming a great metropolitan church of any church in the whole brotherhood

J. P. Lichtenberger.

Lennox Avenue Church at 41 West 119th street is in that part of Manhattan known as Harlem, a rapidly growing section of the city. They begin March 18, with Scoville and Smith as the evangelistic team. J. P. Lichtenberger is the energetic pastor and the right man in the right place. The meeting will be watched with great interest not only by the church in New York but by the Disciples at large. This church was organized in a hall, October 6, 1889, by J. M. Philputt, with the inspiration and help of Mrs. Philputt. In 1892 the present property, now worth $90,000, was purchased from the United Presbyterians for $45,600. It was dedicated in October, 1893. On January 12, on account of failing health, Dr. Philputt resigned and moved to Buffalo. In his pastorate of twelve years he had succeeded in planting in the metropolis a church and getting it into a beautiful church home. Only those who know the difficulties of the field can appreciate the gigantic task. In May, 1902, the present pastor came to the work. They have been able to keep up all current expenses the past year and to raise $5,000 to apply on the remaining debt. The church now numbers three hundred, with all departments active. They have been preparing for the meeting for months and are hopeful of a great harvest.

The 169th Street Church is located at 839-843 East 169th street, in that part of the city known as the Bronx. It is one and one-half blocks east of 169th street, Third avenue elevated station. S. T. Willis is the present pastor, and is in his seventeenth year with the work. That speaks for itself. Their evangelistic meetings will be from March 18 to April 15. A. E. Cory, the foreign missionary living link of this church to China, will do the preaching, and W. E. M. Hackleman, the singing. Here is a church which is in the midst of the construction of a $35,000-building, and at the same time has courage to be a living link and also to build and maintain a city mission in which it has Sunday-school and preaching services. Here is an example for those of weak faith. It was organized in 1856, dedicated a building in 1870, and for the first twenty years had a slow growth in a difficult field. The present pastor came in 1889, and the work now seems to be dawning into greatness. With a new, up-to-date building, a mission in the city, one arm doing work in China, a loyal, united membership and their consecrated, determined pastor, we may look for great things from this church.

The First Church in Brooklyn is located at Sterling Place, near Seventh avenue. M. E. Harlan is the pastor. He lives at 38 Berkeley Place, Brooklyn. They will begin the evangelistic meeting April 1, and continue over Easter. Pastors of neighboring Baptist and Free Baptist churches will help during the first week and the pastor will do the preaching the remainder of the time. R. T. Stokes and Mrs. G. T. Weeks, of the city, will do the singing. This church was organized in 1874, has had such pastors as Z. T. Williams, J. Z. Tyler, C. A. Young and others. They now have three hundred and ten members. The present pastor has been with them seven years, and during that time the church has doubled its membership. The church is well organized and all departments of the work are pushing forward. Mrs. Harlan is responsible for a large share of the success of the church.

The Second Church, Brooklyn, is located on Humboldt street, near Nassau, with Joseph Keevil, of 729 Humboldt street, as pastor. Their evangelistic campaign begins March 25, with D. C. Tremain, New York state evangelist, doing the preaching and the local church furnishing the singing. The church was started in 1886 as an independent mission and later, under the direction of the Sterling Place Church. In 1889 the late Dr. Beldin was sent to establish the work, and in 1890 they began worshiping in their completed chapel. Dr. Beldin, E. R. Edwards, A. B. Phillips, J. H. Gordinier, G. A. Reinl, J. L. Keevil and Joseph Keevil have served the church. It has sent out from its ranks four preachers and now has six young men in college preparing for the ministry. They now have a membership of 218 and a Sunday-school of 245. During the past two years $2,450 indebtedness has been paid and January 1, 1906, they assumed self-support. With a loyal, united membership free from debt, and a great field in the seventeenth ward of Brooklyn, the future is bright. This seems a great work for 18 years. Surely the east is open to the right kind of effort.

The Third Church, Brooklyn, is at the corner of Dorchester road and Fifteenth street, with W. G. Oram, of 314 East Twenty-first street, as pastor. This is the newest work in the city, and was organized by the present pastor, under joint direction of the City Evangelization Board, the N. Y. C. M. S. and the A. C. M. S. on Nov. 29, 1903. It is in what is called Flatbush, in many respects one of the finest residence sections of Greater New York. It was organized with 18 members and has grown to 62 members; the Sunday-school has an enrollment of 100 members, and the Christian Endeavor has grown from a charter start of seven to a present membership of 30. Herbert Yeuell held a meeting for them in the fall which greatly strengthened them and added to their numbers. Judging from what other churches have been able to do in New York we may expect this soon to be self-supporting and prepared to enter on a career of usefulness to the cause which gave it birth and to Christ, in whose name it is established.

Next we cross the beautiful Hudson into the rapidly growing district on the Jersey shore and here find the East Orange Church, at the corner of Park avenue and Seventeenth street, near the Ampere station of the Lackawanna railroad, nine miles from New York City Hall. Miner Lee Bates, 139 Seventeenth street, is the pastor. Beginning March 25 they will spend three weeks in evangelistic meetings. Neighboring pastors, Presbyterian, Congregational, Methodist and Baptist, will preach the first week and the pastor the following two weeks, concluding Easter Sunday. It is planned to distribute much literature in the homes and to do personal work on a large list of names which has been gathered. Twelve persons organized here a Sunday-school in a plumbing shop six years ago. The present chapel was dedicated 16 months later and the church organization effected with 24 charter members. They will be able to make the final payment on the property May 1. R. P. Shepherd was pastor from 1900 to 1903. January, 1904, the present pastor was called from Warren, O. From the beginning the church has been intensely active both in work concerning itself and missionary work. The present roll is 106, with 320 in all departments. The Sunday-school enrolls 140 and other departments are well organized and active. One characteristic of the church is that it has very little dead material, everybody is active. The percentage of attendance at the services is far above the average. The church is in the midst of a new and rapidly growing residence neighborhood for New York business men. It is about one-half mile from the nearest church, and has one of the most promising fields for a neighborhood church to be found in the vicinity of New York. A committee is already considering plans, ways and means for the erection of a building adequate to growing needs. This bids soon to be one of our strongest eastern churches.

Plainfield, N. J., is our other church in this state and near New York City. Phil A. Parsons is the pastor. They begin March 4, with O. P. Spiegel, of Alabama, as evangelist, and John R. Sturgis, of Indiana, as leader of the singing. Mrs. Spiegel will also lend valuable assistance to the work. This little church has been handicapped for ten years by a disputed claim against the church property. It was finally decided in favor of the claimants making the church liable for $3,600. The situation seemed hopeless for several weeks. Finally, by the generous help of friends outside the church, a loan from the Board of Church Extension and a compromise with the claimants, the matter has been adjusted so that they may move forward to real work. The church is wide awake and hopeful, and bids fair to be soon self-sustaining.

These eight churches constitute our strength in Greater New York and vicinity—three in New York City proper, three in Brooklyn and two across the Hudson in New Jersey. They represent about 1,700 members.

The question is often asked, Why enter a field so well occupied by well established denominations? The answer of those who understand the spirit of the east is that the Disciples of Christ represent a plea which, if known and understood here, would be readily accepted. We are not known and are not understood. There is a great unrest here among the churches, a great dissatisfaction with creeds and traditional beliefs. Men are asking for the Bible and the Gospel in its purity, and not as clouded and misinterpreted by councils and dogmatists. The developing ideal here is, "In faith, unity, in opinions and methods, liberty; in all things, charity." In this new age the Disciples of Christ have the greatest opportunity among all the churches and the greatest they themselves have ever had. They are already nearest to the basis of union toward which all Christendom is moving. Would that we had more men and more churches here to aid in the movement! Surely there is a great harvest waiting for reapers. "And I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?"

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

Thursday, Feb. 8, we left New York on the good steamer Arabic for a short visit to the Holy Land. When I sailed for Europe in July, 1892, I left the Christian Endeavor hosts assembling for the great convention of that year. This time our Christian Endeavor institute was in session at the Broadway tabernacle, and my last act was to vote for Seattle. In the early morning we turned the prow toward the sea. There were many friends to say "good-bye" and "bon voyage" on Wednesday evening, and a large bundle of letters and telegrams from the dear ones of the Vermont Avenue church, and at the last it seemed a hardship to separate from them, but the last gangway was drawn ashore, the space between the ship and the dock widened, slowly and majestically the great liner swung out and turned toward the ocean, the Battery was passed, the towering statue of liberty stood out before us, the domes and steeples and skyscrapers of New York sank behind us; we were steaming away at increasing speed. Presently the shrill notes of a bugle sounded the call for our first meal on shipboard, and there was a unanimous rally, but alas! within 48 hours 400 of our noble 600 lay cold and miserable in their bunks, and only a small remnant answered to the bugle call. Even Boston people staggered to the rail, and Catholic and Protestant alike paid homage to Neptune. Everything was going out; nothing coming in. The man was there disposing of his contents, to whom the captain, passing, said: "I think the moon is coming up," and who replied in despair, "Good Lord, must that come up, too!" Comic it is and yet full of pathos. The latest cure for this trouble, the electric chair, which reduces the pulse and does away with the nervous excitement, has not yet been adopted by the White Star Line.

Our ship is a huge one, 620 feet long, with a capacity for 2,600 people, and tonnage of 15,800. We have 645 passengers and 317 helpers, and steam 17 knots an hour, and our distance from New York to our first stopping place is 2,742 miles, to Funchal, Madeira. Some idea of the things necessary for our voyage may be gotten from the pantry figures: 95,000 pounds of meat, 91,000 eggs, 38,000 pounds of poultry, 84,000 pounds of flour, 156,000 pounds of potatoes, 38,000 of sugar, 38,000 of butter, 8,400 of coffee, 940 of tea, 12,000 gallons of milk, 270 tons of ice, and down in the bunkers 5,800 tons of coal.

Ours is a twin screw steamer. There are two distinct sets of boilers, engines, shafts and screws, both sets working independently of each other, and separated from keel to upper deck, dividing the vessel into two non-communicating halves, each of which is fully equipped, and an accident to one could not affect the other, and there is no danger of a breakdown at sea. Each side of the ship is also subdivided into numerous watertight compartments, which do not communicate, and she is supposed to be practically unsinkable. A steamer of this character costs about a million and a half, and its round trip about $100,000. It is a great floating hotel. One never feels lonely. Passengers readily become acquainted and are always courteous and helpful. We have an ideal company on this trip. They are the best people. We have 40 lawyers, 35 preachers, 40 bankers and teachers, business men, physicians, Bible students and sightseers of every sort, but no drinking, gambling or even smoking to any extent. They are intelligent, well-behaved Christian Americans. At our own table are such souls as Mr. and Mrs. B. B. Tyler, Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Carpenter, Dr. and Mrs. W. C. Griswold, of Princeton, Ill.; Judge and Mrs. J. N. Haymaker, of Wichita, Kan.; J. K. Hester, Mrs. Eunice S. Johnson, of Washington; J. L. Haddock, of Oklahoma Territory; B. C. Hagerman, of Lexington; C. S. Medbury and Mrs. Maud E. Showers, of Bloomington, Ind., all Disciples, and Dr. E. H. Jenks, of Omaha, a Presbyterian pastor. Other Disciples are Mrs. Bernard and son, of Colorado Springs, and Mrs. and Miss Lipscomb, of Hubbard City, Tex.

We have missed several of our special circle during the epidemic of seasickness. One of our prairie dogs, before he became a sea dog, roused his roommates in the night, as he heard the flow of water in some pipes overhead, by exclaiming: "Say, fellows, wake up! This thing's a leakin'!" Another friend, a noted W. C. T. U. worker, said, when under the sway of seasickness, to the steward: "I think if I could get some brandy and water I would feel better." "If it's drinks you mean, madam, you will have to go to your room, and I don't think the bar is open yet." Drinks and bar, and she a W. C. T. U. woman! After all, seasickness is a good thing. It is medicine in itself. It is an internal Turkish bath. People seem all the better for it, but at the time you say to your better half: "I shall never again see my humble home on the Wabash. See that I am deposited beneath the waves in a respectable manner." But you do not die, much as you desire to depart. This time neither my wife nor I paid tribute to the still unfed sea.

We have really had a delightful voyage. It has run this way: Sixty-five miles to Sandy Hook, slight sea; Feb. 9, 326 miles, head sea; Feb. 10, 323 miles, rough southerly sea, 400 sick; Feb. 11, 355 miles, composed sea; Feb. 12, 346 miles, composed sea; Feb. 13, 353 miles, moderate sea; Feb. 14, 323 miles, rough to moderate sea; Feb. 15, 343 miles, moderate sea; Feb. 16, 363 miles, and Madeira. We have traveled mostly along the 41st parallel and from 41st to 34th. Our weather has been favorable for the most part. The first day there was little wind and the sea was smooth. The salt air acted as a tonic, coursing like an elixir through the blood. Far away, in apparently illimitable extent, stretched the waters, with only one ship in sight during the day. The second day out came the tug of war. Several hundred gulls followed us, soft, graceful, beautiful birds, picking up the food thrown out by the steamer. After 600 miles or so these dropped out and only a stormy petrel has appeared since. Ginger, the ship's cat, is the only dumb friend on board.

Sunday was kept in a religious way—a sermon at 10:30 a. m., and a praise meeting at 9 p. m. B. B. Tyler directed the services, and hearing a lady lead the music who has sung for us at the Vermont Avenue church made the meetings homelike. During the week he have had evening lectures on places to be visited, and morning discussions of matters pertaining to the trip. All are studious and an audience of 400 or more will gather. Time is divided into six watches of four hours each. The sea day begins at noon, or eight bells. Passengers amuse themselves with games, pacing the deck, talking, reading, writing, eating and sleeping. The ocean has many lessons, speaks in manifold voices and presents an infinite variety of scenery. It is God's handiwork, as are mountains and fields and stars. It has its romance and its poetry, its history and its geography. We passed over the North Atlantic basin at the plateau, the Western Azores Trench and Azores Ridge and Eastern Trench, and by Saint Hill, only 600 feet under the surface, the thassalographers tell us, while the Atlantic basin goes down 22,000 feet, great unexplored abyssmal depths. We have seen no icebergs or whales, and only half a dozen vessels. Now and then a sportive porpoise has appeared. We get good sea baths, dipped from the midst of old ocean, and do not have to stand on deck in bathing suits, as once was the custom, and have sailors use the hose on us. We have not been in the worse gale the captain ever saw. We have not had the "racks" put on the tables to keep the soup plates out of our laps. The object of these strips of mahogany is about the same as that Emerson gives for time and space, when he tells us: "Therefore is space, and therefore is time, that people may know that things are not huddled and lumped, but sundered and divisible." These last days have been ideal—a clear heaven, clouds of chased silver floating in sapphire depths, a breeze that tipped every wave with white and opalescent gleam, a sea of ultramarine colors, beaming all over with smiles, and waves like so many white-maned horses, career-how progress, like a majestic river, may move on, ever widening and deepening, while men of trained minds form little eddies on the side where something called science is whipped into the service of doubt, and another something called philosophy becomes the handmaiden of uncertainty. Lucky, the great author, has an eloquent passage upon this historic phenomenon. He says, "That the greatest religious change in the history of mankind should have taken place under the eyes of a brilliant galaxy of philosophers and historians who were profoundly conscious of the decomposition around them: that all these writers should have utterly failed to predict the issue of the movement they were observing, and that during the space of three centuries they should have treated as simply contemptible an agency which all men must now admit to have been, for good or for evil, the most powerful moral lever that has ever been applied to the affairs of man, are facts well worthy of meditation in every period of religious transition."

The church has swung out into the great zone of thought suggested by the word "evolution"; and, whether we will have it or not, this type of thought, in its effect unon the popular mind, is naturalistic and materialistic. The evolutionary theory of social progress tends to undervalue the fact and possibilities of individual initiative, and therefore militates against the Biblical conception of the transcendency of personality.

In times past men needed a personal God to account for things; but to-day they have focused thought and attention upon the machinery which God uses in operating the world. An age which unduly exalts secondary causes strikes at the efficacy of prayer, at the possibility of immediate communion with God, discredits the importance of religious meditation; hence, weakening the impulses of worship; secularizes life, and consciously or unconsciously heads society toward bald materialism. However much we may exploit the immanence of God in our creeds and theories, it seems almost impossible to identify God with any of the changes and experiences of individual human life when all idea of progress is associated with the fixedness and immutability of law. Personal Christianity in this type of thought gives place to institutional Christianity.

God is looking after the great matters by means of great processes of evolution. We have a new God to-day, greater you say—yes, but much farther away than the God of our fathers. The heavens are a point from the pen of his perfection; the sun is a spark from the light of his wisdom; the earth is a rosebud from the bower of his beauty; and the sea is a bubble on the bosom of his power. So great and far away is he that a certain class of minds take refuge in the interrogations of Job's false friends:

"Canst thou by searching find out God? Canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? It is high as heaven; what canst thou do? Deeper than Sheol; what canst thou know? The measure thereof is longer than the earth and broader than the sea."

We dare not, by a mock humility, cover up soul sloth and quiet the questionings of the human heart. It is poor reckoning indeed with the progress made in all departments of human thought to tend toward a goal which makes the living God only a far-off possibility—a mere "may be so"—and widens the chasm between the present day experience of the reality of God and the apostolic day experience of the same reality.

Falling sparrows, pinching poverty, sorrowing hearts, and childish prayers may no longer disturb the majestic God of materialistic evolution; but the comforting message of the evangelist to-day must be that the God or the Christ of the New Testament does not ignore them.

If the evangel of this day does not bring God closer to the world and swing the church away from her materialistic and naturalistic moorings, and back to the simplicity of this Gospel, then, in the future, we may expect just such fads as Christian Science to prey upon her members and win them to an acceptance of a false peace—the heart grows desperate with the barren inquiry.

Are God and nature then at strife that nature lends such evil dreams? So careful of the type she seems so careless of the single life. The Church in her present day evangel must have done with the presumptuous attempts to take the manifestations of the sovereign God, and the phenomena of free rational human personality and fit them into some theory of development or evolution.

The evangelist of to-day must make it clear that the coming of Jesus into the world marks a new departure from the ordinary natural methods of divine procedure and that the touching and lifting of a single soul from death to life by the atoning Savior, marks in the life of that soul a deliverance from the operations of the very law of sin and death, and upon the condition of a surrendered will, vouchsafes the operation of a new law—the higher law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus.

The world awaits the opportunity of honoring that people most who show forth most clearly the evidence of God's present day redemptive love and life. The Gospel is to be treated not simply as more than fact and doctrine of a bygone age, but as fact and doctrine susceptible of being filled with the vital energy of the ever-present God.

"As tides are lifted by the unseen pull of the moon," so men are lifted when God grasps them through his redemptive agency—the Gospel. This response of the soul becomes the self-evidencing proof that the Gospel is God's power—not man's. Dr. Fisher, of Yale, said a few years ago, "The centrifugal period of the church's history has come to an end; centripetal action has now set in." The truth of this is manifest. Can we as a people not ignoring wholly the process of adjustment ever taking place between the changeless Word of God and the ever changing mind of man, contribute such a Scriptural type of evangelism as will hasten and not retard this drawing of God's people to a common center? "Till at last we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

As Seen From the Dome.

ing and frolicking over a rolling green prairie of boundless extent, and sunsets and sunrises in the sea that have been like the blaze of some giant Vesuvius on the horizon. At every turn David's words have come to us: "They that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters; these see the works of the Lord, and his wonders in the deep. For he commandeth and raiseth the stormy wind, which lifteth the waves thereof. They mount up to the heavens; they go down again to the depths; their soul is melted because of trouble. They reel to and fro, and stagger like a drunken man, and are at their wit's end. Then they cry unto the Lord in their trouble, and he bringeth them out of their distresses. He maketh the storm a calm, so that the waves thereof are still. Then are they glad because they be quiet; so he bringeth them to their desired haven."

So here we are at the island, a small masterpiece of the Creator, rising out of this southern sea. Early in the morning we saw on the horizon a dark object, behind which the sun rose gloriously. It seemed like a thunder cloud in the distance, but on nearer approach we saw a mountain lifting itself 6,000 feet out of the sea, and then beheld villages and terraced gardens and vineyards, and soon we anchored before a beautiful city, Funchal. As we stepped ashore it was like stepping upon another planet, so different is it from anything we have seen before. These islands are 1,500 miles south of England, and on the northwest coast of Africa. They are famous for good climate, beautiful scenery, agricultural wealth and location as related to three continents. They are Portuguese, and Roman Catholicism is the religion. Protestants at one time were buried at the crossroads or thrown into the sea. There are about 200 on the islands. We were kindly received by the missionaries. Funchal has 50,000 people, and is on the principal island which has 100,000 inhabitants. Madeira wine is the great business. We rode on the bullock carts, toboganed down the mountain, visited the gardens and churches, and studied the people. It is spring, thousands of flowers in bloom, and everything green and flourishing. It is a little Eden.

Our Budget

—We begin this week the publication of the views of some of the men who have been leaders of thought and action among us. The sentiments of many of them in relation to the particular subject of federation we do not know. But whatever their opinions may be they are welcome to our columns, since we can not doubt that truth will be the gainer by this expression of the honest thought of honest men, who love the truth and have no desire in this matter but to promote it.

—Dr. Sanford, who has been very prominently identified with the federation movement, has something to say on another page.

—Before hearing from Brother McPherson, the point he raises about a called meeting at Buffalo had been considered in an editorial which we expect to publish.

—Let us not, in the midst of discussion, forget that there are things to be done. Great meetings are still being recorded, as well as the victories over the one individual sinner. New York is about to step into the limelight and we give some particulars this week of our forces there. Let us pray for the brethren there in this attempt to do greater things than in the past. It is a most difficult field.

—We regret that owing to the difficulty of securing photographs we are unable to picture all our churches in New York.

—"Earnestness must not be confounded with ugliness, which will never be admitted into our really respectable journals."—W. T. Moore in The Christian-Evangelist, March 8.

"After reading last week's 'Christian Standard' I conclude higher criticism, church federation and refined infidelity are closely identified with each other; they stand or fall together. Their advocates were men who came among us, but were never of us, chief of which are ——— [The writer mentioned names, including that of the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist.]....We of the rank and file will not be led away from the 'old paths' by wolves in sheep's clothing.....We will not be pestered by this brood of progressionists very long."—A contributor in the "Christian Standard," March 3.

"A theatrical coup, so artfully sprung on an unsuspecting audience at a mere missionary convention, by which we were made to appear in the eyes of the world as adopting a measure to which the great bulk of the brotherhood is unwilling to be committed," etc.—Editorial in "Christian Standard," March 3.

"Editors, who have generous words for the sects and criticisms for their brethren, or who would rejoice to fulfill their own prophecy that we are to become 'a disappearing brotherhood'....self-appointed federated leaders (destructive critics or their apologists to a man) who seek to turn the Restoration movement back into the denominational camp."—Editorial in "Christian Standard," March 10.

We follow Dr. Moore's words with just a few of the ugly things with which the "Christian Standard" has been demeaning its columns. Talk about "frenzied federation"! Yellow is a poor term for this frenzied journalism that must use such gross misrepresentation to help out its argument.

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Anderson, Ind., March 12.—Brother Scoville returned for another Monday night service; house packed, aisles and vestibules; 27 more added to-night, making 1,241 in his meetings here. The new converts' pledges amount to $3,100 for current expenses this coming year.—John E. Canaday.

—F. D. Hobson is succeeding well at Kearney, Neb.

—Charles Chasteen will remain at Garland, Tex., for his third year.

—Clyde Sharp has left Gas City to take the work at LaHarpe, Kan.

—B. B. Sanders is to hold a meeting for Percy G. Cross at Hope, Ark., in May.

—A. L. Ward has had 63 additions in the two years he has been at Boston, Mass.

—The local paper speaks well of the work of A. L. West, our pastor at Carlinville, Ill.

—A meeting is now being held by the Pasadena church, under Martin, Coombs and Wilson.

—J. A. Lytle will move to Danville, Ill., from Urbana, and take charge of the Fourth Church, April 1.

—The church at Higginsville, Mo., under J. H. Creel, will increase all its offerings this year.

—C. A. Kleeberger has just entered upon the pastorate of the Chicago Avenue Church, Columbus, O.

—A large number of new living link churches in the foreign society have already enrolled, and there are more to follow.

—J. P. Hieronymus has just given the National Benevolent Association $500 on the annuity plan. This makes $1,000 he has given.

—The brethren at Rushville, Ill., are raising $3,000 for repairs and enlargement of the church there. W. E. Harman is the minister.

—M. A. Smith reports the work at Merkel, Tex., as growing stronger. The annual protracted meeting will begin June 28 in a large tabernacle.

—Roger H. Fife reports that as a result of his meeting with J. A. Longston at Independence, Kan., steps were taken toward a new church building.

—J. R. Glenn is now located with the church at Charleston, W. Va., and with the forces that are behind him expects to see an advance of the cause in that city.

—As a result of Brother Havener's meeting at Northview, Mo., enough funds have been raised to provide a pastor and $100 in excess to cover the church indebtedness.

—There are fine prospects for the work at Baltimore, Md., under C. M. Kreidler. Plans are now being matured for the enlargement and improvement of the building.

—H. M. Hale, who took charge of the work at Colorado City, Col., last November, has stirred things there, and at the beginning of the year was given a permanent call.

—D. D. Boyle goes now to Laredo, Tex., and reports that a pastor will soon be on the field at San Antonio, where he has been supplying, and that peace and prosperity will prevail there.

—Our missionary to Tibet, Dr. Susie C. Rijnhart, has been married to Mr. James C. Moyes. She has not resigned from the service of the foreign society, as has been announced by some.

—G. H. Steed is succeeding well at Johnstown, Pa., where we have a church of about 175 members. This is Brother Steed's first pastorate, and he has at once shown his missionary spirit.

—A provisional program for the Oregon convention has been arranged, and M. F. Horn, who has recently been appointed secretary, will see to carrying it to completion.

Loss of Appetite

Is common when the blood needs purifying and enriching, for then the blood fails to give the digestive organs the stimulus necessary for the proper performance of their functions.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is pre-eminently the medicine to take. It makes the blood pure and rich, and strengthens all the digestive organs.

"I was all run down and had no appetite. After taking one bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla I could eat anything I wished." Mrs. Amanda Fenner, Oneco, Conn.

—Brethren at Pontiac, Ill., having successfully completed their new building, are now planning for a great meeting next month. There have been additions nearly every week since the dedication in December.

—C. W. Yard reports his work at Baxter Springs, Kan., starting well. The church is united and happy in the enjoyment of a new building, the old one having been destroyed by a cyclone ten years ago.

—H. Newton Miller is in his fifth year with the church at Newark, O., which continues to go forward. A fine meeting has just been held by the pastor, who was helped with the singing by Miss Ruth Hall.

—A friend of the foreign society has made a pledge of $2,500 as a direct gift and he will possibly make it $5,000, to be paid before Sept. 30. This is toward the special building fund the society so much needs.

—L. G. Huff has received a unanimous call to remain indefinitely with the church at LaHarpe, Ill. We do not wonder that the brethren there are pleased with the results of his first year's work.

—Baxter Waters, of Duluth, Minn., passed through St. Louis on his return north from Arkansas, whither he went for the funeral of his father. While at Hope he preached what Percy G. Cross describes as a "splendid sermon" on "Jesus, the Worker."

—Louis S. Cupp has just had a friendly visit from some 200 members of his church and Bible school, with the result that might be expected. Brother Cupp will have a little more money to put into books, seeing he will not have to spend so much at the grocery.

—R. E. Callithan has resigned at Dearborn, Mo., where he is now in his fourth year, and where the work is in good condition. He has accepted a call to Gallatin, to begin April 1, and will give all his time to his new field.

—The dedication of the Central Church of Christ at Streator, Ill., took place last Lord's day, with F. M. Rains as master of ceremonies. Charles B. Hougham is the pastor. Evangelists Lockhart and Garmong will follow the dedication with a series of evangelistic meetings.

Bro. J. A. Cunningham of Tupelo, Miss., has ready for delivery two volumes of "Sermons," pronounced "best of all," and his "Blue and Gray" book of poems, all for $1.

—A strong sermon under the title, "The Happy Christian," preached by Bro. B. H. Melton, at the Marshall Street Christian Church, Richmond, Va., led to a good collection and the church has decided to support a missionary in Cuba Brother Melton is getting a strong hold on the young people.

—The foreign society received $5,000 from a friend in Iowa on the annuity plan. A gift of $200 was also received on this plan from a sister in Arkansas. Write to F. M. Rains, Cincinnati, O., for the new illustrated book on the annuity plan if you want to know more about it.

—The work at Lewiston, Idaho, is retarded on account of poor location of our building, but H. H. Hubbell reports that plans are being laid for forward steps. Our cause will no doubt be strengthened by the incoming of settlers to the town, where the climate is so excellent and business opportunities so good.

—The brethren at Leipsic, Ohio, remembered the twenty-fifth birthday anniversary of their pastor, H. C. Boblitt, by surprising him in the church and presenting a purse in appreciation of the occasion. It is pleasant to note that an addition to the building and extensive improvements are projected for the immediate future.

—There is organized in Richmond, Va., what is called the bi-monthly Sunday-school association, representing six of the Christian Sunday-schools of the city. At the last meeting, held at the Marshall Street Church the report showed 1,500 scholars in attendance, and that the best work in the history of the schools has been done during the last two months.

—Ernest Bradley is now engaged in the state work, and the pastorate at Smithville, Tex., is vacant. Brother Bradley is at present striving to put our work at Port Arthur in good shape. There is a fairly good membership there but no house of worship. He hopes to secure a good lot and put up a temporary tabernacle and locate a man for full time.

—James C. Creel writes that his work at Jonesboro, Ark., is starting with promise. The missionary spirit has developed and the last offering was increased fourfold. A mission Sunday-school, organized at West Jonesboro, has increased from 10 to 53 in attendance, while the first missionary district, 21 counties in northeast Arkansas, has been organized with Brother Creel as president.

—W. F. Turner and family were invited to a church social at the First Church, Joplin, Mo., which turned out to be a surprise party for them. Invited to the platform, they were presented with a handsome set of dining room furniture for the new home into which they have just moved. Brother Turner is a modest man, and we do not doubt that he was short of words to express his feelings.

—W. P. Keeler reports a visit of W. J. Wright and S. M. Cooper to Chicago, when a conference was held with the executive board of the Chicago Missionary Society. As a result the appropriation of the American Christian Missionary Society may take the form of providing a superintendent of Chicago missions and the payment of his salary. Brother Wright preached for the Englewood church in the evening.

Old Men and Women Do Bless Him.

Thousands of people come or send every year to Dr. D. M. Bye for his Balmy Oil to cure them of cancer and other malignant diseases. Out of this number a great many very old people, whose ages range from seventy to one hundred years, on account of distance and infirmities of age, send for home treatment. A free book is sent, telling what they say of the treatment. Address DR. D. M. BYE CO., Drawer 105, Dept. 411, Indianapolis, Ind. (If not afflicted, cut this out and send it to some suffering one.)

—Every effort is being made for the preparation for the April simultaneous revival that it may be the greatest that Chattanooga or Tennessee has ever experienced. Henry W. Schwan, pastor at Highland Park, Chattanooga, writes us that the interest is very great in all our churches and the outlook very good. A fine rally has just been held by a number of the congregations at the Sherman Heights Church with the view to canvassing the situation and stirring up enthusiasm.

—The American Christian Missionary Society is desirous of planning rallies for groups of churches on the plan so successfully carried out by the foreign society. Those in charge are seeking to send at least one representative man as the chief speaker to co-operate in a program in which local ministers may take part. To have a successful rally there is need of careful planning and enthusiastic co-operation. It is not a day too soon to begin getting ready for the May offering.

—A home missionary rally is being planned for St. Louis. A number of visiting brethren will preach in the several churches, on April 15, and W. H. Pinkerton will, it is hoped, be the principal speaker at the rally of the Union Avenue Church on the following day. S. M. Cooper, the president of the American Christian Missionary Society and our national convention this year, will probably be in attendance. Let the St. Louis brethren co-operate in making this gathering a great success.

—A special dispatch from Bro. George Gowen, pastor of the Vine Street Christian Church, Nashville, Tenn., says: "Under the inspiration of the living link idea, Vine Street raised $1,400 or $1,500 on Lord's day. In addition to securing our own missionary in the foreign field, we gave more to all of the other interests than we ever gave before. Rejoice with us." Perhaps this fine record is due in part to the inspiration of the great Student Volunteer convention held a few days before in Nashville.

—For miles around Asherville, Kan., people are rejoicing with the brethren in that little town of one hundred inhabitants over the splendid meeting just held, and reported in our evangelistic column. J. W. Garner, who is well known in that district, having resided there for some twenty-five years, was the evangelist, and he was able to help Bro. C. P. Clark, the minister, change the town from one where infidelity was rife to one largely Christian. There is now talk of enlarging the church building and employing a preacher for full time.

—A very successful rally of the Bible schools of the Christian churches in St. Louis was held on Lord's day at the First Christian Church, the building being filled to its utmost capacity by the representatives of fifteen Sunday-schools and three mission schools. The rally was the culmination of the visit of Dr. J. H. Hardin to St. Louis in the interest of the teacher training classes. Brother Hardin has spent some five weeks in this city and has done much to create a new interest in the work. An admirable program was rendered, and the reports showed that there were 3,253 scholars enrolled in the schools, with an average attendance during February of 2,589, and with teachers and officers to the number of 316. There was an attendance of over a thousand at the rally. At the close of the rally steps were taken to form a superintendents' and teachers' union for greater St. Louis, and a meeting has been called for this purpose at the First Church on March 25.

—There was an enthusiastic meeting of the preachers of St. Louis and neighborhood at the Christian Publishing Company's offices on Monday, when evangelism was the theme for discussion. F. N. Calvin introduced the subject of the simultaneous meeting, and John L. Brandt read a paper on "Evangelism and Evangelists." The St. Louis ministers had invited other Christian ministers within seventy-five miles of the city to be present on this occasion, and among those visiting were: F. M. Rogers, Springfield, Ill.; David Millar, Bellflower, Mo.; A. W. Kokendoffer, Mexico, Mo.; C. M. Smithson, Mt. Vernon, Ill.; J. W. Lucas, Ironton, Mo.; Edward Owers, Farmington, Mo.; J. W. Story, Smithboro, Ill. The discussion was taken part in by Brothers W. W. Wharton, Jacksonville, Ill.; A. W. Rethemeyer, Potosi, Mo.; D. G. Cole, Festus, Mo.; H. J. Hostetler, Virden, Ill.; Charles O. Reynard, Alton, Ill.; W. Henry Jones, East St. Louis; John L. Brandt and Mrs. Brandt.

A Letter From Dr. Sanford.

[The following letter from Dr. E. B. Sanford touching the meaning of the proposed basis of federation on the question of authority over the churches, will be read with interest just now.—EDITOR.]

Rev. J. H. Garrison, 2712 Pine street, St. Louis, Mo.:

My Dear Brother—My attention has been called to an extended discussion of the subject of church federation in the "Christian Standard" of February 17. I have also read with interest editorials and articles on this subject that have appeared in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

It is with deep regret that I have noted in the editorials and other communications that have appeared in the "Christian Standard" a strange misrepresentation of the basis of this great movement in the interests of Christian unity. The editorial entitled "Proposed Basis of Federation in Oregon," which appeared in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of February 15, it seems to me, presents this whole matter in such a clear and forcible way that any one who reads it carefully can not fail to understand that while federation has for its great purpose the bringing of "the Christian bodies of America into united service for Christ and the world," it has "no authority over the constituent bodies adhering to it." Its province is "limited to the expression of its counsel and the recommending of a course of action in matters of common interest to the churches, local councils and individual Christians." The above quotations, as you will recall, are from the Plan of Federation recommended and endorsed by the Inter-Church Conference on Federation held in New York, November last.

Surely those who enter into the fellowship of federation councils, national, state or local, ought to be ready in a spirit of loyalty to Christ to accept and as far as possible unite in the furtherance of aims and decisions that have the general approval of its members. Federation calls for large views of the relation of the Kingdom to the activities of the churches. It does plead for unselfish service; it does urge action that will manifest to the world not only the spirit of Christ but the oneness of believers in him. Federation in its every purpose and aim is a protest against that narrow and partisan spirit that is unwilling in a spirit of comity and love to work together and co-operate with fellow Christians in making the church of which Christ is the head the great supreme instrumentality in advancing the Kingdom of God.

I rejoice that so strong and representative a group of men connected with your churches accepted the invitation to take part in the great Inter-Church Conference. The Plan of Federation which they there helped to shape and endorse I doubt not will find general acceptance as it becomes better known. Fraternally yours,

E. B. SANFORD,
Secretary for Correspondence.

Fifth District Missouri Convention.

This annual convention will be held at Richmond March 28, 29. The first afternoon and evening J. H. Hardin will give two addresses on Bible school work. The C. W. B. M. session on Thursday will hear reports from the auxiliaries and circles, the secretary, and a symposium will be held upon "The Aim of Missouri the Present Year and How to Reach It." Mrs. Carrie P. Johnson will read a paper, entitled "A Day of Opportunity." In the evening Mrs. M. S. Sheehen, Mrs. R. G. Frank, Charlotte Schumacher and Mrs. L. G. Bantz are to present papers on subjects of interest. In the evening there will follow reports of committees and an address by Harry E. Tucker, of Platte City.

Progress of Rally.

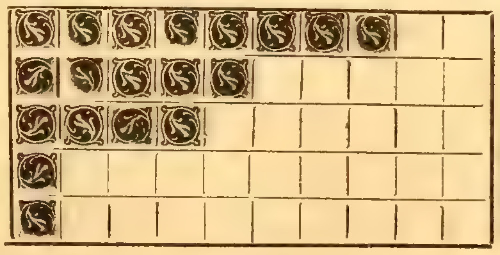
Total amount up to date, $1,090. In pledges, $300. Amount paid on lot since rally began, $3,000. Brethren, only a few weeks now remain. All time is past for delay if we are to succeed, and we must. Action and quick action alone will now save the rally from failure. It will be too bad, after all this effort and advertising, for us to fail. Honestly, what must those of other fellowships think of our faith in our plea for the restoration of apostolic Christianity if we let our work fail where they have invested more than $20,000? At least 50,000 readers will see THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST this week; to each one of you I appeal for assistance. Send something. An Arkansas widow read of our work and the importance of this field. She has an income of only $12 per month, yet sends us $1 this week, with a "God bless you." Follow the example of the Warrensburg church and take up a collection for this work. They send us an offering this week.



Send all remittances to T. N. Kincaid, Hot Springs, Ark.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Hot Springs, Ark., March 12.—Whiten two blocks. All who can help "do it now."

EASTER GLORY!

A beautiful exposition of the ministries of the National Benevolent Association of the Christian Church. This service will be sent free to all Bible schools that will present it and send the offering to the National treasury for the care of the hundreds of helpless ones in our Hospitals, Old People's Homes and Orphanages. Jesus said, "Whatsoever ye do unto the least of these, even so ye do unto me." The Benevolent Association was the first of our church societies to adopt Easter as the time for offerings. Each of them has an undivided Day for missions. This Association should have at least one undivided Day for this Gospel of the Helping Hand. Order supplies at once.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful it is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly everybody knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal says: "I advise Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefited by the use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I get more and better charcoal in Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

A GREAT GAIN FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS

During the first seven days of March the receipts of the Foreign Society amounted to $9,316.04, a gain of $7,341.21. We feel sure of a decided gain in the number of contributing churches. The gain in new living link churches is most encouraging. There are a number to hear from yet. Altogether, the outlook is encouraging. Let us press forward all through March or until every church is enlisted. We must not fall short of $300,000.

Cincinnati, Ohio.

F. M. RAINS, Secretary.

Bethany, Neb.—The church at Bethany raised $150 or more this morning for living link. This added to the $488 already provided by the university, assures the support of Mrs. Dye.—H. T. Sutton.

Clarksburg, W. Va.—Went in line as a missionary church March 4; organized last December. Offering, $17.—J. D. McReynolds.

Perryopolis, Pa.—Raised three times amount of apportionment; hope to have $35.—W. M. Long.

Council Grove, Kan.—Red-letter day; raised our apportionment and hope to reach $30.—John Wesley.

Wychwood Park, Ontario.—Total offering, $30.98; apportionment, $25. Seven confessions.—F. E. Lumley.

Winchester, Ill.—Our apportionment was $30; raised over $50 and it will go higher.—E. O. Sharpe.

Aurora, Mo.—We have more than doubled our apportionment; have now $32.55; apportionment, $15; may reach $35.—George E. Prewitt.

Smithfield, O.—The church at Smithfield doubled her apportionment for foreign missions.—E. B. Johnson.

Denver, Ill.—The 27th consecutive offering for foreign missions amounted to $41.40; will make it $50.—B. H. Cleaver.

Flemingsburg, Ky.—Best collection ever taken for foreign missions—$70; will probably make it $100.—J. T. Sharrard.

Grayson, Mo.—Collection said to be best yet; considerably above apportionment.—W. A. Oldham.

Richmond, Va.—Marshall Street Church easily raised $300 and a great spiritual feast follows.—B. H. Melton.

Knightstown, Ind.—Church more than raised its apportionment.—E. S. Conner.

Nameless Creek, Ind.—Apportionment, $40; raised $60.—B. F. Dailey, Greenfield, Ind.

Painesville, O.—Painesville took a long step forward; will double last year at least.—C. A. Freer.

Normal, Ill.—Offering last year, $61.55; this year, $115.50.—R. H. Newton.

Bluefield, W. Va.—Glorious day; raised over $200.—J. T. Adams.

Alliance, O.—Exceeded apportionment.—A. B. Moore.

Rock Falls, Ill.—More than doubled offering of last year; raised $15.—Roy Stauffer.

Kimberlin Heights, Tenn.—Our offering was $40.—Martin L. Pierce.

Paducah, Ky.—Almost doubled our apportionment at Tenth Street; will make it $100.—Bernard W. Bass.

Chicago, Ill.—Ashland Church will raise at least two and one-half times as much as last year.—W. R. Moffett.

Eldora, Ia.—Apportionment raised; more to come.—T. J. O'Connor.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

New York City.—Raised $500 yesterday; will reach $600.—S. T. Willis.

Akron, O.—Third Church apportionment, $15; raised $22.43.—N. H. Welker.

Bellefontaine, O.—Apportionment, $35; we went $20 beyond, making $55.—Roy L. Brown.

Indianapolis, Ind.—North Park Church apportionment, $50; raised $55.—Austin Hunter.

Sharpsburg, Ky.—Raised $36; intend making it $40.—E. J. Barnett, Lexington, Ky.

Carrollton, O.—Apportionment, $50; offering, $128.10.—R. H. Sawyer.

Lisbon, O.—Raised four times as much as last year; will make it $100.—C. M. Yocum.

Meridian, Miss.—Notwithstanding the great distress from the disastrous cyclone, we raised $71; apportionment was $50.—W. M. Baker.

Fork Ridge, W. Va.—Raised $16; apportionment, $10.—A. H. Jordan, Bethany.

Paris, Tex.—We passed our apportionment of $60.—J. T. Ogle.

St. Louis, Mo.—Compton Heights raised her apportionment; will try to see how much more we can get.—F. N. Calvin.

Manchester, Va.—You asked for $20; have raised $50; want $60.—C. O. Woodward.

Norwalk, O.—The new church more than reached its apportionment; $24 in cash and a number of pledges yet to hear from.—J. L. Deming.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Offering of Richmond Avenue Church was over $600; hope to make a total of $1,000.—R. H. Miller.

Hopkinsville, Ky.—Cash and pledges amount to $417.—H. D. Smith.

Quincy, Ill.—Raised $114.05; will make it $125.—Walter M. Jordan.

A Great Literary and Religious Sensation.

found suitable men. Our churches are few in Great Britain, but they constitute fine living object lessons for all who are interested in the concrete study of apostolic Christianity. The idea is being formulated among us of initiating a forward commemorative movement in connection with the 1909 centenary. This idea is sure to lay hold. It will promote great aspirations. Probably the aim will be to double our number of churches and our membership. Already on a small scale the movement represented by the Disciples of Christ has taken such vigorous root that it can never be eliminated. And in time it will be strong enough to secure general recognition by the nation. Faults may of course be found with the procedure, or the methods, or the personnel, but never with the principles. Many an excellent minister would join in, if only employment could be secured, or if he had means to start work among us on his own initiative. I have long comprehended that the one and only obstacle to our indefinite extension is the lack of material resources. God has some purpose in hand, may we not reverently say, in having ordained this beginning. I have watched some other movements which profess kindred aims, but I could not admire the spirit displayed by certain of the promoters. This particular cause I joined because I seemed to feel that both in spirit and in method it was truly Christian and apostolic, and to-day I love and appreciate both spirit and aim more than never. This is my humble testimony and my sincere confession of faith after being one of the Disciples for over twenty years since I emerged from sectism, notwithstanding my undying affection and esteem for the many noble and devoted Christians whom it has been my privilege to know as friends within the circle of that same sectism.

Some Brief Figures

The Work of the Year

From Annual Reports

LE ROY, ILL.

Fifty-five were added to the church and all financial obligations met; all departments are in a flourishing condition—E. A. Carey, Pastor.

ROCK ISLAND, ILL.

There were 225 additions—190 baptisms and a net gain of 189; over $5,500 raised for all purposes, $708 being collected for missions—O. W. Lawrence.

RANTOUL, ILL.

Since taking charge of the work in August, 1904, I have been privileged to baptize 98 and receive 32 by letter. I also had 25 additions in a short meeting held at Alvin, giving a total of 152. The church is united. All missionary offerings have been taken, a parsonage built and paid for, individual communion adopted and every department is growing.—Charles Bloom.

SOUTH BEND, IND.

There was a gratifying growth in all departments, 279 names being added to the roll. Weekly offerings amounted to nearly $400 more than in the preceding year. Offerings for missions and benevolences have been larger than ever in the history of the church. Indeed, the church has about doubled in every particular.—P. J. Rice.

PORTLAND, ORE.

There were 130 accessions to the First Christian Church, nearly half of them being by primary obedience. The church loaned its pastor in October for a short meeting at Springfield, Ore., resulting in 17 accessions. The income for running expenses was $800 more than the year before. There was a fine growth in the missionary spirit, $472 being given to various enterprises by different departments. Harmony reigns. The pastor's salary has just been increased.—E. S. Muckley.

COUNCIL BLUFFS, IA.

The regular additions in the course of the year were 51, and the net gain 26. Over $200 were raised for missions, and the total amount of money received and disbursed in all departments was $2,889. The church is going forward to better things.—W. B. Clemmer.

HOPKINSVILLE, KY.

The additions numbered 38, leaving us a net increase of 25, with a present membership of 600. Every department of the church shows a gain. There was expended for current expenses $2,548 and for missions $2,339.—Harry D. Smith.

VIRDEN, ILL.

The following is the report of the first year's work of H. J. Hostetler: 71 additions—41 by confession; net gain, 55; money raised, by the church, $995; by the ladies' aid, $202; for foreign missions, $23; church extension, $7; state, $43; national benevolence, $34; education and missions, $167; by the Sunday-school, $84; Christian Endeavor, $22; C. W. B. M., $17. Total, $1,586.

BOSTON, MASS.

The treasurer's report showed that more than $3,100 has been raised. This does not include $250 paid on the debt and the money raised for the repair of the property. The C. W. B. M. has 35 members. The Sunday-school, 188 in all departments; average attendance in the regular school, 88. The pastor's report showed 45 additions. A plea for money on the property debt led to nearly $500 being pledged. We háve co-operated in all missionary enterprises of the church in general—A. L. Ward.

SIOUX CITY, IA.

Last year was the most prosperous in our history. The membership increased 25 per cent. Finances are in good condition. The missionary apportionments were met. Over $3,600 was raised. A new church building in a choice part of town has been erected, which will be dedicated March 25 by F. M. Rains.—John Kendrick Ballou, Minister.

McMINNVILLE, ORE.

During my first year's ministry here 31 have been added to the church—17 by baptism. Church prospers in every department. Money matters have been close, but debts are all paid. The people do not all "have a mind to work," but those who do are working as Christians should. The ranks of the workers are constantly increasing. A "win-one" band of 30 members is already bringing souls to the cross. We are planning larger things for this year.—C. F. Swander.

FARMINGTON, MO.

Last year $1,935.33 were raised for all purposes, all bills paid and money left in the treasury. A new parsonage is in course of construction at a cost of $2,000. Twenty-two have been added during the seven months of the present pastorate.—Edward Owers.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

At a meeting of the officers of the Vine Street Church recently, reports from all departments showed the church to be in a most healthful and working condition, with a total of 202 additions during the past 18 months, and $8,007 raised for all purposes during the past year.

ELLWOOD CITY, PA.

We closed a very successful year. Beginning with a congregation of 35, we are now increased to 160, nearly all of whom have been received by confession and baptism. Our Bible school has increased from 24 to 96 and our Y. P. S. C. E. numbers 40 active members, with an average attendance of 86. Our prayer-meetings now average about 30. I held two meetings near by, with 32 additions—baptisms 23, by letter 9. This makes 157 additions since March, 1905—over 100 by confession. About $40 for missions, $75 for other benevolences; raised for all purposes over $1,107. —Ferd F. Schultz, Minister.

HAMILTON, O.

Wesley Hatcher took charge last May and good work has been done in all departments. There were 89 additions and the Bible school enrollment was increased from 200 to 475, including the Cradle Roll. Our school won a banner in a contest with the school at Springfield, O. The Senior Christian Endeavor recently organized a mission study class with an enrollment of 22. The C. W. B. M. auxiliary nearly doubled its membership and organized a mission study class. More than $1,300 has been paid into the various treasuries.—Mrs. Bert Howard.

ROFF, I. T.

There were 68 additions during the year, practically doubling the membership. A house of worship costing about $2,500 was built, on which we owe the Board of Church Extension $400. For the first time the church had preaching for full time. We gave for missionary and benevolent purposes $53. We began 1906 with 135 resident members, the most active church and the best house of worship in town. We doubled the membership each year the two years I have labored here.—E. S. Allhands.

Siloam Springs, March 7.—Twelve additions not reported.—Mrs. J. B. Harris.

Hope, March 6.—Four confessions recently. The work is progressing splendidly.—Percy G. Cross.

Colorado.

Colorado City, Feb. 26.—Since H. M. Hale took charge in November 32 have been added—7 by confession and 25 by letter; all members are greatly encouraged.—Charles Blair.

Grand Junction, March 7.—Our four weeks' meeting, conducted by the pastor, Frederick Grimes, closed with 30 additions—18 by baptism, 9 by letter and 3 from the denominations.—Jasper Bogue.

District of Columbia.

Washington, March 5.—Present at ministers' meeting: President J. E. Stuart, Z. T. Sweeney, W. T. Laprade and the writer. All took the foreign offering yesterday. Additions: Fifteenth Street (J. E. Stuart), 3 by confession, 1 by letter and 1 by statement (this makes 20 since Jan 1); Ninth Street (E. B. Bagby), 3 baptisms and 1 by letter. Z. T. Sweeney spoke on March 4 for the Y. M. C. A. of Baltimore.—Claude C. Jones, Secretary.

Florida.

Pensacola.—We have just closed a 57 days' meeting, with 32 additions, making the church membership now 52. We secured a lot and a ten room house in a central location for $5,000, $2,000 of which was raised in cash. Enough weekly pledges were secured, with a reasonable supplement from the Home Board, to justify the employment of a minister for all his time. This work will be enduring. We go next to Plainfield, N. J. —O. P. Spiegel and Wife.

Idaho.

Lewiston, Feb. 28.—We closed our four weeks' meeting with 51 accessions.—H. H. Hubbell.

Illinois.

Carlinville, Feb. 27.—Twelve additions since I came here in October—9 in a revival held in January with home forces. The church was greatly strengthened.—A. L. West, Pastor.

Chicago, March 5.—Three additions at the Englewood Church yesterday—1 confession, 2 by letter.—W. P. Keeler.

LaHarpe, March 5.—One confession yesterday. I closed my first year's work with 111 additions, 62 coming as a result of a union meeting and 49 at regular services.—L. G. Huff, Pastor.

Pontiac, Feb. 28.—Twenty added recently.—W. G. McColley, Pastor.

Pekin, March 1.—I closed a 26 days' meeting at Hallsville with 102 additions—59 by confession, 23 reclaimed and 20 by letter and statement. All adults except 5. A Christian Endeavor Society was organized with 40 members. One young man, and perhaps two, will enter Eureka College to prepare for the ministry. T. T. Holton, of Bloomington, has ministered for this congregation 24 years. Miss Manie Bowles, of Emden, Ill., was soloist and song leader.—J. A. Barnett.

Winchester, March 9.—Meeting 5 days old; 4 additions—2 by confession. Charles E. McVay is song leader.—E. O. Sharpe.

Pittsfield, March 5.—Nine additions since our meeting closed; 24 new names for Endeavor last night; Bible school growing rapidly; B. H. Swan ing continues.—C. O. Reynard, Minister.

Carbondale, March 5.—One confession yesterday.—A. M. Growden, Minister.

Arcola, March 5.—Three additions yesterday—7 in two weeks at regular services.—L. T. Faulders.

East St. Louis, March 6.—The Lansdowne Church is in a meeting, with E. T. McFarland, of St. Louis. Eighteen additions to date—11 by confession, 2 by letter, 5 from denominations; meeting continues.—C. O. Reynard, Minister.

Lake Fork, March 6.—The meeting at Ogden closed Sunday with 33 additions—21 by confession, 4 by statement, 1 by letter, 2 from denominations, and 5 by restoration.—J. D. Williams, Evangelist.

Taylorville, March 10.—Two additions since last report—1 by baptism and 1 by letter. All departments doing good work.—Zuinglius Moore.

Arrowsmith, March 10.—Our meeting, held by Evangelists Lockhart and Garmong, closed with 35 added. The weather was very unfavorable.—C. A. Lockhart, Minister.

Clay City, March 9.—Preached five nights at Bement; 7 additions—6 by confession and 1 by statement.—C. Monroe.

Mt. Vernon, March 5.—Meeting at Dahlgren 16 days old, with 15 additions; organized March 4 with 25 members; expect to build a house in the near future: meeting continues with good interest. —Lew D. Hill and Wife, Evangelists.

Rushville, March 5.—Nine additions recently.—W. E. Harman, Minister.

Indiana.

Indianapolis, March 10.—The meeting at the West Park Church closed with 32 additions—58 since Jan. 1.

Indianapolis, March 7.—Twenty-five confessions and 19 added by relation at the Hillside Church since last report.—O. E. Tomes.

Dublin, March 7.—I have just closed a three weeks' meeting at Clarksville, with 17 additions—11 by confession, 3 by letter, 1 reclaimed and 2 from other religious bodies.—Joseph Morris.

Sheridan, March 8.—Meeting ten days old; 33 added—25 by confession, 7 by letter and statement, 1 from Baptists. Great interest; house too small to accommodate the people. A. L. Crim, evangelist; J. Wallace Tapp, singer; W. D. Bartle, pastor. Meeting continues.—A. P. Fifer.

THE WOES OF INTEMPERANCE. —Prov. 23:29-35.

(Temperance Lesson.)

Memory verse, 31.

GOLDEN TEXT.—At the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder.—Prov. 23:32.

The series of studies in the life of Christ is interrupted to make place for a temperance lesson based on some verses from the Book of Proverbs.

The Proverbs belong to a department of Hebrew literature which is called Wisdom Literature. In these writings we hear the voice of the men who might be called the sages of Israel, as distinguished from the prophets and priests. Their purpose was to give wise advice concerning the conduct of life. A large part of their teaching was not primarily religious. It was rather ethics of a utilitarian type. Its main thesis was: Virtue pays. The life of temperance, truthfulness, honesty, chastity, peace, is the life which yields the largest return in happiness. The fear of God, in which all these virtues are summed up, is, therefore, worth while as a rule of life. The maxim, "honesty is the best policy," is of a piece with this type of ethical teaching.

Given this conception of life, the constant relation of virtue to reward, wisdom becomes equivalent to righteousness and sin may be defined as folly. So we find in the Proverbs that the sinner is constantly represented as a fool. He is a man who wastes his opportunities; who misses the real joys and incurs needless trouble and pain by foolishly choosing a wrong course of life. It is "the fool" who "saith in his heart there is no God." "Those that hated knowledge did not choose the fear of Jehovah." "It is as sport to a fool to do wickedness." And so throughout the whole collection of Proverbs, it is represented that the advantages of the virtuous life are so great and obvious that only the fool will choose the paths of vice.

This is not, of course, the highest form of moral teaching, nor the highest motive to virtue and godliness. It is, however, a form of argument peculiarly suited to the inculcation of temperance. While it is a general principle of life that character can be developed only by the exercise of self-control and moderation in all things, yet it is true that the visible and immediate results of those indulgences which we commonly call "intemperance" are the strongest argument against such indulgence.

Strong drink is evil because it does evil. Drunkenness is a sin, because of its effects upon the individual, the family and the state. It is folly as well as sin, because it weakens manhood and destroys both happiness and usefulness. It adds sorrow, subtracts joy, multiplies misery and divides strength.

Against a vice which carries its own punishment with it as this does, the strongest appeal lies in this common-sense argument of the sages of Israel, that virtue is the wise man's way of getting the best out of life, while sin is the fool's choice.

BOUNTIFUL SOWING: OUR GIFTS TO CHRIST'S CAUSE.—Luke 6:38; 2 Cor. 9:1-15.

| S. Topic. | |

The context clearly shows that when Paul said, "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift," he had thanksgiving in mind rather than giving thanks.

The all-seeing Eye can unmistakably trace all the connection between our gifts to that end, and the conquest of heathen continents by the church, and in the apportionment of the rewards we shall not be overlooked. We ourselves can answer now whether there "will be any stars in our crowns."

What a gracious provision that from our sown lives there spring up spiritual and eternal harvests. Sow a Carey in India, and hope begins to burn in the heart of her millions; sow a Livingstone in African jungles, and light beams upon those long bowed under heathen cruelty. Let us freely sow of our money, thought, time and prayers and in the harvest home of redemption we shall sing and rejoice in our natural right of participation.

Many miserly givers in parting with their precious "two pennies" try to conjure up that cheerfulness the Lord loveth by appropriating to themselves the Master's eulogium on the poor widow. They may be giving as much as she did, but are not giving as she did until they give all they have. Such heavy sowing is not required, but let us not be expecting such rich reward for meager giving, "for as a man soweth so shall he also reap."

A man sowing sparingly on rich soil would be reproved by all for not making more of his opportunity for a rich harvest; but fertile alluvium and good seed-wheat never did sustain such fecundant relationship as exists between the promises of God and the placing of gifts on the altar of self-sacrifice. From this sowing we compute the reaping not by arithmetical but geometrical ratios. Let us grow into the grace of taking God at his word and become possessed of the true riches.

How like folly it seems to take bright grain from the basket and throw it down into the earth to molder and die. But the sower sees that field, so brown in March, when there is no leaf on the tree nor song in the sky, all agreen in May and musical with hopeful husbandmen in summer, and heaped high with golden shocks in autumn! Likewise the true seer rejoices in the promise, "And every one that hath left houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive a hundred fold, and shall inherit eternal life."

God's gifts are made in unstinted abundance. The mountains swell up into splendid proportions from bases large as empires; the plains are wide enough to completely filter the air that is wafted on into our cities; there is no suggestiveness of "prudential withholding" in filling up the ocean; Christ's sacrifice availeth for the covering of all the sins of all who would become heirs of God; there are resurrection bugles enough to arouse all who have ever slept in the grave, and in the city that lieth four square is room for all who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Freely we have received, freely should we give.

LIFE MUSIC WITHOUT A SOUL.—
Isaiah 5:12.

Expressions of the true sentiments of men and nations naturally enshrine themselves in song: Israel's Jubilate, Ex. 15:1-21; David's trust, Ps. 23; The king's penitence, Ps. 51; Mary's exaltation, Lu. 1:46-55; Zacharias' inspiration, Lu. 1:68-79; The Nativity, Lu. 2:14, revised version.

Like lusterless alabaster, or a blossom with blighted germ, or toil without reward, or mustering summer clouds empty of rain, or desert mirage to thirsty pilgrims, or a lute with widening rift, or marriage without love, are rituals and forms of worship not all athrill with sincerity and faith, and conscious communion with God.

It is none too easy to bear the burdens of life even by us who have the deathless hope of immortality singing in our souls. How forced must be the smiles and merriment of all those who have not been born again, whose souls have not been quickened, who have no hope both sure and steadfast anchored within the veil! In love let us woo them into singing with us the songs of Moses and the Lamb.

A stone may be cut with the most exquisite skill known to the lapidary's art, but if there be no central inner fires gleaming through its facets it has little charm for those seeking precious gems. So one may sing a musical composition with faultless precision and with all the expression taught in the schools, but if in the singer's heart there be not a passionate love for God and man, angels will not lean on their silenced harps to hear, nor will it give to men the conscience and courage and hope they receive from soulful songsters unknown to fame.

Greek art and drama recognized man's intellect and glorified it by dedicating to it almost matchless trophies of human genius; but recognition of the supremacy of the eternal spirit is not discerned in the records of that splendid era. There have been subsequent periods in which all thought and achievements were lavished upon the body, and both mind and spirit were ignored. But the golden age seems to be dawning and among its signs are better provisions for the bodies of all, more care for the development of the mind and acknowledgment of the supremacy of the soul in this divine triumvirate. All parts are now being sung in the music of life by the prohpets and soon all the earth will join in the glad refrain.

By the rivers of Babylon the Assyrians demanded songs of Israel, but they hanged their harps on the willows, for how could they sing in a strange land when they remembered Zion? Neither need we expect the ideal music of childhood while the little ones are denied their natural inheritance of noble parentage and an atmosphere of purity and culture; nor of manhood and womanliness, so long as they are exiled from home and out in the strange land of sin. How rapturous will grow earth's songs when the old Assyrian tyrant is dethroned, and how joyous must those of heaven be where sin has never flatted a note nor a tremolo wept through the cadences! Restore us to our native land, O, Lord, and let us sing unto thee a glad new song.

In an earlier and better era the harp and lute, the tabret and pipe, had been solemnly dedicated to the service of the Lord. Now they were used to inflame men's passions at their bacchanalian revels. In Christian history analagous but greater depravity was witnessed when even the Lord's supper was made an occasion of intemperate feasting and wine drinking. And in our own day we see means of grace abused and perverted until they become weights rather than wings—the liberty of the Gospel distorted into license exempting from prescribed duties, and the great doctrines of the Scriptures used as foils for the exploitation of casuistic knowledge, uncharitable judgments and self-glorification rather than for growth in grace and the perfecting of character. Let us take heed lest we, too, commit sacrilege with things sanctified.

A Reliable Concern.

I take pleasure in calling attention of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to the advertising of the Apex Manufacturing Company beginning in this issue of the paper. This company is located at Bloomington, Ill., and is the result of a combination two years ago of the Keystone Carriage Company, of Cincinnati, O., the Columbus Carriage Company, of Columbus, O., and the Parsons Vehicle Company, also of Columbus, O. The successful experience of these companies and large portions of their skilled men were thus consolidated in Bloomington. The foremen and their subordinates are all experienced men. The superintendent has been engaged in the manufacture of vehicles for over twenty-five years.

The Apex Manufacturing Compny assures me that nothing but first-class material and workmanship enters into the construction of their vehicles and that all orders shall receive strict and prompt attention.

J. A. Harrison, secretary and manager of the company, is one of our brethren, an active member of the Second Christian Church, of Bloomington. You Will Prosper in the Southwest

If you purchase a farm in the Southwest now while the land is cheap, you will soon see grow up around you a community of prosperous, energetic men, who like yourself, have seen the possibilities of the Southwestern farmer, and have taken advantage of them. This very condition, which is rapidly forming all over the Southwest, makes the value of land increase rapidly, to the certain profit of those who own it.

There are more and better opportunities for making money—for home building, in the Southwest—along the line of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas R'y today, than anywhere else. You have only to get on the ground to prove this. If you are in any way interested in the Southwest, write today for a copy of my new paper "The Coming Country."

How Would You Answer?

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

In a conversation with a friendly old Methodist gentleman a short time ago, the subject of creeds came up. He argued with me to the effect that we had an unwritten creed that was just as much binding among us as theirs which was written. He said that the word "creed" comes from "credo" (I believe) which, of course, is true. He said that we had points in our interpretation of the Scripture that we made prominent and would not accept those who did not believe with us on those points. He had been sprinkled, and asked me if I would accept him on his baptism. Of course I replied, "Nay, verily." He then held that was in our unwritten creed. He brought up several other points and showed in conclusion that we had an unwritten creed that we made just as binding as other churches do. X. Y. Z.

[The mistake of our Methodist brother, which seems to have been shared in a measure by our correspondent, is the idea that we have no written creed. As a matter of fact, we have a very definite creed, namely, the Messiahship and divinity of Christ, or, as Peter puts it, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God!" In addition to that, we have an authoritative interpretation of that creed and of the duties which grow out of it, which is the New Testament. What that New Testament does not bind upon us we are not at liberty to bind upon others. Nor is it our interpretation of the New Testament that we insist upon, but the interpretation approved by the consensus of scholarship. The combined judgment of the best Biblical scholars of the Christian ages has reached certain definite conclusions as to the meaning of the New Testament conditions of membership and Christian conduct. As restorers of New Testament Christianity, we are simply trying to carry out this generally accepted understanding of what is involved in the New Testament creed. There is not a point at issue with our religious neighbors that we are not prepared to submit to the test of the best scholarship and the ablest exegesis of the Church universal.—EDITOR.]

BIGGERSTAFF.

Joseph B. Biggerstaff was born in Monroe county, Ky., April 5, 1823, and fell asleep in Jesus at Plattsburg, Mo., Jan. 30, 1906, aged 82 years, 8 months and 25 days. Early in life he removed to Missouri, locating in Clinton county, where he continued till his death. In 1849 he was married to Mary E. Collins, of Clay county, Mo. These two congenial spirits constituted an ideal companionship in holy wedlock, and formed a home on Christian principles, enthroning Christ therein. It was known far and wide as the preachers' home, and many a weary, dust-stained one had found shelter within its hospitable walls. Their benefactions were bestowed with unstinted hand, and so fully and helpfully did they enter into the sorrows, needs and cares of others, soothing, supplying and supporting, that they came to sustain to the entire community almost the relationship of kindred in the flesh, and were called lovingly by all who knew them "Uncle Joe and Aunt Mary." Seventeen years ago the good, true wife left this earthly partnership for the closer fellowship of heaven, and while her husband never ceased to mourn her loss, yet no change was made in the current of his life, and alone he continued the gracious ministry they had so beautifully performed together. In 1842, under the ministry of Bro. Duke Young he united with the church, was a charter member of the first congregation organized here, and one of its deacons. He continued in this office, faithful and zealous, till he was advanced to the office of elder, in 1892, which he held at the time of his decease. Space does not permit detailed mention of the many interesting things that might be said concerning this good man. He was indeed a "good man," full of the Holy Spirit and of faith. Much of the property he accumulated was given to religious and benevolent enterprises. Having no children of their own, he and his dear wife supplied the lack by taking into a childless home the children of others, and rearing them as tenderly and carefully as if their own. "The widow and orphan were visited by them," and so they had pure and undefiled religion. He was of large stature, and his heart was as big as his body. A man of strong convictions, always decisively upon the right side of every moral and religious question, he was as simple as a child and as guileless as Nathanael. No one will be more missed. The church deeply feels the loss. As an officer and member, he rendered loving, regular and substantial service. His example and influence will long be felt, and all lives are the better that have come in touch with this manly Christian. A great throng of loving hearts came to the burial to pay the last tribute of affection and high regard. Brothers Haley, Perkins and Capp assisted the writer in the funeral services, each one speaking a word of high approval of the life and character of Uncle Joe.

J. P. PINKERTON.

GLIDDEN.

On Nov. 27, 1905, at the home of his daughter, in Colorado Springs, Col., Bro. T. P. Glidden entered into the higher life. He was born Sept. 5, 1829, and married March 8, 1857, to Sarah Beard, who passed on before. Baptized by Brother Gans, he had been a faithful member of the church for about 35 years. He made his home at Centropolis, Kan., for many years, where he was an elder of the church. He leaves to mourn his loss six children. N. WILSON.

MILLER.

Mrs. Laura J. Miller died at Datona, Fla., on Sunday, Jan. 21. Mrs. Miller's home for many years was in Springfield, Ill. She was an active member of the church there while I served as preacher, from 1885 to 1888. She took a leading part in all the activities of the church, and was an indefatigable worker. Some years after I moved to Hiram, O., as president of Hiram College, Mrs. Miller moved there. She showed the same activity in church work at Hiram that she had formerly shown in Springfield. She was a woman of large generosity, and especially for the cause of Christian education. Although she was of limited means, she at one time made a pledge of $500 to the W. M. C. A. building of Hiram College. On account of delicate health the last few years of her life she lived in Florida. I want to bear testimony to the sterling worth of this noble Christian woman. She will be gratefully remembered by many friends. E. V. ZOLLARS.

Waco, Tex.

MOSS.

Once more the Paris Church has been called upon to part company with one of its chosen leaders. For many years the name of David Hickman Moss has been familiar to every one who knew Paris and the Paris Christian Church. Born in Boone county, Sept. 19, 1827, Brother Moss passed to his final reward Jan. 30, 1906, aged 78 years, 3 months and 11 days. Nearly his whole life was spent in Paris. In 1849 he was one of 15 composing a pack-mule company, which, without tent or covering except the sky, rode on horseback from St. Joseph, Mo., to Sacramento, Cal. For three years and a half he mined for gold or engaged in mercantile business in the west, and then returned to Paris. For 15 years he practiced law, being for a time associated with Major Howell. Later, he was district attorney for the 16th judicial district and still later he was elected circuit judge for the same district. But for many years he has been more widely known in financial circles and as president of the Paris National Bank. Judge Moss was honored and loved by all who knew him. His private character in youth, manhood and old age has ever commanded respect, and sincere is the sorrow of the community at his loss. Public-spirited, kind in his dealings, considerate of the humblest, many a sad heart truly says, He was my friend, my trusted counselor and adviser. For many years he has been an elder in the Christian Church, the personal friend and esteemed adviser of its membership and pastors. As president of its board, he gave willingly of his thought, time and means to the advancement of the church, and great was our regret when, a few months ago, he asked release because of increasing infirmities. Judge Moss leaves the companion he so tenderly loved and eight children to revere his memory. Though scattered in life's duties from the Atlantic to the Pacific, they are permitted to gather in the old home and together lay away the body of their dead. As a man, upright and respected; as a citizen, honored and cherished; as a Christian, genuine, sincere and faithful; in his family, reverenced and beloved, Brother Moss has left as a heritage a memory untinged with regrets and a splendid incentive to others to emulate his virtues. Appropriate resolutions of respect were passed by his associates on the official board and read by the pastor before the church. Similar action has been taken by the various organizations, civic or fraternal, with which he has been associated.

What Have We Done To-Day?

We shall do much in the years to come,
  But what have we done to-day?
We shall give our gold in a princely sum,
  But what did we give to-day?
We shall lift the heart and dry the tear,
We shall plant a hope in the place of fear,
We shall speak the words of love and cheer,
  But what did we speak to-day?

We shall be so kind in the after while,
  But what have we been to-day?
We shall bring to each lonely life a smile,
  But what have we brought to-day?
We shall give to truth a grander birth,
And to steadfast faith a deeper worth,
We shall feed the hungering souls of earth;
  But whom have we fed to-day?

We shall reap such joys in the bye and bye,
  But what have we sown to-day?
We shall build us mansions in the sky,
  But what have we built to-day?
'Tis sweet in idle dreams to bask,
But here and now, do we our task?
Yes, this is the thing our souls must ask,
  What have we done to-day?

The Bronze Vase.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

[Mrs. Revore, mother of the twins, Raymund and Rhoda, when dying tells them that there is a secret which may or may not have great influence upon their later lives. The secret is in a letter which is in a tin box in the bank of the town. The box is to be opened and the letter read only if either one of the twins makes the other very unhappy. The mother dies, and Raymund and Rhoda are left to the mercy of strangers, their mother's half brother in St. Louis having failed to answer repeated letters from Mrs. Revore. The new minister, Brother Bellfield, takes the children into his already overflowing home. Rhoda has a visit from a mysterious man named Boggs, who claims to have been sent by Mrs. Revore's half brother to find out whether the children know anything of a bronze vase.]

CHAPTER IX.

Rhoda, pale and panting, stopped at the bottom of the staircase. She feared that if she went up the stairs, the man would follow her. He might do something to the invalid. He was about middle age and, in spite of his decent clothes, everything about him was repulsive to the girl. The large, shiny boots, the new hat, the clothes with their green check, seemed to breathe of a criminal atmosphere. The impudence of the man in forcing his way into the hall, and the baseness of his nature that prevented him from squarely meeting her eyes, moved her with a nameless repugnance. As he continued to stare shiftily at her, Rhoda asked again, but with less courage than before, "What do you want?"

"Who are you?' inquired the man. "My name is Boggs. What is yours?"

"I am Rhoda Revore."

The man laughed a sickly kind of persuasive laugh, as if he would try to win her confidence. "I knew what your name was," he said. "Where's Raymund?"

"Raymund went to church."

"And so your mother is dead," said Boggs. "Poor Mrs. Revore! I haven't seen her since you and Raymund were babies. Much difference in your ages?"

"We are twins," Rhoda answered. Then she asked suddenly, partly losing her fear, as Boggs showed no intention of coming nearer, "Did Uncle William send you?"

"Yes," said Boggs, rubbing his hands together in a way that reminded the girl of oil and slime, they were so moist and clammy and noiseless in their motion. "Your uncle William was the man. So you are twins, are you? Yes, now I remember. I knew your father poor Dick Revore. He never lived to see you two get to be helpless orphans, Dick didn't. Poor Dick, it was well enough, I reckon."

"Did uncle William send for us?" asked Rhoda with a sense of loathing that she would never have the courage to go to St. Louis in company with this man.

"No, not your uncle William! I came here to ask just one question. He sent me here to find out one thing. I've come all the way on that account." He fixed his snaky little eyes on Rhoda and asked abruptly, "Did your ma ever tell you about the bronze vase?"

Rhoda was confused by his venomous look. "What bronze vase?" she asked, helplessly.

"Any bronze vase," said the man with sudden sharpness. "Tell me the truth, girl, and no lies! And tell me this instant. Do you know about the bronze vase? Quick, I say, you little—yes or no?"

"I don't know about any vase at all," said Rhoda terrified by his brutal manner. "I never heard of a bronze vase. Mother hasn't had any vase since I can remember."

The man turned and left the house. At first Rhoda was too paralyzed with fear to move. When she ventured to the door to make sure of his departure, he was vanishing down the street. In the reaction, she sank upon the floor by the front door and sobbed hysterically. A long time passed before she crept upstairs. The invalid was still sleeping peacefully.

Rhoda was perplexed by a difficult question. Should she tell what had happened? Raymund ought to know. Finally she decided to confide in Brother Bellfield. That afternoon she told him what had happened. The good minister was, as he expressed it, already "frazzled out." The youngest grandchild had cried through most of his sermon, and when at last, by the most languid efforts, Mrs. Jasper had succeeded in silencing her, the intermediary had brought fresh diversion by falling off the bench. Brother Bellfield was still farther reduced in spirits by the exhaustion of a week of moving. Nevertheless his sympathy and interest in what Rhoda told him was fresh and grateful. The account was so strange, the incident so preposterous, that he was inclined to believe Rhoda had been shut up in the house with a wandering madman.

"Who suggested your uncle William's name?" he asked. "Did you mention it first, or did he?"

"I did. I asked him if uncle William sent him."

"You see!" exclaimed her friend. "He has never heard of your uncle, but he seized upon your hint. The idea of any one being sent here all the way from St. Louis merely to ask you if you knew about a bronze vase is absurd. The man was evidently crazy. I don't believe I would speak of it, even to Raymund. The family would all be alarmed; it would be bad for my sister, and it would bother Raymund, and perhaps excite him about something that we will never hear of again. I'll see that you are not left here alone, after this."

Rhoda was convinced that the minister was right; she did not tell Raymund.

The orphans passed three weeks at the minister's house. They did not start to school, but recited their lessons to Morton Bellfield. The young man did not require much time to dispose of Raymund's recitations, but he spent a good while over those of Rhoda. Raymund might have suspected that his sister was growing slow to learn if she had not confided in him, "I believe, Ray, that Mr. Morton only teaches us so he can talk to me about his trouble. He has a great, great trouble; it is a secret, but is something he can never get over, if he lives to be a hundred years old. He says so. His heart is broken."

"Is that why he doesn't help with the work?" inquired Raymund.

"That is it," said Rhoda seriously. "He has no heart to work."

"His trouble acts on him," remarked Raymund, "just like the climate does on Mrs. Jasper Bellfield."

"Raymund," said Rhoda, her blue eyes flashing, "you ought not to make fun of Mr. Morton. His trouble is something you couldn't understand. You are too young to enter into it," she added largely.

"I happen to be as old as you," Raymund smiled.

"Girls get old, first," said Rhoda wisely. She left him, and carried her geography to Morton.

"Rhoda," said Morton gently, his large melancholy eyes resting upon her sympathetic face, so pretty with its deep blue eyes and its hair like silver thread, "what is the capital of Wisconsin?"

Rhoda told him promptly (I trust the reader could have done as well).

"That is right," said Morton. "Lily and I used to talk about moving there when we first married, and going to housekeeping.

Her most intimate friend lives there. Lily and I, when we were first engaged, talked all the time about how we would live when we were married. She seemed to enjoy it as much as I. But that was before the Other One came to town. Now where is Portland?"

"Portland, Oregon?"

"Certainly not," said Morton. "I mean Portland, Missouri."

Rhoda shook her head. "I don't know," she said, with a troubled look.

"It is a very little place," said Morton. "Maybe it isn't on the map. Let's hunt for it. It ought to be in the northern part, close to Albany, Missouri." They bent over the map, their heads touching like those of fast comrades. "Here is the place," said Morton, making a mark with his pencil where the map was blank. "Portland is right there. That is where Lily was born."

"I will always remember that," said Rhoda. She took his pencil and made the mark deeper.

At the end of the third week, Wizzen, slowly sauntering past the gate, spied Rhoda on the porch-steps, reciting to Morton. "Say, Rhoda," he called, "is Raymund there?"

"He is in the house," Rhoda answered.

Wizzen stood and swung the gate to and fro. "Do you want him?" asked Rhoda.

"Nuck," said Wizzen. Rhoda wanted to go on with her lesson and Morton wanted to talk about Lily, but nothing could be done while Wizzen stood attached to the gate. At last, as with a supreme effort, Wizzne screwed up his eyes, twisted his mouth, and looked at Rhoda from under the tip of his glazed cap. "Miss Glory wants both of you immediately," he said slowly. "Mrs. Omer is there. She's just back from Kansas City, and she said she didn't want to be kept waiting. They want you both immediately."

"Oh, Morton," said Rhoda with a gasp, as she unconsciously clasped her little hands together, "they are going to send us to the orphan home, after all!"

Morton took her hands in his and patted them softly. "You can always count on me," he said, his fine eyes looking at her dreamily from under his crisp, short, curly hair, "you can always count on me—remember that, Rhoda!"

Our Filipino Indians.

BY C. L. PICKETT.

In all the mountain regions of Luzon there are tribes of people who have not responded to the inroads of the civilization of the past centuries. In the three provinces of Ilocos Sur, Abra and Ilocos Norte, there are, according to the census report, 29,846 of these people. Most of these are Tinguiannes, some are Igorotes and a very few Negritoes. With the exception of the latter, they are not different in color, and their general manners and modes of life are not very different from their more civilized brethren near the coast. It was my privilege recently to accompany Brother H. P. Williams on one of his trips to a Tinguianne village in the mountains of Abra. The population of the village was about 1,000, but it being just at the time of the rice harvest, we found it impossible to get the people together in any considerable numbers. We had abundant opportunity, however, to converse with and preach to a few of the principal men of the village. We had taken two native Christian Ilocanos with us, and a third joined us the second day. These seemed especially of propagating Christianity and some of their best sermons were propounded into the ears of only one or two or three.

One evening the president, treasurer and school teacher, together with one other man and a couple of boys, became so interested that the conversation lasted for more than three hours, during which time the first five chapters of the Gospel of Matthew had been read and numerous effective sermonettes had been delivered. All seemed loth to close a few minutes after 11 o'clock. On our first morning with them the president sent out runners to tell the sick to come in for treatment. More than 30 of them came. Brother Williams told me that on a former visit he had caused the drums to be beaten in the streets to tell the people to come to hear the preaching.

Generally speaking, we found the people rather shy, timid, very quiet and apparently suspicious of innovations. A Catholic friar had formerly been among them for some time, but he had scarcely left an impression. Their religion seems to be one of "Spirits" with the Evil Variety Predominating.

At death they frequently place food over the grave or in front of the house to satisfy the "spirit" so he will not disturb other members of the family. They frequently place food also at the entrance of the village so that as the "spirit" enters he may be made happy and will do them no harm. The only evidence of this kind that we saw on this visit was a bunch of newly harvested rice hung up on a bamboo pole in front of their granaries, in order that the "spirit" might be appeased and not molest the contents of their bins.

Three nights and two days were spent in their midst and every opportunity was used to come into intimate contact with them, dispel their fears and win their friendship. In how much we were successful the future alone will reveal. One afternoon, after divers and sundry sermons, the chief man of the village took it upon himself to explain in their own dialect what had been said, and for nearly 15 minutes he preached as fervently as any one could ask. Then, in the morning, before we left, he took occasion to explain to the people who had gathered about that we had not come to them for gain, but that we had come to heal the sick and teach as Jesus Christ had done, and to tell them of the Great Spirit.

We left them in the best of good humor, and it is our firm belief that future visits will reveal more clearly the power of the "Sword of the Spirit" and that ere long there will be a real spiritual harvest ready for the reaping.

A Tale of a Tea Table.

Betsy Bobbity baked a bun—
A beautiful, big, bewitching one,
So light that it fairly shone with pride,
With currants a-plenty safe inside.

Patsy Poppity peeled a peach,
A pear and a plum and put them each
In a tiny pie with a frosted top,
As fine as those in the baker's shop.

Three little maids to the pantry flew
To look for the dishes pink and blue,
And a terrible tragedy happened next—
And my, but the three little maids were vexed!

Young Puppety Pup came racing by,
And the little red table caught his eye;
Then never a bit he cared—not he—
That he hadn't been asked to the dainty tea;

But he ate up Betsy Bobbity's bun,
With all of the currants—every one,
The three little pies at a single bite,
And everything else there was in sight!

Dora Doppity cried, "Dear me!
What a capital time to give a tea!"
And she put the little red table out,
With three little chairs set round about.

And Betsy Bobbity's Baby Blue,
And Patsy Poppity's Precious Prue,
And Dora Doppity's Daisy Dee,
Were asked to come to a charming tea.

But never a word the three guests said,
As they gazed with a smile right straight ahead;
And never they showed the least surprise,
Although, right under their very eyes,
The rude and ravenous Puppety P.
Ate all that they were to have had for tea!

Which shows us plainly that Baby Blue,
And Daisy Dee and the Precious Prue,
Were well brought up, and clearly knew
That the proper, ladylike thing to do
Was never to make remarks at tea,
Whatever they chanced to hear or see.

The Ideal in Everyday Life.

Let us now go for a walk, during which we will observe the people who are pursuing their callings. Let us note their mood.

We shall come upon persons whom we can not see sweep, hammer, or dig the earth without experiencing a desire to take from them their broom or hammer or spade in order to show them how they ought to use it This sort of worker is to be met with quite as often in the schools, in the church, in the studios of painting and sculpture, as in the fields, the mines, and the shops. Without ideals people are the same everywhere. When they teach, they make us weary of learning; when they make music, they cause us to hate music. They have no faith in their work. All the time they have the air of saying: "What a stupid trade I have chosen! Be sure my children shall not follow it."

Those who put the ideal into their work produce an altogether different effect upon us, whether they be manual or intellectual laborers. You see them at work, performing at times unpleasant duties, which you, perhaps, would not choose, but, with so much of good will, of punctuality and fidelity, and such an appreciation of "the useful flight of days" that they appear great to us, and an envy seizes us to imitate them.—Charles Wagner, in Harper's Bazar.

The "Square Deal" and the Modern Husband.

We have heard much of the square deal ever since President Roosevelt started the cry. It is good gospel, and the modern husband is a subscriber to the creed. What he misses most in his life to-day is the proper relation of his home to his business. The fault may rest as much with himself as with his wife, but—as with many things that need reform—the remedy must come through her larger vision and initiative. She must see as he knows only too well, that in all the employments in which the modern husband does his part, system becomes every day more tyrannical. The world of effort is running on stricter schedules. All the cogs in its wheels must turn promptly. The plea of a late breakfast, or a laggard alarm clock, or a badly managed domestic establishment, does not satisfy the machine. The sins of the home are visited upon the husband by the damage they do to his standing with his work, and if in his home he has not a square deal to fit him in body and temperament for the strain of the strenuous day, he is not going to measure up to his opportunities. And as a man stands with his work so his family must stand with the world. A square deal for the modern husband makes him want to get home from his work—and that means a gentler system in the house than he meets in his working place; just as much system, of course, but the indefinable something added to it. A few flowers add nothing to the substantial qualities of the meal, and system without tact is still practical and useful, but system with tact is even more productive of smiles, that cost nothing and which are beyond price, than the meal with flowers.—From the Delineator.

The Man in the Copper Box.

Some interesting deductions have been announced recently in regard to the study of the human body which has been going on for some time at the Middletown (Conn.) experiment station in co-operation with the federal government. Persons experimented on are shut up for a week or more in an air-tight copper box large enough to hold a man in comfort for several days, says "Country Life in America" for March. The chamber contains a folding bed, chair, table, etc., and ventilating pipes. A man is put into the room and then watched. Everything he consumes, his food, water, air, is carefully measured beforehand, and likewise everything he gives out. It would seem as if he could hardly think without the mental effort being measured and recorded in calories of heat. The air he has breathed is passed through purifying vessels, which remove the carbon dioxid and whatever else his lungs have put into it. The deposit is then weighed. It would have been impossible to light a match or burn a candle in the respiration chamber during the experiment, yet the subject, who was purposely not told anything about it, read, slept, ate his meals, conversed with his friends over the telephone, and in fact seemed in the best spirits during the twenty-four hours the air was maintained in the above condition.

A Matter of Equilibrium.

Dr. Torrey, the English evangelist who was recently conducting meetings in the West, is a man of ready wit, which he uses with effect when interrupted while speaking. On one occasion in London a bibulous fellow arose and announced, waveringly, that he did not believe everything in the Bible.

"I don't see how anybody can walk on water," he declared. "Can you do it, Dr. Torrey?"

The preacher looked grimly at the man for a moment, and then answered:

"Well, I can walk on water better than I can on rum."—Harper's Weekly.

The Madonna.

Loveliest and most exquisite of the pictures that adorn our homes are those representations of the Madonna that artists for ages have loved to paint. Still lovelier are the madonnas one meets as one goes about the world. In a suburban train, one summer day, an Italian peasant took her seat by my side. She was a mere girl, not more than sixteen. On her bare brown hand showed her wedding ring, and in her arms she held a tiny infant, a wee scrap of humanity. Her face was radiant with pride and joy. From time to time she lifted a corner of the veil that hid the little crumpled face of the bambino, peeped at it and looked up with an expression so angelic, so heavenly, that it made my heart warm.

"Please let me look," I said. And never queen, with greater triumph in possession, displayed her princely offspring than this youthful peasant mother showed her little child. "How old is he?" I asked. And the answer came, "Just three weeks old today." God bless her and every other mother who cradles her babe with such delight!—Margaret E. Sangster in Woman's Home Companion.

The Most Famous Revival Song.

The evangelistic meetings of Messrs. Torrey and Alexander, the famous revivalists, are the exact reproduction of those of Moody and Sankey. One point of analogy is that a new series of "Gospel Hymns" is coming into vogue. Chief among them is "The Glory Song," which has been translated into fifteen foreign tongues, including the Chinese. It has been published 17,000,000 times within three years, and has been copyrighted, and the publishers have declined to allow even Mr. Alexander to use it longer. Hence a substitute has been written under the direction of Mr. Alexander, which is as follows:

When time is ended and heaven begun,
Earth's trials over, its victories won;
When I shall hear the dear Savior's "Well done,"
  That will be glory, be glory for me.

CHORUS:
  Oh, that will be glory for me,
  Glory for me, glory for me,
  Saved by his grace and beholding his face,
  Oh, that will be glory for me!

When I shall see the dear Lord I have known,
Once more exalted, a King on his throne;
When I shall hear him confess me his own,
  That will be glory, be glory for me.

Life may bring sorrow and weariness now,
Under the weight of the cross I may bow;
When Jesus places a crown on my brow,
  That will be glory, be glory for me.
—Leslie's Weekly.

Rural Delivery.

A few months ago General Rush Hawkins contributed an article to the "North American Review," entitled "The Why of Rural Free Delivery," in which he argued that that service had been established to strengthen the hands of the political party now in power. Egbert T. Bush, a New Jersey farmer, answers General Hawkins' article in a very convincing paper which appears in the March number of the "Review" under the title "A Rural View of Rural Free Delivery." Mr. Bush shows the need that existed for such a service, and he claims that, if those who dwell in the cities help to pay for the rural service while they derive no advantage from it, a similar argument might be used by those who live in the country in regard to Free Delivery in the cities. He argues that Rural Free Delivery helps to pay for itself by economies effected through the discontinuance of star routes and messenger services, and through the gain which results from taking up the cancellations of offices from which the government previously derived no revenue. In fine, Mr. Bush insists that Rural Free Delivery is only the natural development of the City Free Delivery which was born of progress over forty years ago.

Chinese Children at School in America.

BY MANTON MARLOWE.

Among the "little citizens" of our country who were not born here none are quainter in their appearance or more interesting than the little Chinese children with their "pigtail" queues of jet-black hair, their almond-shaped eyes, and their queer dress. But in the cities where there are many Chinese children, one may see a good many of them dressed just as American children dress, and some have said good-bye to the "pigtail."

Chinatown of any large city is always an interesting if not very attractive place. It is a place of strange odors, strange sights and of strange sounds, if some of the Chinamen chance to be singing. The Chinaman with a musical voice is rare, but there is sometimes music in his soul even though he be denied the voice with which to express it sweetly. And, like some of our own Americans lacking the same gift, he will make an attempt at singing, no matter how strange and harrowing the result may be. I once lived not far distant from the laundry of a Chinaman who would sing in the city of Denver, and, what was worse, he would sing at untimely hours, such as 1 or 2 in the morning, for you know the Chinese laundryman is the most indefatigable of workers, and he may be found at his ironing board at almost every hour of the night. This Chinaman worked and sang so industriously in the "wee sma' hours" that some of us who lived near his laundry were compelled to ask the policeman on that beat to see to it that Ween Ting sang no more after 11 at night. There was no possibility of sleep with that strange, weird, rasping voice cutting the air when Ween Ting sang Chinese love songs. Indeed, I can hardly imagine a much more fearsome thing than those same love songs as he sang them in the stilly summer night.

But this article has to do with the Chinese children in our land, and particularly with those who go to school. I do not know that I have ever seen a Chinese boy or girl attending the regular public schools with American boys and girls. I suspect that few of the Chinese children are familiar enough with our language to keep up with an American course of study; therefore they have in San Francisco and New York and possibly in one or two other cities, schools excusively for Chinese children. New York now has such a school with about 25 scholars in it. It is in the Chinese quarter of the city, and the head master is Mr. Leong Mon Hain, who came from Canton in China for this express purpose. He has for one of his assistants Mr. Fong Chew, who is editor of a Chinese paper published in New York. These gentlemen teach in the Chinese language in the forenoon, and in the afternoon instruction in English is given by a young American teacher. Most of the children dress as they would in their native land, but some appear in the American blouse and knickerbocker, while the few girls wear the Chinese dress almost exclusively.

When the two teachers in Chinese have charge of the school, the pupils follow the custom of their own land and all study aloud, thereby creating an amusing kind of "blackbird chorus" that would utterly confuse an American teacher. I wonder if you know that it has been demonstrated that all foreign children in our public schools learn faster than our American children. One reason given for this is that the children of foreigners are so eager to learn our language that they take going to school much more seriously than does the average American boy or girl. They study very faithfully and very seriously, and the progress some of them make is remarkable. They "pick up" our language in an incredibly short time, and some of them who arrive in our country without being able to speak a word excepting in their native tongue, are, in a year or two, in grades with American boys and girls of the same age.

There is a public school exclusively for Chinese children in San Francisco, and last year the children in this school reached a higher percentage in their studies than those in any other public school in the city having no grade higher than the 7th. Indeed, the percentage was 100. Wong Buk Yue, an alert Chinese boy, had a higher average than any other pupil of any grade or nationality in the city. His average was 97, and the highest average attained by any other pupil was 94. It seems to me that the American pupils should have taken off their hats to little Wong Buk Yue. There is one boy of but 12 years in the New York school for the Chinese who speaks English almost perfectly. His name is Henry Wing, and he is a great help to the teacher, for when his schoolmates find themselves bewildered over some of our American words little Henry is glad to act as interpreter and make the meaning clear. Two boys, named Lee Yow and Lee Yen, neither of them 12 years old, are already well up in the mysteries of fractions, and they can read and write our language as well as the average American boy of that age.

Many of our preachers known to be large purchasers of books involve both themselves and this House in loss by ignoring us in making purchases. We possess rare facilities for securing perfect copies of books for our patrons, promptly and at reduced prices. Let us be your booksellers.

Reprehensible attempts are being made by certain publishers to create prejudice against this paper on account of its expressions on the subject of church federation. Possibly ten have been frightened into thinking we are hastening toward Christian union too rapidly, and have fallen behind the procession—certainly not a score. In former days many wrote, "Stop my paper," because we did not oppose the organ. Afterward more would thus terrify us because we did not fight the organization of missionary societies. But The Christian-Evangelist was right then and it is right now. It rejoices in a great and rapidly growing constituency, trusting in its leadership and continuing with it, even if it does not yield immediate, unquestioning and universal approval of every step that the Editor and his counselors believe tends toward the light.

the fact that some of the little girls bring their baby brothers or sisters with them, for the little Chinese girl must be a little mother to the baby of the family and the baby must go where she does. Happily for the school the Chinese baby is less given to crying than is the American baby, and in a school in which all the scholars study aloud, it matters little if a baby or two does indulge in a good "crying spell" during school hours. It can add but little to the babel already existing. But the scholars do not study aloud when the American teacher has charge, and that is always a matter of surprise to new pupils. The most alert little girl in this interesting school is named Tom Gay, although she is anything but a tomboy in her manners, and is, on the contrary, what some of our American teachers would be sure to call the "dearest little thing in the world." She is as good as the day is long. Indeed, refractory pupils are almost unheard of in the Chinese schools. Absolute obedience is too largely the rule in their own homes.

Did you know that there is no alphabet in the Chinese language? Each one of those strange hieroglyphics that you see in written or printed Chinese stands for a different word, and the little Chinaman has a great deal more memorizing to do when he attends school than you have to do in your American school. His habit of memorizing is one reason why he is such a quick learner. One should have a good deal of respect for the Chinese scholar, for he has acquired his learning through a tremendous amount of faithful industry.

His first day at school is an event of very great consequence in the life of a Chinese boy. The parents attach so much importance to this day that they sometimes go to some fortune-teller in order to make sure that they have made no mistake in selecting the day on which the boy shall begin his educational career. The child is clad in his very best clothes for the occasion, and he always takes with him a present for the teacher, and in order to make quite sure that success shall attend him, he burns some incense before a tablet on which the name of Confucius is written. Having done all this he feels that he has started out well. All the methods of study in a Chinese school are different from ours. The children do not use pen and ink in learning to write. They have instead a small camel's hair brush, a condensed cake of ink, an "inkstone" and a little vessel of water. These are the requisites for a lesson in writing. All the strange Chinese characters are made with the little brush, and one can but wonder how it is possible for these little scholars to make them twice alike.

Americans who have had experience in teaching Chinese children in public or mission schools find them to be eager and willing students, quick to respond to kindliness and friendliness on the part of the teacher, and if you think that these rather stolid-looking little fellows do not enjoy fun, you should see them at play during the recess and noon hours at school. Then they are just like other boys, for a boy is a boy in some things the world over.—Wellspring.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

Volume XLIII. No. 12. $1.50 a Year.

ST. LOUIS, MARCH 22, 1906.

WE need to beware of ecclesiastical bigotry, of theological prejudice, of intellectual prepossession and conceit. Humility, teachableness, susceptibility of soul, we must earnestly covet and pursue. The nobler souls are ever crying for the light. "That which I see not, teach Thou me." "Teach me Thy way, O Lord." "Teach me Thy statutes." "Teach me to do Thy will." Who are these suppliants for the clearer light? Are they babes, simpletons, novices, ignoramuses, illiterate, inexperienced souls, with the least vision and enlightenment? Surely not. They are the seers, the poets, the princes of the intellectual world, the masters of those who know, and it is precisely such royal souls as Moses, Job, Isaiah, David, Solomon, John, and Paul who are most conscious of imperfect knowledge, and who seek most passionately for the fuller all-illustrating light. If we live thus in simplicity of desire, in meekness of spirit, in all lowliness and openness of mind, praying that we may be filled with the riches of understanding, our whole body shall be full of light, as when the bright shining of a candle doth give us light.

For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

J. H. Garrison.

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

State Missions are among the most neglected of the great interests whose development is essential to a Centennial celebration creditable to a brotherhood powerful as ours will be by 1909. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST longs to see our State missionary societies coming into their rightful inheritance of popular esteem and help. The Christian Publishing Company so firmly believes in State Missions that it is supporting its own Living-Link Evangelist in Oklahoma. Read Bro. L. G. Thompson's article on Colorado and the Centennial. We shall be pleased to hear from other State Secretaries.

Progress and Centennial Plans in Colorado.

BY SECRETARY L. G. THOMPSON.

Colorado is in line with the centennial propaganda. Our last state convention planned larger things than ever before undertaken—the raising of $3,000 for state work this year. Colorado will have a celebration one year before the centennial. In 1908 the Colorado Christian Missionary Society will be 25 years old. Recently our state paper, the "Colorado Christian Herald," suggested that after we raise the $3,000 this year we increase the amount to $4,000 in 1907, and round out our first 25 years of organized work by raising $5,000 in 1908. There remains yet very much to be done if we raise the amount we have set before us this year, but it can be accomplished if all will do their best. Beginning in 1899 to attempt larger self-support, the effort was for $1,000 that year, and more than $1,200 were secured. The highest amount secured in any one year since was $1,629. Two years ago it was resolved to try for $2,500, and the last convention put our faith to the test by voting to strike boldly out for $3,000 this year.

Colorado has but 45 churches, and between 5,000 and 6,000 members. Some one in the east may say that we do not need missionary aid if we can attempt so much ourselves. Why, then, undertake such large things in a state where we are so weak? If the states where we are strong would attempt as much in proportion to membership and ability vast sums would pour into the missionary treasuries. The reason Colorado is attempting so much is because we are face to face with great opportunity and crying need; because the best our good friend and helper, the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, can do for us is so far short of our needs; because this great territory is plastic now, but to-morrow will be rigid and unyielding. Colorado presents one of the greatest missionary fields in the world. Central in the great west, abounding in resources which as yet have only begun to be developed, being rapidly peopled by some of the choicest individuals from the eastern and other states; projecting immense business enterprises; building a transcontinental railroad which will open a territory as large as the state of Pennsylvania; the national government digging vast irrigating canals, there is every reason why the eyes of the nation should be turned to this great commonwealth. This is the day of our opportunity; if we let it pass we do so at our peril.

There remaineth yet very much land to be possessed. Out of 59 county seats we have churches in but 19. We ought to establish churches at once in at least 36 promising towns and cities. Eleven churches are being aided, but seven are absolutely unable to support preaching without help from without, and they are waiting for that help. An evangelist should be put in the field to give his entire time to meetings. Some of these many needs can be met if we secure $3,000 this year. Never was here a more important hour in Colorado than the present.

Practically all that we have in Colorado has come from missionary aid. Out of our 45 churches 40 have received missionary aid. Our churches have been born in the missionary atmosphere and rocked in the missionary cradle, and, in turn, they are loyal to the missionary cause. Very few ever allow a year to pass without making a good offering to state work.

For the last three years we have been laying greater emphasis than formerly upon evangelistic work. Already this year we have some notable meetings to report. A four weeks' meeting at the Central Church of Pueblo, in which the minister, J. H. Mohorter, preached, added 139 to their membership. This is the largest result within the state in the memory of the writer where the meeting was held with home forces. A five weeks' meeting at La Junta, in which John T. Stivers was the evangelist, practically made a new church in that city, adding 96 to the membership, among them some of the most prominent and influential in the town. The same evangelist is at Rifle now, and the result up to Feb. 22 was 38 added, and the meeting continuing. Grand Junction, with Frederic Grimes, pastor, preaching, had 23 up to Feb. 21 and still going on. Rifle has just dedicated a good house, and Golden and Canon City are preparing to build modern houses. Our great need is more means to push the work faster.

Appreciative Constituents.

With very much pleasure and profit I have read THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST the last two years. It has the right ring. May it long continue to be a light to those who sit in darkness. J. H. COULTARD.
Owosso, Mich.

I want to get our Bible school to use your literature and supplies at once. Very frankly, I like the spiritual tone of the Christian Publishing Company, from THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST down to primary cards in the school. I commend your Christian spirit. R. E. ELMORE.

A Family Treasure.

Enclosed find $1.50. I enjoy my paper so much I want my father to read it.
Albany, Md. C. W. HARRISON.

It Is So Everywhere.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is winning more friends continually in Oklahoma.
Enid, Okla. SCOTT ANDERSON.

Life's Cheer.

I must have your paper to cheer me through this difficult life. I think that if more Christians would read your Christ-like pleading we would have a better world to live in. U. S. HAMBERGER.

A Bible School.

Any person who has long been a student in the school of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST can be pointed out in any society. They are its salt. They are a city on a hill. They are light to those in darkness. They have become diligent in faith, in spirit, in knowledge, in self-control, in patience, in Godliness, in brotherly kindness and in love. Such persons in any society form a unity.
Louisville, Ill. W. M. GLADSON.

From Honolulu.

I regret to see our benevolent interests losing you, but if such had to be I rejoice that THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST catches you. I like the way you are taking hold. Such energy, determination and boldness will win. I can not say anything too good for THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST or its leaders. What would we do without such a paper in these times? I fear the faith of the "Hard-shells" would claim us.
Honolulu. G. D. EDWARDS.

A Continuous Feast.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is a veritable feast of good things these days. I do not think it could well be improved upon, and yet I hope to see it grow in goodness and power and live to see that 100,000 limit reached; for when that number of our people shall read the paper, imbibe its spirit of catholicity, loyalty and love of the truth, the church will at once be a power never before realized
Havensville, Kan. T. J. RICHARDSON.

It Will.

I trust THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will keep sweet on the federation question and be very guarded in its statements, even though "the heathen rage and imagine vain things." The spirit of our Christ must ultimately lead our great brotherhood through federation into unity. But let us all be patient and kind with those whose spiritual status prevents their seeing the Master's glory, as well as those whose eyes the "god of this world" (i. e., dollars) has blinded. Lead and don't argue.
Hanford, Cal. C. C. BENTLEY.

An Anti-Trust Decision.

The United States Supreme Court has handed down two decisions of the highest importance for anti-trust proceedings now in progress. The decisions, which were in the cases of the paper trust and the tobacco trust, assert the principle that the agents and officers of a corporation can not refuse to testify or to produce the books of the corporation, on the ground that by so doing they would incriminate the corporation. It is the privilege of an individual, under the fifth amendment, to refuse to give testimony which would incriminate himself. But this is a matter of personal privilege and does not extend to corporations which are creatures of the state, enjoying privileges given to them by the state. Moreover, corporations can be brought into court only through the oral testimony of their officers and agents. But these men individually are not the corporation. The corporation in relation to them is another person, and the amendment does not permit any one to refuse to testify for fear of incriminating another. The decision further says:

> "The corporation is a creature of the state. It is presumed to be incorporated for the benefit of the public. It receives certain special privileges and franchises, and holds them subject to the laws of the state and the limitation of its charter. Its rights to act as a corporation are only preserved to it so long as it obeys the laws of its creation. There is a reserved right in the legislature to investigate its contracts and find out whether it has exceeded its powers. It would be a strange anomaly to hold that a state, having chartered a corporation to make use of certain franchises, could not, in the exercise of its sovereignty, inquire how these franchises had been employed, or whether they had been abused, and demand the production of the corporate books and papers for that purpose."

It is believed that this decision bears directly upon the case of the beef trust, and that it completely supports the position taken by Attorney-General Hadley of Missouri in his suit against the Standard Oil Company and his demand for testimony from Mr. H. H. Rogers.

The Kaiser's Failure.

Kaiser Wilhelm has, to all appearances, completely failed in his effort to secure a foothold in Morocco and to get his pretensions there recognized by the international conference at Algeciras. The essence of the controversy was the rivalry of France and Germany for precedence in Morocco and the control of Morocco is a highly important factor in that complicated section of European politics which is known as the Mediterranean situation. In this rivalry, France has the immense advantage of a prior claim. She is already on the ground with an effective and accepted influence over the Moroccan government. Germany, with a plausible pretext of protecting her commercial interests, but with deep-lying political motives, wishes an alteration of the status quo in her favor. The calling of the conference was to prevent the possibility of a hostile clash between these two powers. European politics is such a tangled web that no contest between two powers on any conceivable subject can fail to involve the interests of all the other powers, and this was especially the case in the Moroccan dispute. Within the past few days, Germany's political motive for her Moroccan policy has come more clearly to light, with the result that all the powers have virtually served notice upon her that she must not disturb the existing situation or further press her claims. Even Italy and Austria, her allies in the Triple Alliance, are with France on this issue, because it is vastly to their interest that there be no disturbance on the Mediterranean.

The Moros Again.

Our latest and reluctant wards, the Moros, of Jolo, have been on the warpath again, and it required a battle of four days, with nearly 900 casualties, to subdue them. A company of several hundred habitual offenders, whom even so lenient a critic as the sultan of Jolo characterized as rebels and robbers, fortified themselves in the crater of an extinct volcano, near the city of Jolo, and made raids from that stronghold. The situation became so serious that General Wood went down from Manila to look after it in person. There was a sharp, decisive engagement. The fortification was carried by storm. The Moros fought to the last ditch and insisted on being killed before they would give up. So, of necessity, it became a battle of extermination. The American casualties were not serious. It is believed that this will be the last engagement of such magnitude in Jolo. These occasional outbreaks are not to be wondered at. It is less than eight years since we entered the Philippines, some of whose islands, notably Jolo, contain large populations of warlike aborigines. It took a great deal longer than that to subdue the savage population of our own country, and it is not so many years since Indian outbreaks were tolerably common. Twenty-five years ago Apache raids in Arizona were almost as common as Yaqui raids in Sonora are now.

The Accident at Courrieres.

One of the most disastrous mining accidents in history occurred on Saturday, March 10, in the coal mines at Courrieres, near Calais, France. An explosion of fire damp caused the death by burning and asphyxiation of 1,193 men, according to the most accurate figures now obtainable. The accident occurred shortly after the men had descended into the mine in the morning. Of 1,795 miners who went down into the pits only 602 escaped alive. The explosion so wrecked the hoisting machinery that it was with difficulty that these were rescued, and in some of the shafts the loss of life appears to have been absolutely complete. Courrieres is in the center of one of the largest coal fields in France, with an annual output of 5,000,000 tons.

Mr. Taft and the Supreme Court.

The retirement of Justice Brown of the United States Supreme Court at the end of the present term of court, in the early summer, will leave a vacancy which Secretary Taft can doubtless have if he wants it. Although it has been his ambition to occupy a place on the supreme bench, it is understood that he has already twice declined appointment because he thought he owed some further service to the Philippines. That special service is now about completed, but while rendering it and performing the other duties of his office, Secretary Taft has become a presidential possibility. It is scarcely possible that he can be ignorant of this fact, and it would be entirely natural if, with this possibility, he should have conceived a new ambition superseding the old one. The acceptance of a place in the supreme court will be equivalent to a permanent retirement from politics, and it may be that this prospect will not be so attractive to Mr. Taft as it was four, or even two, years ago. On the other hand, it would be highly advantageous, from the standpoint of the present administration, to have the court reinforced just now by a man whose familiarity with current questions can not be doubted, and whose attitude regarding rate legislation and kindred topics is known to be in accordance with the President's views.

Susan B. Anthony.

Susan B. Anthony died March 13 of pneumonia at her home in Rochester, N. Y., at the age of eighty-six years. For sixty years she had been engaged in public work and for half a century had been recognized as the leading advocate of equal suffrage. Much of her work before the war was devoted to the anti-slavery cause. In early years she was an effective advocate of fuller civil rights for women, such as the right of married women to control their own earnings, and she was instrumental in securing some legislation in this direction. She was, first and last, a vigorous advocate of temperance. When refused admission to a temperance convention in 1850 on account of her sex she organized a convention of her own. But her name is associated in the public mind especially with the cause of equal suffrage, in the interest of which she wrote, lectured and organized incessantly. She was a woman of extraordinary intellectual and executive powers and of the highest character.

Christian Union: A Historical Study.

II. The Post-Apostolic Age.

1. Changes in Polity and Doctrine.

When we cross the boundary line of the first century we soon become aware of certain changes which have taken place or which are in the process of taking place in the Church. One of these relates to church government. In the New Testament there are two classes of officers spoken of in the local church, elders or bishops and deacons. Now we find that in each board of elders there is one to whom the term "bishop" is specially applied. He is still, however, only the president of the board of elders and bishop of the local church, but there is now a three fold ministry, instead of a two fold. It is not our purpose here, however, to deal with the question of "the historic Episcopate" except in so far as it bears on our general subject of Christian union.

There is no question but that the occasion of this increased emphasis upon ecclesiastical authority, which is so noticeable in the second and succeeding centuries, is the supposed necessity of having such authority in order to resist the rising heresies and preserve the unity of the Church. Jerome, the great scholar of the fourth century, says: "With the ancients presbyters were the same as bishops; but gradually all the responsibility was deferred to a single person, that the thickets of heresy might be rooted out." Perhaps the persecutions to which the Church was subjected in the latter part of the first century, and, with varying degrees of intensity, on down to the conversion of Constantine, and his elevation to supreme power and his edict of toleration in the year 312, had the effect of consolidating the Church and concentrating its authority. But whatever may have been the causes producing this increase of external authority in the Church and reliance upon such authority to preserve its unity, the fact is unquestionable and that is our concern at present.

Along with this gradual change in church government, in which authority is concentrated in the hands of bishops, and later in the hands of metropolitan or city bishops, of whom the bishop of Rome was at first only primus inter pares, or chief among equals, because he was bishop of the chief city, there was another change going on destined to have a no less lasting effect on the fortunes of the Church. This related to doctrine. The philosophic bent of the Greek mind found congenial employment in seeking to harmonize the simple but sublime facts and truths of the Gospel with their philosophy. "For a considerable time," as Professon Fisher tells us, "all Christian writings were in the Greek language. The services of the Church, even at Rome, were at first held in that tongue. So far did the Greek influence prevail that not until the beginning of the third century did Latin writings of any importance appear, and even then it is not in Rome, but in one of the provinces in North Africa, that theological works are first composed in this language." The group of writers of this period, known as the Apostolic Fathers, because they were supposed to have known personally some one or more of the apostles, were not thinkers of a high grade. Much of their writings is highly speculative and allegorical. "The ablest writers of this period," says Professor Fisher, "were the Alexandrian teachers. Alexandria was the seat of a great university, with its large libraries, its learned professors and its throng of inquisitive and active-minded youth. There, in the Jewish philosophy of Philo, Plato's teaching had been blended with the doctrine of Moses and the prophets, and by means of allegory the Old Testament had been made to re-echo with a modified sound the teachings of the Greek schools of thought. In such a community, as Christians multiplied, the instruction of catechumens often required doctrinal explanations much more advanced than were requisite in ordinary churches. Thus the catechetical school developed itself into a theological seminary, where abstruse points of divinity were handled and young men were trained for the clerical office. The Alexandrian theology was the first serious attempt, among those who adhered to the great facts and truths of the Gospel, to adjust the relations of Christian doctrine to reason and philosophy. It was the first attempt to build a bridge between Christianity and the wisdom of the Gentiles."*

Thus in Alexandria began that philosophic handling of "abstruse points of divinity" which gave rise to the Arian controversy and resulted in the formation of the Nicene creed at the council of Nice in the year 325. This adoption of an authoritative creed, other than the simple one of the Apostolic Age, had for its object also, as did the increase of ecclesiastical authority, the refutation of heresies and the preservation of the unity of the Church. The two chief heresies of that time were Ebionitism and Gnosticism, both of which had their beginnings in the Apostolic Age. The Ebionites were descendants of the Judaizing Christians of Paul's day, who continued to hold on to the observances of the Jewish law. Like all narrow sects, they had subdivided among themselves. It is in the very nature of narrowness and bigotry to divide and subdivide, as it is the nature of catholicity and charity to unite and cement together. The whole history of religious thought shows that just as any religious movement anchors itself to the past by holding on to that which has passed away, division sets in, because a part of it, refusing to be bound by the dead past, and sharing in the living thought and growing life of those who seek to keep in touch with the living Christ, move on in the stream of progress, leaving their fellows behind; and this process repeats itself as long as the sect has vitality enough to beget those who refuse to be shackled.

The Gnostics denied that Christ had come in the flesh; they claimed to be possessed of a gnosis or kind of knowledge not accorded to ordinary Christians. With an Oriental dualism they identified evil with matter, much as our "Christian Science" of to-day, and held that between God and man there was a chain of existence called eons, which emanated from him and filled up the intervening distance. This sect, too, was divided into several kinds, the differences between which do not concern us in this study. They are mentioned here as showing what the Church of that period had to contend with, and as furnishing the occasion for the increase of ecclesiastical authority and the formation of a doctrinal creed, both of which were deemed necessary to preserve the unity of the Church. But this involves a fundamental change in the very conception of unity, which no longer consists in allegiance to a common Savior and Lord, but in doctrinal uniformity, or the acceptance of a common creed and submission to ecclesiastical authority, instead of submission to Christ through faith and to each other through love. The bond of union has become, or is becoming, external instead of internal.

Our Conventions and Our Missionary Societies.

In ordinary usage we speak of our annual conventions, both state and national, as missionary conventions, because they are that predominantly. But they are not exclusively missionary except in the broader sense of that term, in which we regard all our general interests as contributing to the spread of the Gospel and the upbuilding of the kingdom. There are our college interests, our benevolent interests, our Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor work, and such other miscellaneous but important matters as have to do with the general welfare of our cause. With the exception of the foreign mission work, which is managed by the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, and the women's work, which is managed by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, all these general interests have hitherto received attention under the general management of the American Christian Missionary Society, for the simple reason that all these interests have special reference to the homeland. This fact has given special interest to the sessions of the convention held by this society. In recent years the multiplication of these varied interests has made it necessary to divide the convention into sections to give due consideration to each one.

The criticism is sometimes made against the American Christian Missionary Society, or what we call the Home Society, that it is turning aside from its legitimate work to consider the other interests mentioned. But since the constituency of that society is precisely the same as that of the other societies, the criticism, as far as it has any force, applies to the whole brotherhood, or at least to that part of it which is engaged in co-operative work and attends these conventions. Is this criticism well taken? It does not need to be argued that other interests besides those strictly missionary require and should receive the attention of the brotherhood in some of its deliberative assemblies. It is simply a question, therefore, of whether this business shall be transacted under the auspices of the convention of the American Christian Missionary Society, or whether another convention be held, either at another time and place, or in connection with the series of conventions held annually by our different societies. If it is a matter of the least embarrassment to our home mission work, or if that work is in any way retarded by the consideration of these general interests under the auspices of its annual convention, then it would be better that an independent convention be called in connection with the other annual national conventions, in which those questions not strictly missionary should be considered.

This question has recently been raised in connection with the discussion of the subject of church federation. Some of the brethren who oppose federation have raised the point that this subject is not germane to our missionary conventions. It would be easy to overrule this objection on the ground of precedent throughout our whole history. We have hitherto received and discussed overtures looking to union from various religious bodies, have appointed committees to confer on the subject of union with similar committees appointed by other bodies, and have received and considered their reports. We have also received delegates from other bodies who have urged the importance of union and closer co-operation. To rule out of our convention, at this late day, an overture from other churches looking to a closer union of the people of God, would be a reversal of the policy hitherto pursued and would indicate, unmistakably, the coming in of a new spirit different from and hostile to that which has hitherto prevailed among us. On the ground of germaneness, therefore, there is nothing to be said against the consideration of the subject of federation or a closer co-operation of Christians, in our American Christian missionary convention.

There are other grounds, however, on which it may be worth while to consider whether the question of church federation should be considered by the forthcoming annual convention of the American Christian Missionary Society. If, in the judgment of the officers of this society, and of its board of managers, it is thought that the interests of the society might be injured by any action which might be taken in a convention held under its auspices on the subject of federation, because of the differences of opinion which have developed out of a misunderstanding of what is involved in the subject; or, if these custodians of a public trust should hold that there is not time for the due consideration of this subject without doing injury to other topics more directly connected with the work of home missions, we are sure, without consulting them, that the advocates of the kind of co-operation which church federation proposes, would waive their own judgment, both as to the germaneness of this subject, and its vital relation to our future work, and consent to its consideration in a representative gathering of the brethren representing all our interests, to be called at Buffalo before, during or after our regular annual convention. They are not contentious; they want peace, but they want peace with honor. They believe, now that this issue has come before us, that the only manly and Christian course is to meet it in the large and free spirit which characterized the fathers of this reformation.

The time for discussion has been ample. It has been under discussion for three years in our religious journals, and twice it has come before our great popular assemblies. At our national convention at Omaha, with but brief time for discussion, the general principle of federation was approved by resolution. Then, after considerable discussion in our papers, the question came before our congress at Des Moines, Ia., where all sides had a fair hearing, and was discussed to a finish. At the close of that discussion there was not a note of opposition to the kind of federation there advocated. Its chief opponents were present, and, by their silence, or by their questions, indicated that their opposition had arisen from a different understanding of the word federation from that which its friends gave to it. It was supposed that this was the end of any controversy among us on the subject. Since that time we have had more than two years for the further consideration of this question. Meanwhile the great Inter-Church Conference in New York City has been held, and its basis of federation, which our own members had their full part in formulating, has been submitted to the Christian bodies of America. In its spirit of union, its freedom from objectionable terminology, the absolute freedom which it guarantees to all co-operating bodies, and in the ends which it proposes to accomplish, even the opposition has admitted that it is in advance of anything that has yet been proposed. The representatives from each religious body participating in that conference were requested to bring this proposal for a closer co-operation before the first general meeting of their respective bodies.

This, then, is the situation. The issue is upon us. We can not evade it if we would, without disrespect to the whole religious world; and we would not if we could. It is an issue which we have been largely instrumental in bringing before the religious world. Let us meet it in the spirit of catholicity, fraternity, high courage and devotion to the will of our Master, as becometh the spiritual descendants of fathers who gave their all to the sacred cause of Christian unity on the simple basis of faith in, and loyalty to, Jesus Christ, our common Lord and Savior.

Notes and Comments.

One reflection which must have come to every thoughtful mind among us during the recent discussion of a closer union among Christians, is that many of us are not ready for Christian union. The one essential condition of Christian union is a personal, vital union with Christ. There can be no permanent union except among those who are thus united to Christ. All these share the life of Christ, have the spirit of Christ, and are in fellowship with his plans and purposes. They are humble, teachable, fraternal, love their brethren more than their own opinions, and are willing to subordinate the latter to the carrying out of Christ's desire for unity. Many of us have not reached that stage of Christian development. It is only as we are dominated by the Holy Spirit that we can realize and keep "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Let us profit by these sad revelations, and seek to place ourselves and those whom we can influence in such relation to Christ that he can use us for the fulfillment of his gracious designs.

"As the throng passed along the highway under the fierce rays of the Syrian sun, the Master leading, he beheld a short, thick man sitting out upon a limb of a sycamore tree, anxious to get a good look at the great Physican of whom he had heard so much. 'Who is that, John?' said the Master. The disciple whom he loved replied, 'That is Zaccheus, the rich, extortionate tax-gatherer; perhaps if you should go home with him and take dinner in his house, you might heal his moral infirmities and win him to a better life.' But Jesus, lifting himself up haughtily, replied with indignation: 'Can the Doctor federate with his patients, or the Teacher with his pupils? Much less can the Son of Man, who came into the world to save the righteous, associate with or in any way recognize sinners.' And he passed on his way, leaving Zaccheus with a sad, discouraged heart."—The above is from a spurious Gospel, which is not recognized as genuine by any scholar, but whose teaching has more or less affected certain religionists.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Now that we have settled down for a while on the Nagel "Sunny Side Ranch," life moves along more methodically than when we were moving from place to place. There is too much, however, out of the usual in these surroundings to make life seem commonplace. The majestic mountain ranges that almost encircle the city of Santa Fe, are covered just now with a fresh mantle of snow. This ranch is two hundred feet above the city of Santa Fe, and being on the eastern side of the wide valley, the position commands a view of surpassing grandeur. Looking away westward across the Santa Fe valley the Jemez range of mountains lift their white heads to the clouds, while to the southwest lies the Sandias range. During the past few days the clouds have been playing fantastic tricks about these mountain tops, veiling them in mists, at times, even as Mount Olympus, the home of the gods, was shrouded in mystery. When these clouds drift away, leaving the mountain summits clad in white, the sun would shine upon them making a glorious vision of radiant beauty, bounding the distant horizon. Sometimes these clouds would swoop down from their mountain heights and sweep across the valley with a dash of snow or sleet. At times these descending showers of icy missiles would be shot through with the sun, and the scene would become extraordinarily beautiful. Yesterday we had ventured out between these cloud incursions to climb one of the shoulders of "Round Top" that looks down upon our ranch. We had almost reached the point of our destination, when, looking back to enjoy the scene in the valley, we noticed that a cloud was sweeping down the valley from the west. Immediately reversing our steps we went down the mountain side as if a grizzly were pursuing us, and by the time we reached its foot, the cloud met us, and the air was full of sharp javelins that made our faces tingle before we reached shelter. In a few moments, however, the sun was shining as gloriously as before, and all the landscape was smiling in his radiance.

Notwithstanding the high altitude of this region, it does not have as much high wind nor does the mercury run so low as in some of the valleys round about where the altitude is not so high. This is occasioned by the rim of mountains which surround the place and which, in a measure, protect it from extremes of heat or cold. But let no one come to Santa Fe in February and March thinking he will find a summer climate. We find the air here has an icy tingle in it, although it is very bracing, and we find a fireplace with a blazing fire a most agreeable feature of our ranch life. The large number of sunshiny days, together with the dry and pure air, and the altitude, are the elements which make this region a favorite health resort. We can not doubt, either, that the splendid scenery contributes its part to the recuperation of health and the renewal of one's vital energy. The doctors may not be able to explain how this is, but since man has an esthetic nature, a sense of the beautiful, it is reasonable to infer that, as this sense is ministered to abundantly by magnificent surroundings, the whole nature would share in its exhilarating and stimulating effects. Christianity itself does not ignore this need of human nature. The "beauty of holiness" is one feature which commends it to our acceptance. Any type of religious character that is not beautiful, we may be sure is not of God. Christianity embodied in the life makes the character winsome and attractive. Just in proportion as any one is unlovely in disposition, spirit and character, is he lacking in the essential and vital elements of Christ's religion. Both in nature and in grace God appeals to our sense of the beautiful, and thereby seeks to ennoble and beautify our lives. A false religion can create very ugly and repulsive types of character, but the religion of the Prophet of Galilee brightens, sweetens and purifies whatever it touches. Thereby may we test ourselves, whether we be in the faith.

There is a small mountain standing out almost in the edge of the valley south of us, that seen from this side resembles Cheops, the largest of the Egyptian pyramids. Coming up the valley one day from the other side we were unable to identify "Cheops," as we have named it, and wondered where it was. But on coming north of it again and looking back, there stood our "Cheops." Then we discovered that it was only from one angle of vision or point of view that our little moutnain resembles Cheops. It reinforced the lesson we learned long ago that the appearance of any object, or of any subject, depends very largely upon the point of view from which we see it. How strikingly this is illustrated in the current discussion of the subject of church federation! Given a man's point of view and you can predict with a great deal of certainty how this subject will look to him. Does he occupy, as near as finite man may, Christ's point of view from which all believers in him, of whatever name or creed, who are seeking to do his will, are his disciples, in spite of their mistakes, and does he love all these as his brethren, because they all love Christ and are loved by him, and is he deeply concerned about their spiritual welfare, praying for their unity and their growth in grace and in the knowledge of the truth, as well as for the limited circle of believers who agree with him? Then will his heart rejoice at the opportunity of closer fellowship with all his scattered brethren, because he knows it will delight the heart of Christ and will tend to their greater unity, and to the advancement of his kingdom. But if one looks only at his own things and his own company, and is indifferent as to the condition and progress of other followers of Christ—the whole question assumes a very different appearance.

The only modification of this general principle is in the case of those who have been misled as to the meaning and purpose of federation. We have received many letters of late from good, honest brethren who love the cause of unity, but who confess themselves confused by what they see and hear from the opponents of federation, until they know not what to think. Some write out of troubled hearts, asking if federation really means the compromise of all the principles for which we have contended, and whether, if we go into this co-operation, we must stop planting churches in towns where there are other churches! They can hardly believe we would favor a scheme of that kind, and are troubled about it and ask for information. Some others write to rebuke us for "compromising the principles of the reformation" and "surrendering to the denominations"! To them it does not seem a thing incredible that one who has devoted his life to the advocacy of this plea for unity on the New Testament basis should turn his back upon his whole life-work and go off after strange gods! They love the cause; we do not; hence their indignation! They have gulped down the gross misrepresentation that has been handed out to them by those who, we are compelled to believe, know better and have allowed their minds to be poisoned against what otherwise they would gladly welcome as a prophecy of the speedy union of God's people. This is the pathetic situation that now confronts us. We want this misguided group of brethren to know that we honor them for being loyal to what they believe to be truth, while we regret exceedingly the false light in which this controversy is putting us before the religious world. But these fogs will soon be dissipated by the Sun of truth, and those among us who really love the unity of the whole Church of God more than mere party success, will see eye to eye and stand shoulder to shoulder in this holy cause.

A few brethren beg us not to have the missionary convention "bind" federation on the brethren and churches that are not yet prepared for it! Bless their souls, we have never yet been able to "bind the churches" to do missionary work, and have never sought to do so, except by moral suasion and argument. Every intelligent Disciple knows that our missionary conventions claim no authority to bind any church or any individual to anything which their reason and conscience do not compel them to do. Whether the missionary convention or an independent convention of individual Christians declares itself in favor of any form of Christian co-operation that leaves us free to carry out our divine mission as we understand it, nobody will be bound by the declaration except those who feel it to be their Christian duty thus to co-operate. All others will have the sweet privilege of standing off in frigid isolation if they wish to do so. This is a free country, and we are a remarkably free people, and nobody shall bind us, not even to reject the overtures of our brethren for a closer co-operation in the Lord's work, or to refuse them respectful consideraton. Therefore let peace, like a gentle dove, perch upon all our church steeples and brood over all our editorial sanctums.

FEDERATION — A Symposium

Some Questions on Federation.

The following letter was sent out by the Editors to a number of brethren, and we continue in this issue the publication of their replies.

In view of the discussion which has been in progress among us for some time on the question of the federation of the churches, THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST desires to publish a symposium on the subject, for the benefit of its readers, and with the purpose of molding public sentiment rightly on this important issue which now confronts us. Will you kindly, therefore, favor us with brief answers to the following questions which seem to us to embrace the points in discussion:

1. Defining church federation as an agreed-upon method of co-operation in those things which the co-operating churches hold in common, and in which each co-operating Christian body has full freedom to be true to its convictions of truth and duty, are we not, as advocates of Christian union, logically committed to the federation movement as the next practicable step in the direction of the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for the unity of his disciples, and as a practical manifestation of the degree of unity which already exists?

2. Do you approve of the Basis of Federation submitted to the evangelical churches of America for their approval, by the late Inter-Church Conference in New York City, as presenting a practicable plan for such co-operation?

By Allan B. Philputt.

As you define church federation, in question 1, I can see no possible objection to it. If each Christian body has full freedom to be true to its convictions of truth and duty, that is certainly all that any one could ask. But is that federation? If it is, opposition is ridiculous as well as futile.

I had supposed that federation meant submitting our action or intention of planting a church, say, in a given place, to the wisdom and decision of a general committee. That is, that federation would not come to the practical test until, in deference to such an agreement, we refrain from doing what we feel that we have a right to do, and would otherwise do.

The instances where such a test would actually come about would be very few, but when they arise it would be our duty to submit to the rules governing the general method. This I understand to be implicit in federation. It is to be further said that in the great majority of cases where federation would interpose an objection to a given procedure our own judgment would also run with it for we would instinctively recognize anyway those conditions which tended to make a given action of questionable wisdom and, for the most part, we would incline to different counsels.

So that for myself, in view of the splendid advantage which it would give to the church in its fight against the powers of darkness, I am in favor of federation. We have it on the mission fields, why not at home?

The real objection to federation, I take it, is not practical but theoretical; that is, it involves a recognition of the legitimacy of other religious bodies, and a seeming acknowledgment, not only of their right to be, but to perpetuate themselves. While this does not happen to appeal to me, it does to many. Our Savior was a very practical man and set little value on the outward form or letter of a thing, but was regardful ever of the spirit. He legitimatized no ecclesiastical organization but taught men that they should be born again. If men brought forth the fruits of the Spirit that was the end of the matter with him. Now federation is an expression, clumsy and vague, it may be, but worth something to the cause of Christian unity I am sure, and as such I, for one, have nothing to say against it. The tinkle of the denominational bells will grow fainter and fainter while the unity and common faith of the church universal will declare itself more and more under such a compact of the now divided hosts of the kingdom.

By R. H. Ingram.

1. According to the definition of church federation in question No. 1, I answer the question without hesitation in the affirmative. Not only is such federation consistent with our plea for Christian union, but it is, in my judgment, the most decided step ever made in that direction. If we refuse to enter into this co-operative movement, we shall not only show ourselves illogical, but what is far worse, we shall lose a great opportunity of teaching divided Christendom true Christian union, from a vantage ground never before enjoyed. With what show of consistency can we stand without and urge Christian union on those who, in practice at least, are far in advance of us? It is time we should show our willingness to practice what we preach, and not to justify the oft repeated charge, that we plead for a "jughandle union." If this required us to surrender any part of our plea, or to endorse denominationalism or any other error we conceive our religious neighbors to hold, then my answer would be just as emphatically in the negative. It is certain that others do not understand that federation requires them to endorse all we teach. They would be as far from consenting to this as we are. To my mind the proposed federation differs only in extent, not in principle, from an agreement to join the local denominational churches in union evangelistic meetings. The one "recognizes" just as much as the other. The word federation may be a little unfortunate, the terms co-operation or alliance might be less objectionable; but the proposed federation is not intended to be a close corporate compact, such as exists between the states of the federal union, rather a league or alliance for a more extended and systematic co-operation along lines already approved. It may be my obtuseness, but I can see no wrong or danger in agreeing to do what we admit we ought to do, and really have been doing all along. Yet that seems to be the gist of the opposition arguments.

2. Yes. While it might be desirable to make a few verbal changes in the basis of federation submitted by the late conference, it seems to be fair to all parties to the agreement, and as free from objectionable features as can reasonably be expected. There is nothing that hints at interference with the autonomy of the various bodies federating; the bugaboo that seems to be frightening many good brethren, namely, that we surrender our evangelistic and home mission management to a committee of religious enemies, is purely a creature of imagination, so far at least as the New York conference is concerned, and that is the subject under consideration. As far as present knowledge serves, there is no one among us that favors such surrender. The editorial in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of March 8, on "A Christian Federation Catechism," is a very clear expression of the view taken by the friends of federation. If anything adverse comes up it will then be time to oppose it, and we shall be in a position to do so successfully. Meanwhile let us give the subject a thorough airing, but in a kindly Christian spirit, free from offensive personalities and unseemly epithets.

By William Bayard Craig.

At a union meeting in the South Broadway Church a few weeks ago, Dr. Tyler said, "There is but one church out here, a part of it worships in this house, a part of it on First Avenue (Presbyterian), a part of it on Grant Avenue (Methodist), et al." I am in harmony with that view point. I have heard protests from none of our pastors or people. Dr. Tyler is now in the Holy Land, we will await his return before making any formal statement in the matter. A banquet was arranged by our ladies of the Central to celebrate the action of the Inter-Church Conference in New York City and the return of the Denver delegates. Our people were foremost, as they should be, in the joy of that evening.

Our movement had its origin in a heaven born desire for the union and good fellowship of Christians on the basis of a common allegiance to our one Lord. Our growth in numbers and power is in itself a temptation to sectarian pride and selfish isolation. It is a temptation to say, "We are doing well enough, we are on the Scriptural basis, we have no concessions to make; let them come to us if they want to," but we can not discharge our obligations to the truth and the spirit of Christ that way. If we pray the great prayer of John seventeenth with our Lord, feeling his yearning for the good fellowship of all his Disciples, our hearts will never let us take such a cold and unchristian position.

The Lord's supper is but a means toward an end. The end is that we may so remember our Master—his love for men and his desire to gather them into one family under the fatherhood of God—that we may become possessed of the same spirit. Yet followers of Christ, in human selfishness, have made the Lord's supper a monument of denominational pride, and turned a feast of love for universal Christendom into a sectarian wall of division.

Baptism is but a means toward an end. It is a sign of consecration of mind, soul and body to the service of God. The purpose is to help us into such fellowship with Christ that we will look upon men as he does and help build up his kingdom on the same broad lines of sympathy and love that marked his own ministry. There are those who would make this tool, this agent, of Christ's love to bring men into a family fellowship, a weapon of cruelty, a sword of division, an invincible barrier to Christian union. It is said of the Messiah, "The bruised reed shall he not break, the smoking flax shall he not quench," but there is a lack of that kind of tenderness in those who have no joy in church federation as a prophecy of eventual Christian union.

The old sectarian walls and old theological standards of faith are bound for the rubbish heap. Christian union, Christian fellowship, is calling the divided hosts of Christendom to rally around our common Lord. We have had a creditable part in bringing about this state of things. We have sown the seed, and should rejoice in the harvest. Church federation interferes with no conviction of faith in any religious body, except a sectarian feeling of intolerance. It shuts us out from no field that is open to enlightened Christian aggressiveness. It is not Christian union but is the next logical step toward the desired result; the only possible step. It simply recognizes the world-wide "household of faith" and permits religious thinking, study and activity to proceed toward its ideal in an atmosphere of mutual regard and affection.

Christ is in the movement. He is calling us to recognize a common discipleship, notwithstanding our ignorance and diversity of views. For us, the professed champions of Christian union, to stand aloof now and fail to be in the very forefront of the advance toward a perfected Christian union, would be a religious tragedy grim enough to make angels weep and demons howl with joy.

As for me and my house, without abating one jot or tittle of devotion to the letter of Christ's commands, in harmony with the love and spirit of our Lord, we will do all that within us lies to hail and promote every movement that looks toward world-wide Christian fellowship and co-operation.

Central Christian Church, Denver.

By T. P. Haley.

Replying to your first question I would say: In my judgment most certainly we are so committed, and thoughtful men everywhere, whether in the church or out of it, will hold us to the logic of our position, and if we fail will not hesitate to proclaim our inconsistency, and question our sincerity. If we declare, even by implication, that federation with the denominations is inconsistent with our plea, and impracticable, we thereby declare that all our contention for Christian union has been misleading, since we have only meant union by absorption. It has sometimes happened that one called a sectarian has united with us by the adoption of what has been called "our plea," and has become at once more sectarian than he was before. Prior to such step he could federate with all Christians, but now he can federate only with those who have been immersed, and not even with all of these.

It is said that a zealous advocate of our plea reported to Timothy Coop that he had converted a Methodist preacher, when the wise and sweet spirited old man said: "I hope you have not converted him too much." It is quite possible that on the question of church federation, yea of Christian union, some of our dear brethren have been "converted too much" Yes, it is co-operation in spirit and in fact, or the worst form of sectarianism. This is practically to declare that "we have a monopoly of the truth, and wisdom will die with us."

To your second question I would reply, with some modifications, yes.

By F. N. Calvin.

1. I should say yes, not only logically but morally. I think it is time for us to illustrate some of our claims practically, or stop talking so much.

2. Yes, as a first step, I approve of it heartily, and can not see why any member of the Christian church who is really interested in the union of Christians should not rejoice that progress is being made toward that for which we have pleaded and labored so long.

The Elderburg Association

CHAPTER II.

Brother Sewing-Machine-Agent Explains.

When the association met, pursuant to the arrangements noted in the preceding chapter, the members were all present. The secretary remarks a subtle yet very manifest change in the bearing and manner of each member on that day; an alertness of bearing, as if life had suddenly become better worth living; absence of the usual sad, dreamy, introspective look habitual with them all. Normally refined and full of the milk of human kindness, they seemed, over night, to have reverted to something elemental, primitive—as if their neolithic forbears were only a generation or two removed. They eyed the speaker of the hour eagerly, as savages might eye a healthy young captive just taken and bound to the stake. It could be seen that, mentally and spiritually, they were overhauling and inspecting the old, almost forgotten weapons of their former calling; whetting old, polemical scalping knives; feeling the edges of old, theological tomahawks; ramming slugs, buttons, old nails, scrap iron, into old, controversial blunderbusses. It would have warmed any man's heart to see them.

The colored janitor of the court house, himself an ex-preacher, was a frequent and welcome visitor at the meetings of the association, though he was never enrolled as a member. It was he who brought out the swivel chair that belonged to the desk of the circuit judge for the use of any person addressing the meeting.

The first speaker was Brother Sewing-Machine-Agent—hereinafter to be designated as Brother S.-M.-A. The secretary has given, in his notes, some views of his own concerning this brother, which I hesitate to copy. In fact, I do not altogether like the spirit manifested by Brother Schoolmaster in this and in some other matters before the association. I hope I do him no wrong when I say I suspect that the treatment he received when he took his turn at the stake, embittered him somewhat. As a sample of his style and as an example of his spirit, read the following:

"He (Brother S.-M.-A.) was one of those men to whom providence, fate, destiny—what you will—has left but two paths open through this world. He must either be a preacher of a certain type or a sewing machine agent of a certain type. There be preachers many and sewing machine agents many; and some men appear to be born to the one calling and some to the other; but here and there we discover a person who appears to have been born to both; in which case he represents, inevitably, a certain well-defined type or variation of both species. A stranger seeing Brother S.-M.-A. in his pulpit would doubtless say to himself, 'This is a man to whom, if he were not a preacher, one would turn instinctively for help in any emergency about hemmers, fellers, tensions, tuckers and bobbins.' The same stranger seeing him in his road wagon, making his business calls, would say, 'If this man were not what he is, it were good for the aid society to consult him about crazy quilts, rag carpets, fancy needlework, grab bags and handkerchief bazars.'"

The only thing that is clear about this criticism, if it may be dignified with the name of criticism, is the savage spirit of it. Brother Schoolmaster has said either too much or too little. It would serve him right if the upright and affable gentlemen who sell us our sewing machines (on easy payments) should send a delegation to him and ask him to explain himself more fully.

When all was ready, the members drew near the chair, the janitor modestly seating himself a little in the rear of the others, with his back against a tree. The speaker began:

"Gentlemen, Brethren, Beloved—what is the proper form of greeting, Mr. Chairman?"

"There is nothing," said the chairman, "so becoming in an aggregation of extinguished torches, such as we are, as modesty and humility. As far as I am concerned, you may say 'Fellers'; that should be good enough."

"No, no," murmured several voices.

"All right, then," said the chairman. "Call us anything you like—anything in reason—anything we can stand. While we are on the subject of forms, let us decide how we shall designate the person who addresses us."

"Might be well to designate him as Victim," said Brother Editor; "for that is what he has been, is now, or shall be before we get through with him."

After several suggestions, more or less humorous, it was decided, for the sake of brevity, that he should be called the Witness.

"Brethren," said the witness, "the task of telling you why I am where I am is not so easy as it may seem to some of you. After I had been notified, yesterday, of my part on to-day's program, I went home and spent a wakeful night. I am, as some of you know, a fluent man in the way of my present calling, but somehow I—well, really, do you know, I think I have never quite recovered from the—from the jolt with which I descended from the Kinderville pulpit. I always feel a little confused, not to say dizzy, when I think of it.

"I did very well at college—I am sure I may say that without boasting. I was young when I entered school, young when I graduated, and young when I sought and obtained my first charge at Kinderville. When I applied for that work I was astonished to find how valuable an asset was my extreme youth—the most valuable asset, I fear, I could then produce. The elders expressed themselves delighted at my youthful appearance; it seemed to them, no doubt, a fine thing to have a preacher whose certificate of fitness was worn upon his face. As were the elders, so also were the people. My trial sermon was a very good sermon, considered by itself—though perhaps it does not become me to say so; for I had worked into it some of the finest things in my graduating speech; but taken in connection with my youthful appearance, it seemed to those people as a very gem of a sermon, a masterpiece of learning and eloquence.

"I must do myself justice here. I did not obtain that work at all because of the excellence of that sermon, though that may have been a small ingredient in the favorable opinion those people formed of me. I did not deceive that church as to my pulpit ability. I had other sermons in stock almost if not quite as good as that; and I respectfully submit that he who can prepare one good sermon can prepare other good sermons. You see, I had preached, while attending school, at Old Economy, in Rock county. Some of you may know the place. I ——

"Yes," said Brother Blacksmith, "I know that church. Brother Ebenezer Smith used to preach there. Used to pay him $800 a year. They get student preachers now to give them Sunday visits for $250. Brother Smith is now running a milk wagon in St. Joseph."

"Any way," said the witness, "thanks to that work I had a small stock of very good sermons. The Kinderville board, however, made it plain to me, when I received their call, that the pulpit work was not the first consideration with them. They wanted a young man, and I was so conspicuously young that I seemed to be the ideal man for the position. They had there a large number of young people, either in the membership or affiliated with the church in various ways. The board frankly told me they did not expect me to come up to the mark of the man who had just left them in the matter of sermonic ability."

"Spare my blushes," said Brother County Clerk, "I was the man who had just left them."

"Yes, yes, I remember. The only objection they had to you was that you were too old, and——"

"I was almost 50," groaned Brother County Clerk.

"Yes, as I was saying, you were altogether too old, and they desired a young man. There were so many young people, you know. that——"

"That they wanted somebody to dry-nurse the children," interrupted Brother County Clerk. "What did you want with a college diploma, my brother? A copy of 'Mother Goose' had been a more valuable asset for you, in Kinderville."

"Anyhow, I succeeded you, Brother ——"

"At a reduced salary; recollect that," snarled Brother County Clerk.

"Oh, yes! I was young and unmarried —then, while you had a large family. Well, for awhile I got along splendidly. I cultivated my young people assiduously until it was not long before they loved me so well that they called me 'Bill' or 'Brother Billy.' Natural enough for me, under the circumstances, to expend in their interests, with great liberality, my chief virtues, youth and bodily strength. The way I visited that congregation was worth seeing. I visited every family at least once a month, and once, just to show what I could do, I made the rounds twice in one month; and that in addition, remember, to weddings, funerals, prayer-meetings, meetings of the Junior and Senior Endeavor societies, the Sunday-school and the meetings for choir practice.

"After awhile my stock of prepared sermons became exhausted, and thereafter I had to fix up something for Sundays, between visits, as best I could. Naturally, my pulpit work was not quite equal to what it had been before I reached the bottom of the sermon barrel —not a deep barrel at the beginning— nothing better than a keg, in fact. Of course, I did not let that worry me. The people could see for themselves, I imagined, how much time it took for me to do the work they particularly required. I had no idea they would demand something extra; but they did.

"I shall never forget that day when a thunderbolt came out of a clear sky and struck me down. A colt belonging to Sister Doubtful Simms, a well-to-do widow, who lived on Fly Creek, five miles from town, had cut its leg on a barbed wire. Deacon Politic Jacks had come to me that noon, had told me of the accident, and had suggested that a pastoral visit at that time of trial would be a good thing, especially as Sister Simms had lately seemed to be growing a little cold. I went out, accordingly, and really succeeded, I thought, in persuading the dear old soul that whom the Lord loves he chastens. I got home a little before sundown, hot, thirsty, dusty, tired, yet sustained and soothed by the thought that I had done a good day's work for the Master. I found two of the elders waiting for me at my boarding house. To my grief and amazement, Elder Figgerout said:

"'Brother Billy, me and some of the brethren have been a talkin' things over lately. We don't want you to feel that we don't like you, cause we do. Everybody likes you, as fur's that goes. Don't reckin we ever had a more well meanin' and likable preacher 'n what you air. You shorely have worked hard here—everybody says that. And you have done some good; yes, a good deal of good—in a way. However, some of the older brethren's kickin' because you kaint—because you don't—well, you don't seem to be able to hold up in your sermon work. Fact is, we don't seem to git the crowds. You see, in a town like this, where there's merchants, lawyers, doctors, school teachers and high school students, a man has to be right smart of a preacher, if he interests 'em. Lawyer Keener said only the other day 't he'd done passed the kindergarten period of his life and needed a little stronger intellectual diet than the spoon meat he got at our church. Then there's the strangers—transients, I might call 'em—drummers and hotel guests generally. Brother County Clerk used to get 'em, but now they go som'ers else. You are a good man, and everybody respects you, but—— Well, we've concluded we better make a change. There's a young man at Crossroads College—Bro. Apollos P. Boanerges, who is willing to come down every Saturday and stay over Sunday. The president of the college writes us that he is a very brilliant talker, and—and we've about decided to give him a trial. Of course, he kaint do pastoral work—but then he can come for a little less than we're payin' you; and we can now afford to let up a little on visitin'—and so on; so we've come around to give you the notice we'd agreed on. Hope yu'll find work, I'm shore. If you need any recommendations call on us.'

"I shall not attempt to describe my feelings when this cruel blow fell. If I had been blamed for failure to perform anything nominated in my bond I should never have complained. But to be knocked on the head, as it were, with the results of my own fidelity to the terms of my undertaking was more than I could bear.

"As I did not immediately secure another field, though I tried, I accepted some employment in the business I now follow. The general agent of our house, a shrewd but irreverent man, has often suggested to me that all of those strenuous house-to-house visitations, and the joy I took in them, were so many providential leadings toward the business of peddling sewing machines. Though I have done well in that business, there are times when I regret that I did not cling to the work of the ministry a little longer. I hold no malice against Brother Boanerges; as an educated man I clearly perceive the need of an educated ministry. From the beginning it was never seen that a college education could be obtained without costing somebody something."

By F. D. Power

We sailed from Funchal on the afternoon of Saturday, February 17. "A land of enchantment," a "neglected paradise," indeed is this lovely island. Here it is midwinter and millions of flowers of every variety blooming. It is our June. Average summer heat is 74 and winter 64, and rarely is he temperature below 52 or above 88. It is a sure haven for invalids. The gardens are radiant with tropical beauty and terraced way up the mountain sides, with sugar cane and bananas, and vegetables and fruits of every kind, suggesting the hanging gardens of Babylon. Back of these one sees precipitous mountains and mighty ravines almost Alpine in their grandeur, and far away snow-capped peaks.

Madeira is thought to stand for the Purple Islands of Pliny. It was colonized by the Portuguese in 1420. Columbus found his wife here in 1473, and lived for several years in Funchal,, and Napoleon was first brought here in 1815 before taken to St. Helena. The people seem kindly and industrious, about 80 per cent only being able to read and write. We rode about in bullock sledges which are very comfortable and are driven by a teamster with a pointed stick or goad and led by a boy, and an oiled cloth is every now and then thrust under the runners to smooth the way. Some go in hammocks. A toboggan is used down steep declivities, which is handled by two men and makes the distance of two miles in about ten minutes. Such an experience one gets nowhere else on the face of the earth.

Great ignorance and superstition and pitiable poverty seem to prevail in this Eden. Yet the people are happy and the little children, though pestiferous beggars, are very attractive and interesting. Their music is the guitar and violin. They make lace, wicker work and pottery, but culture of the vine and sugar cane is relied upon for their chief support, and oranges, lemons, bananas and figs grow abundantly.

Way up 2,000 feet is the church of Our Lady of the Mount, reached by an inclined railway which passes through lovely gardens and terraces on the mountain side. Never have we seen flowers in such profusion. Think of coming out of New York in zero weather and dropping into this Eden with roses and lilies, heliotrope and honeysuckle, geranium twenty feet high, palms, bananas and cane and walnuts, houses fairly hidden under the wealth of blooming vines and the bouguainvillea with its blaze of color. Children are everywhere until Roosevelt even would be content and many of them barefooted, and all beggars. In fact I came in contact with but one man who did not ask to be treated, and he the governor-general. If I should ever fashion a statue of one of these fellows it would be with an outstretched hand. Even the soldiers at the governor's palace asked for drink money.

One of the special features that claimed our attention was the divers. Scores gathered about the steamer. Bronzed, athletic and splendid swimmers they call for travelers to toss coins into the water and then plunge and almost invariably catch the coin in its slow descent in the clear water and bring it up in their mouths or between their toes. The sharks sometimes appear here, but the divers are fearless. They climb the ship's sides and leap from the bridge and even from the mast head. The markets with their strange fish, flowers and fruit, the cemetery with its curious decorations, the crowds everywhere of gaily kerchiefed women, and banditti-looking men, the clamoring and filthy mendicants, the scantily clad urchins, the houses with stuccoes of brilliant colors the fair and curious women at the balconies, the crowded shops, and courts with their tropical gardens, the soldiers and sailors and priests, all are full of picturesque effects. It is worth the trip from New York to see Madeira, and it is a mighty argument for the March offering.

We are in Spain. Spain has a fascinating story. For two thousand years it has held an important position among the European states. There have been times when she gave the law to the continent, when by discovery and war she traversed and conquered two hemispheres. From the first century when martial Lucan, the Senecas, Quintilian, all Spaniards, were leaders in the literary circles of Rome down to the period of Longfellow's "Spanish Student" and George Eliot's "Spanish Gipsy," the writers of every land have felt the Spanish fascination. We have all built our "castles in Spain." On this peninsula long before men made histories there lived a people called Iberians. Nobody knows how they got here. Perhaps they crossed over from Africa. Geologists think there was once an isthmus at the narrowest point on the straits of Gibraltar where the distance between the continents is now but twelve miles. Thirty-seven monkeys still hold their places among the crags of Gibraltar, we are told, and the sentries watch over them and must daily report the number that have appeared, and soldiers will tell the traveler there is a subterranean passage from Europe to Africa and the monkeys still know the way.

These Iberians knew the properties of iron and the swords and spears they made were in demand wherever known. Bull fights were their favorite amusement. The Basques are their descendants. Tradition claims their language, the most difficult on earth, was the language of angels with which Adam and Eve talked together. Another legend, declares Tubal, brought it into Spain before the confusion of tongues at Babel, so that it is not mixed up with other languages. It is said the devil tried to learn it and studied it for seven years, but as he had then mastered only three words he gave it up. The Andalusians say that in Basque "you spell Solomon and pronounce it Nebuchadnezzar."

The Phenicians, always on the lookout for trade, found Spain to be a country which promised great advantage to their commerce. Cadiz was their chief settlement. They gave the colonies they founded an alphabet, our alphabet, and then history began to change its form. Our first glimpse of this regime is when our Bibles tell of "the ships of Tarshish," that is the Phenicians' ships which dealt with Tartessus in southern Spain. Read 1 Kings, chapter 7. And as history advance we have such names as Hannibal and Hamilcar and the Scipios associated with Spain, Cato and Julius Cesar and Pompey. The Waterloo between the Senate and the Imperator was fought in the valley of the Guadalquivir. For four hundred years Rome dominated this land and Spain became Roman, her great engineering achievements, whose ruins still remain, were Roman, her customs, her language, Roman. For four hundred years she was

TOOTHSOME SALADS

Promote Health and Please Palate.

A lover of good living writes from Chicago:

"The favorite salads in my family," he says, "are prepared with Grape-Nuts, according to your recipes. We regard them as unapproachable. We are also fond of Grape-Nuts with cream as a breakfast food, and use it daily.

"I was a great sufferer for years," he continues, "from stomach trouble, which gave rise to painful headaches, and I was at last completely prostrated and bedridden with ulceration of the stomach and bowels. I suffered untold agonies while the doctors were trying to cure my ailment with medicines.

"I could retain nothing on my stomach but an occasional sip of cold water, or a teaspoonful of olive oil, and at last even these could not be kept down. The doctors then gave me up—said there was no hope for me.

"In this strait my good angel induced me to try Grape-Nuts food, and it may sound ludicrous to say of the initial experiment that the sensation was simply 'heavenly' but nothing milder than that will express it.

"My recovery was rapid and in a very few days I was up and about, and in a few weeks was a perfectly well man again. And it was all the work of the Grape-Nuts food, for, as I have said, the doctors had ceased to give me medicine, considering my case hopeless.

"Since then Grape-Nuts has been, and always shall be a staple article of diet with us." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

at peace and then came the invasion of the Goths, and the Spanish language of to-day is a language with Latin roots and Teutonic grammar, "hog-Latin." So Spanish is the easiest of the corrupt Latin tongues for your English student who has some knowledge of the stately speech of Virgil and Horace. Our word "much," from the Sanscrit, for example, is in Spanish "mucho"; "mizzen" is the Spanish "mesana"; our "canteen" is the Spanish "cantina," whose root is in the Latin "quantos," whence comes "quantity." The traveler asks for "cuartos" for his party, that is "rooms." The house was originally divided into four rooms, each of which was a quarter and when the American moves he says he changes his quarters, and so talks Spanish.

Following the Goths who impressed the peninsula with their grammar, came the Moors, whose buildings with arabesque tracery and the horse shoe arch tell of their occupancy. A hundred Arabs and four hundred Africans under Tarif came to the northern shore, and from the place where he landed, Tarifa, and because of duties on goods imposed there, we have our "tariff," which so stirs men like Uncle Joe Cannon, Dingley and McKinley, and the rest. Tarik followed who still lives in Gibraltar, where he landed, Gebel-al-Tarik, "the hill of Tarik." Gibraltar and Ceuta were the pillars of Hercules, which still survive in the arms of Spain, on Spanish coins and on our dollar sign, $, which represents the two pillars of Hercules encircled by the scroll, Ne plus ultra, nothing beyond. It was in 411 the Goths came in, and three centuries later, in 711, two armies met on the plains of Xeres, two leagues from Cadiz, Xeres famous for its wines, and Roderic, last of the Goths, lost his kingdom and his life. For a time what Spain calls a "guerrilla," a little war, went on and then this sunny corner of the continent came under Mohammed and the Koran. Charles Martel at Tours, in 732, hurled back the Saracen hosts and saved Christendom, but the Moors ruled Spain for seven centuries. And now we read of the Almoravides and Almohades and Abencerrages. The great Moorish capital is Granada, built upon its four hills, flanked in those days by a thousand towers, and with a vast population, at the summit of its loftiest hill the royal fortress of the Alhambra, including the palace of the Caliphs, begun by Mohammed Ben Alhamar. It still stands the delight and admiration of travelers, its graceful porticos, and colonnades, its walls and ceilings worked in delicate arabesque and glowing with soft tints and rich gold; its airy halls, built about gardens full of roses, pomegranate and jasmine, and courts with fountains playing, and lofty trees where the nightingale is ever sounding its strange sad story.

Then Ferdinand of Aragon and Isabella of Castile come upon the scene, and invest the city of Granada in the spring of 1491, and Jan. 2, 1492, the city falls. It is a great story how Boabdil leaves the fortress with his fifty chosen cavaliers and sadly descends the hill from the Alhambra to the plain and rides up to the Christian monarch surrounded by his court amid fluttering banners and arms glittering in the sun; how Ferdinand embraced him, and Boabdil handed him the great keys of the Alhambra, saying: "These keys are thine, oh, King, since Allah has decreed it; use thy success with clemency and moderation"; how he rode to the rocky point among the hills which commanded a last view of Granada, checked his horse, and burst into tears as he looked back upon the home of his childhood, the proud city and fortress of the Alhambra; how his mean mother Zoraya bitterly said: "You do well to weep like a woman for what you could not defend like a man"; and how he passed broken-hearted out of sight and out of history. The spot where he paused to look back on his lost kingdom is still pointed out and they call it: El ultimo sospiro del moro. So ended the seven hundred and forty-one years of the Arabian empire on the peninsula. In Morocco there are still found those who regard themselves as descendants of the Moors, of Spain. It is a sort of proverb when such a one sighs in his sleep, to say, "See, he is dreaming of Granada."

Ferdinand and Isabella gave Spain the most brilliant period of its history. Married in 1469, he was but seventeen and she a year older; he was famous for his good looks and she was called the "handsomest of women"; he was an athlete and fond of sport, and she was devout, intellectual; both were poor and had to borrow money for the wedding. The great event of their reign, as every one knows, was the sailing of Columbus on August 3, 1492, to discover a new world. They sleep in the magnificent mausoleum in the chapel at Granada. Since then Spain has been the worst governed country in the world. Under Charles, the grandson of Ferdinand and Isabella, Ignatius de Loyola did his work, and Hernando Cortes conquered Mexico and discovered the Pacific, Spanish establishments were made in New Mexico and regular lines of communication from ocean to ocean fixed across the Isthmus of Panama near the very spot where de Lesseps failed, and Roosevelt shall win; the West Indies became her provinces and over Florida and South America her flag floated, and Spanish names marked half the headlands of the world. Then came the three Philips when the splendid fortunes of Spain declined. One of these wretches married "Bloody Mary" and the third was the king who owed his death to the rigid etiquette of the Spanish court, because being uncomfortably warm as he sat too near the fire, it took so long to send a messenger to tell a messenger to inform a gentleman in waiting to instruct a chamberlain to take the necessary steps to remove his majesty to a cooler distance, that he fell ill and expired.

Finally came the Bourbons, descendants of Louis XIV of France. Alphonzo XIII was born May 17, 1886, nearly six months after the death of his father, Alphonzo XII. His mother was Maria Christina, an Austrian princess. His aunt, Eulalie, came to America to the World's Fair at Chicago. His grandmother was Isabella, crowned in 1833, abdicated in 1870, and died in 1904. So far his reign has not been a happy one for his country. His marriage in June to Edward's niece, the Princess Eva, may better things.

A Worthy Appeal.

Joseph Gaylor, our evangelist in southwest Missouri, feels so strongly the need of reinforcing the work there that he volunteers to give a dollar a month out of his meager salary for the support of George Ball, who resides at Swan, and is anxious to give himself wholly to the ministry and offers to do this provided he is guaranteed $10 per month. He will cut loose from everything else and endeavor to live on this guarantee and what he can collect. The need for this work is great but the state treasury is drained, so that, small as is the amount, we dare not promise it. But can we afford to let slip such an opportunity? It will take $120 to keep this man in the field for a whole year. With Brother Gaylor's pledge, and the ten dollars of another friend, one-fifth of the amount is raised. Who else will help?

GRAND TO LIVE

And the Last Laugh is Always the Best.

"Six months ago I would have laughed at the idea that there could be anything better for a table beverage than coffee," writes an Ohio woman—"now I laugh to know there is.

"Since childhood I drank coffee as freely as any other member of the family. The result was a puny, sickly girl, and as I grew into womanhood I did not gain in health, but was afflicted with heart trouble, a weak and disordered stomach, wrecked nerves and a general breaking down, till last winter at the age of 38 I seemed to be on the verge of consumption. My friends greeted me with 'How bad you look! What a terrible color!' and this was not very comforting.

"The doctors and patent medicines did me absolutely no good. I was thoroughly discouraged.

"Then I gave up coffee and commenced Postum Food Coffee. At first I didn't like it, but after a few trials and following the directions exactly, it was grand. It was refreshing and satisfying. In a couple of weeks I noticed a great change. I became stronger, my brain grew clearer, I was not troubled with forgetfulness as in coffee times, my power of endurance was more than doubled. The heart trouble and indigestion disappeared and my nerves became steady and strong.

"I began to take an interest in things about me. Housework and home-making became a pleasure. My friends have marveled at the change and when they enquire what brought it about, I answer 'Postum Food Coffee, and nothing else in the world.'" Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Our Budget

—"When this cruel war is over" some people are going to feel ashamed of some things they have said and done.

—Shooting without taking aim is not only to waste ammunition, but it often proves fatal to an "innocent bystander" and plays havoc with a man's reputation as a marksman. There has been a lot of that kind of shooting of late.

—Dr. Sanford endorses the view of federation advocated by the Editor of this paper, as shown in his letter published in our issue of last week, and he disclaims all authority of any council or executive committee to "bind the churches" against their own judgment or conscience. But that will probably make no difference with anti-federationists. As long as they can find a newspaper clipping or an account of a local federation somewhere in which we have no part, in which something different has been said or done, that will be the chief authority!

—We have seen and read of many things practiced and advocated in the name of federation with which we have no sympathy, but that does not make us oppose federation any more than the many false things we have seen about Christian union have made us oppose Christian union. One of the chief sources of misunderstanding and confusion to this whole question has been the tendency to regard every foolish thing said about it as representing the only possible kind of federation, while the statements of those who are in a position to know the facts have been ignored.

—But reason will assert itself sooner or later, and common sense will triumph over passion and prejudice. You can not fool all the people all the time. Even now some are asking themselves, "After all, what was I shooting at?" When panic gives way to sober sense, then truth gets an inning. Possess your souls in patience.

—It is a well-known custom in certain quarters, when other resources fail, to manifest a deep solicitude for the missionary societies and to exhort the officials of these organizations to steer clear of the particular "mare's nest" that may then be in the ascendant. This will "fetch" the brethren! Already we have heard some threats of a boycott on the societies if such and such a thing should happen! Well, we are sure these good brethren will have no excuse for refusing co-operation with these societies on the ground of their assumption of ecclesiastical authority.

—Brother McPherson is right. Any kind of a representative meeting of the brotherhood will suffice to give a declaration of sentiment in reference to the proposed basis of federation submitted to the Christian bodies of America by the New York City Conference, and that declaration will bind no church nor individual beyond their free consent and judgment. An effort will be made, or continued, rather, to obscure the issue, but it is tremendously and awfully simple and cuts to the very core of our claim to be advocates of a closer union among Christians. Are we ready to work with other Christian bodies, in so far as we agree, to help on the kingdom of God, provided we may do so without any compromise of our convictions in those things in which we do not yet see eye to eye? Let the persons who are willing to vote "no" on that proposition stand up and be counted.

—We wish it understood that brethren who are writing in the symposium are only opening the discussion of federation and that our columns are open to any of our readers who desire to answer the questions asked. The only reason we have asked definite questions to be answered is to cut out useless discussion. No one has an issue with us concerning any form of federation that involves disloyalty to the fundamental principles of our creed, or to our conscientious convictions of duty. That kind of federation is not proposed, and is not under discussion. The only issue before us is whether we are not compelled by the very nature of our plea for union, to co-operate with other Christian people as far as we may conscientiously do so, in promoting the kingdom of God, and whether the proposed basis of federation submitted by the New York conference does not offer us this opportunity of co-operation without involving any disloyalty to our mission. Any one who has a word to say in answer to these questions, pro or con, is welcome to our columns.

—Higginsville, Mo., has almost doubled its Foreign Society offering in two years.

—William Sumpter, of Petoskey, Mich., has accepted a call to Grayson, Ky., and will move there April 1.

—Dr. A. G. Lucas, an 83-year-old veteran of the Gospel, preached last week on "The Great Commission" at Hope, Ark.

—J. W. Lowber, of Austin, Tex., has been elected a member of the Royal Asiatic Society of Great Britain and Ireland.

—W. L. Harris, of Grant City, Mo., has just gone to Allendale, Mo., where he will hold a revival and organize a new church.

—The report of J. G. Creason at last accounts was that he was resting well, though his other lung had become affected.

—The brethren at Tulsa, I. T., where Randolph Cook is pastor, are considering the question of an addition to their church building.

—C. H. DeVoe's work at Peru, Ind., is starting with promise in every department.

—Through the meeting which Ellis B. Harris and wife expect to hold at Hillsboro, Col., an organization will probably be effected.

—We regret to hear of the death of Brother Owens, one of the aged and faithful members of Brother Maple's church at Marion, O.

—Clyde Sharp has not left Gas City, Kan., but continues to preach there and takes in addition the work at LaHarpe, giving half time to each.

—John A. Stevens reports that as a result of a good meeting at Marthaville, La., a church will be organized and a building erected this year.

—A telegram informs us that while S. V. Williams continues as pastor of the Christian church at LaPorte, Ind., his wife has accepted a call to Tampico, Ill.

—The Cecil street church building at Toronto, Canada, has been renovated and plans are made for a forward movement under J. M. Van Horn, who has just begun his ministry there.

—Are you taking a trip with the Disciple pilgrims now journeying to the Holy Land? Read Brother Power's interesting letters of travel, "As Seen From the Dome."

—After two years of ministry at Everett, Wash., O. W. McGaughey will close his work April 1. He will probably return to Missouri or to Chicago, to enter the evangelistic field.

—The chapel of the handsome new Christian church on Woodward avenue, Detroit, was dedicated March 11. We hope to publish an illustration and further particulars in our next issue —The Foreign Society has received a gift of $500 on the annuity plan from a sister in Illinois. F. M. Rains, secretary, box 884, Cincinnati, O., will send full information upon request.

—Owing to the continued interest in the meeting at Bloomington, Ind., the Brooks brothers have had to postpone commencing their meeting for Brother Wright at Paris, Mo., until March 25.

—George C. Ritchey, of Roseburg, Ore., who has been called to the south Idaho state evangelistic work, will take up this work after the close of the meeting in which he is now engaged at Caldwell.

—One of our best beloved brethren, and one whose soundness in the faith can not be questioned, congratulates us on declining to notice further the "pugilism" of a certain religious journal.

—As a result of the meeting held by Lew D. Hill and wife at Dahlgren, Ill., there has been an organization of 31 members effected, option obtained upon a lot and building will be begun as soon as possible.

—A. M. Harral reports that though the brethren at Sapulpa, I. T., are poor in this world's goods, they are growing rich in good works, and are very hopeful of soon having a plain, though comfortable, place of worship.

PIMPLES AND BLACKHEADS

Are Caused by Clogging of the Pores or Mouths of the Sebaceous Glands with Sebum or Oily Matter.

The plug of sebum in the center of the pimple is called a blackhead, grub, or comedone. Nature will not allow the clogging of the pores to continue long, hence inflammation, pain, swelling and redness; later pus or matter forms, breaks or is opened, the plug comes out, and the pore is once more free. Treatment: Gently smear the face with Cuticura Ointment, the great Skin Cure, but do not rub. Wash off the Ointment in five minutes with Cuticura Soap and hot water, and bathe freely for some minutes. Repeat this treatment morning and evening. At other times use Cuticura Soap for bathing the face as often as agreeable.

—In a recent issue the dropping of one figure made quite a difference in the report of the work at Kirksville, Mo. There have been 140 additions, instead of the 40 announced, since Bro. D. A. Wickizer went there.

—The work at Newark, O., has a very hopeful outlook. At a meeting of the official board the other night, the pastor, H. Newton Miller, was the recipient of a special check in appreciation of his services in the recent meeting.

—John W. Jennings has just been set apart to the work of singing evangelist at Milan, Mo., by J. J. Limerick, who has since gone to Carrollton for a month's rest and treatment, after which, if able, he will resume his work with the Milan people.

—A newspaper dispatch reports that Parker Scottdale, at one time pastor of a Baptist church at Independence, Mo., but later a lecturer with headquarters at Aurora, Ill., has joined our church and expects to enter the ministry of the Christian church.

—The Foreign Society needs two families for Japan, two for China, one for the Philippines and one for Africa. These needs are urgent. There is no lack of young ladies. Ten apply for every one that can be sent. The lack is for men to go and preach the Gospel.

—The first Sunday in March was a stormy day in many parts of the country. The second Sunday was worse than the first. A bad day reduces the offering. The friends of the foreign work should remember that tne expenses go on whether the day is stormy or not.

—The work proceeds happily at La Junta, Col., under A. L. Ferguson. It is hoped that a considerable portion of the church debt will be removed this year. Any one who thinks of settling in that vicinity, where there is a delightful climate, should not fail to write to Brother Ferguson.

—The time for the Hot Springs rally is coming to its end, and the necessary money has not yet been raised. We simply must have a good church there, and the sooner the brethren realize this fact the better will they, themselves, be satisfied. One more block is whitened this week.

—Jesse R. Teagarden, who teaches in the schools at Broken Bow, Neb., and preaches also, writes that Arnold, a village some 40 miles west of that place, has $400 raised to employ a preacher who has opportunities there of doing a fine work. A new railroad is to reach this point in the summer.

—J. W. Hilton writes that the meeting at Valparaiso, Neb., would no doubt have had greater results had it not been that the pastor, J. G. Chase, has been so fearless an antagonist of the saloon and has, as a result, suffered the estrangement of some who should have been his strongest support.

—E. G. Manley, pastor of the Christian church at Oswego, Kan, gives warning against a man going by the name of J. T. Smith, who proclaims himself a Christian minister, and who is now in jail at that place. Evidence of other rascality than the charge for which he was convicted was found on him. He is of medium heavy build, black hair, blue or hazel eyes, and a ready talker. Information, if needed, can be had from P. S. Lynn or James Bottenfield.

—F. Hooker Groom, who has just entered upon his work as state evangelist for Montana, had already raised on March 4, among the Helena brethren, $77 for state missions, and, with promises, expected to get about $140 in his one week there. He was to begin at Bozeman the next Sunday a six weeks' tour of the state.

—A telegraphic message comes to our notice just as we go to press announcing the death at his home in Spokane, Wash., of Dr. J. M. Allen, formerly president of Eureka College, and for many years a member of the faculty of that institution. Brother Allen was, we believe, 78 years of age, and had been in the ministry for 50 years.

—The First Christian Church organization at Quinlan, Okla., has just been effected by THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST'S living link evangelists, J. D. Lawrence and wife. He is most favorably endorsed by the prominent men of that city. A church building will be ready for dedication, out of debt, within a month's time.

—Talk about destroying the work of the missionary societies! THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has given during the past year ten times as much space to the interests of our various missionary societies as any other paper in the brotherhood. This is a matter of fact. Then to suppose we want to "hurt" the missionary societies!

—The lots for the new church building situated in the best part of Sioux City, Ia., and which is to be dedicated March 25 by F. M. Rains, were selected by Brother Muckley. Last spring $2,000 were raised to pay off all charges on the lots and the present building has been erected since that time. John Kendrick Ballou is the minister.

—O. L. Lyons, who recently joined our brotherhood, reports that at Newman, Ill., not a Sunday since the beginning of the year has passed without some growth. Over a score have united with the church, and the missionary interest has greatly increased, as witnessed by the March offering. Charles Reign Scoville was to lecture for them March 10.

—W. H. Bagby and wife have duly reached their new field at Missoula, Mont., and his first sermon is reported to us to have been on a very high level. A great crowd attended. There is opportunity here for great growth, and with such preaching as Brother Bagby can give, and under wise direction, our plea ought to win rapidly.

—Cassius V. Allison has recently visited Mound City, Mo., and accepted a call to take the work there, beginning April 1. After that date, his present charge at Cozad and Platte Valley, Neb., will need a pastor. These churches are loyal to all good works, and gave nearly $600 for missions in the past eleven months. The salary is $800 a year, and S. W. Schooley, clerk, Cozad, Neb., should be addressed.

—The Central Illinois Christian Ministerial Institute will meet at the University Place Christian Church, Champaign, Ill., April 10,11, instead of at Arcola, as was previously arranged. This was owing to Bro. L. C. Faulder's leaving the latter field. Lodging and breakfast will be provided free. An excellent program has been arranged. Stephen E. Fisher is the pastor at Champaign.

—As a result of the meeting by J. W. Baker at Carl Junction, Mo., under the auspices of the county co-operation, there was quite an ingathering, and W. C. Wiley, of Opolis, Kan., has been called for three-quarters of the time, the other Sunday being put in at Waco, another church in the county. Brother Baker has just begun a meeting with another discouraged church at Purcell, where there are less than a dozen members.

—O. L. Adams has closed his work with the church at Overton, Neb., where he has been located for the past two years. During that time the membership was increased from 61 to 103, and the special offerings from $38 to $225. They are a splendid people, willing to work and let others work, and with bright prospects for the future. They expect to locate a pastor at once. Brother Adams will be available for work within reach of Bethany, and will hold meetings or give chart lectures on the history of the church.

—The Missouri lectureship, the program of which appears elsewhere, offers a rich treat. The executive committee, in order to increase the usual interest, has invited two lecturers from outside the state, one of them from the Baptist ranks, and confidently urges a full attendance that the small annual membership dues may enable them to meet all expenses. As the last word from Canton insures a cordial welcome and entirely free entertainment, those who attend the lectureship will have nothing but railroad expenses to provide.

DEGREE COURSES AT HOME,

or at the College, covering Languages, Mathematics, Natural Sciences, History, Philosophy, the Bible and Sacred Literature. For catalogue, write Chas. J. Burton, Pres. Christian College, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

—The church at Dexter, Mo., under R. H. Lampkin, is beginning its campaign for the centennial with a meeting by home forces, assisted by John S. Zeran and wife, singing evangelists. The enlargement of the church has been completed, the Sunday-school is growing, the missionary spirit awakening and the brethren are full of hope of making their influence felt greatly in their home town, as well as doing their part to spread the Gospel privileges abroad.

—It takes the mission churches to raise our average in gifts to missionary causes. Here, for instance, is our little church at Monterey, Mex., with 15 American members and a Mexican congregation of 65, laying down $100 in gold as their offering the first Lord's day in March to foreign missions. No literature had been distributed, and the Foreign Society had not even asked them to take the offering. Almost all the preparation was by prayer. "The Lord opened the people's hearts more than we had dared dream for," writes Brother Inman.

—We hope all our readers will examine with care the program of our next congress, which meets at Indianapolis, April 25-27. It is likely to prove the most interesting session in its history. It has from the beginning been an instrument for progress in thought on living questions, and this coming session is destined to be noted for its contribution to the subject of Christian union. It could not have been timed better to fit it to the needs of the hour. We predict a large attendance of both Disciples and Baptists, and a high degree of interest. No preacher, especially, can afford to miss that congress; but the attendance is not limited to preachers.

—The turning down of $1,200 worth of advertising within the past few days because the advertisements do not come up to our standard, though they are readily accepted by most religious journals, will be evidence to our readers that we are making a strenuous effort to cut out undesirable advertisements. This policy has been urged by the Editor for some time, and at a recent meeting of the board of directors action was taken looking to the elimination of the class of advertising against which reasonable objection can be made. It remains to be seen whether our readers will co-operate with us in helping us to cover this loss by an increase in the circulation of the paper.

—We very much regret to learn that the house of Wallace M. Stuckey, at Lebo, Kan., has been burned, with all its contents, while the family were away from home. There was a loss of about $1,000, and while insurance had been carried for several years, no transfer had ever been made, so that Brother Stuckey can get no help from this source. His library and literary efforts were burned, not a scrap being left. We feel sure there is many a brother minister who will sympathize with the plight of Brother Stuckey and will wish to render him some assistance in the way of his getting another home, and especially in accumulating another library, without which any minister's home is deficient.

—THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has been favored recently by visits from a number of the brethren passing through St. Louis. We need not say we are always glad to have those who stop here in the course of their journeys come in to see us and the home of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. We are located not more than ten minutes' walk from the Union Station. Among those whose names have not already been mentioned are Bro. Frank Huston, well known as a leader of the singing forces in evangelistic work, and James Small, one of the strong men on the evangelistic platform. We learn that Brother Small's third brother is about to come to this country. This trio of brothers joined our church at Liverpool, England, under the ministry of Dr. W. T. Moore. Bro. James Small was on his way to hold a meeting at Hutchinson, Kan.

J. H. SPRINGER & CO.,

—One of our college presidents, in a letter to the Editor, writes as follows: "Many, many prayers follow you daily from a great and growing brotherhood, which appreciates in ever increasing measure the liberty in Christ for which you are so nobly contending, in the face of much misrepresentation and Pharisaic legalism. Truly, the future is radiant with the promise of a glorious progress in religious liberty and service. To be a pessimist is unthinkable. How glorious that we may walk every day with our faces toward the Light! For this opportunity may God make us devoutly thankful and humble."

It is most gratifying to know that this but expresses the sentiment of the leading minds and spirits of the brotherhood, whose faces are not turned, in a reactionary movement, toward the bondage of tradition and legalism, but toward the heights of Christian liberty with which Christ hath made us free.

—We are glad to notice that the difficulty between J. P. Dargitz, of the Christian colony, Acampo, Cal., and the Christian church at Acampo, including some of the colonists, has been arbitrated and amicably adjusted. We present elsewhere the agreement that was finally reached and signed by both parties. In view of the dissatisfaction which had arisen we felt justified, several weeks ago, in asking our readers to make personal investigation for themselves before investing in any of the lands of the colony. The agreement which has now been reached we are sure will give prospective investors increased confidence in any statements that may be made concerning this colony. We felt quite well assured all the while, from what we knew of Brother Dargitz, that he would not knowingly misrepresent the facts in relation to his colony, and that any overstatements as to profits on said lands which he may have made were the result of being misled by others. Now that future representations are to be based on actual facts and figures, we can the more heartily commend this enterprise to the attention of such readers as may be contemplating seeking homes in that state.

To Plant a Church in New Hampshire.

We have received the following sums, so far, for the New Hampshire meeting, some of which have already been acknowledged in our columns. As will be seen, the amount contributed so far would not pay the evangelist's fare to Manchester. Brother W. J. Wright says that at least one thousand dollars ought to be provided to be certain to do adequate justice to this enterprise of carrying our plea into the one state of the Union where we have no church. We have secured one of our best evangelists, one who is, perhaps, better acquainted with eastern fields than any other, and we shall depend on our readers to help us in carrying this attempt to plant a New Testament church in New Hampshire to a successful issue. All funds for this purpose sent to us will be acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Walter White, $1.50; D. O. Smart, $10; W. P. Keeler, $1; J. E. Decker, $1; A. H. Martin, $1; Katie Montgomery, 50 cents; unknown, 10 cents. Total, $15.10.

W. P. Keeler, in sending his dollar, writes: "W. J. Wright is quite correct in stating that not less than $1,000 should be promptly made up. A thousand of our members, on the dollar per capita basis, at least, ought immediately to claim fellowship in this magnificent enterprise."

No offer could be more liberal than this, but he has such confidence in the remedy that he is willing to submit it to an actual test.

If you have catarrh of the nose, throat, or lungs, if you are constantly spitting, blowing the nose, have stopped-up feeling, headache, head noises, deafness, asthma, bronchitis or weak lungs, write at once for a trial treatment, then you will soon know its effect for yourself. The full treatment is not expensive. A regular package containing enough to last one whole month is sent by mail for $1.00.

A postal card with your name and address, sent to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga., will bring you the free treatment and an interesting booklet about catarrh.

J. P. Dargitz and the Christian Colony.

We have received the following communication for publication:

In order for the settlement of the difference between members of the Christian colony and J. P. Dargitz, and in the interest of unity and harmony in the church, we submit the following agreement:

First—I, J. P. Dargitz, being misled, regret that my advertising material contained statements regarding net incomes upon lots that were unwarranted, and that others have been misled thereby.

Second—That from this time on all correspondence, circulars and advertising shall on the part of J. P. Dargitz, contain as facts or statements of his own such figures as an average year of net crop returns on lots for sale will justify, and other facts and statements to be accredited from whence they came. J. P. Dargitz agreeing to this article, all opposition to the colony efforts will cease.

Third—That J. P. Dargitz will use all of his power and ability, moral and financial, to stand between the bank and foreclosure on, or loss of, any colonist's home, provided that he use reasonable diligence and fairness on his part to meet his obligations, and that any misunderstanding arising under this agreement may be settled by calling in three persons, one to be selected by each party, and they two to select the third, and such decision to be binding on both parties.

Fourth—That the joint efforts on the part of both parties to this agreement will be given as brethren mutually to help each other in living the Christ life, neither opposing the Christian efforts of the other.

Fifth—This agreement to become binding when signed by J. P. Dargitz, S. S. Murphy and I. G. Brown, on the one part, and by the complaining brethren of the colony on the other part, and when published in our church papers, "The Pacific Christian," "The Christian Standard" and THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Signed by J. P. Dargitz, S. S. Murphy, I. G. Brown, Thomas Tyres, Oscar B. Chaney, Willard Smith, F. C. Knapp, J. L. Johnson, W. C. Lockhart, J. J. Dewitt and B. W. Herndon.

The New Bible College at Drake University.

This building stands on a beautiful wooded corner lot just west of the church and across the street south of the university campus. It is 50x100 feet and three stories, counting the basement. It has, all told, about 30 rooms, and is lighted throughout by electricity. Among these rooms is a fine auditorium capable of seating 250 or 300 persons. There is also a large hall, with kitchen attached, which will serve a double purpose: a banquet hall upon occasion and a gymnasium for the young women of the university. There is a large library and study room and 12 splendid class rooms. It has its own heating plant. On account of the crowded condition in the older buildings, the College of the Bible, not needing all the room for the present, Professor Morehouse has been invited to occupy the north half of the basement floor. The school of oratory has been asked to use the auditorium and two other rooms on the top floor. Professor Brown is in charge of this work. Professor Kirk will also transfer his classes in Greek to the new building. The new building has across its west front these words, "Drake University, College of the Bible." Lower down, in larger letters you will see the popular name of the building, "Memorial Hall." Almost every room in the building has been set aside in memory of some prominent person, living or dead. More than two-thirds of the money was subscribed as a part of some memorial fund. Moreover, the largest donation came from Gen. F. M. Drake, and proved to be the very last public act of his life. The building complete and furnished will cost $30,000. A few hundred dollars will be required to pay for the building and some to pay for its furnishing. A call for these purposes will soon be made and it is hoped there will be a generous response.

Dedication at Albuquerque, N. M.

March 4 was a lovely day in Albuquerque, and it was dedication day for the building which the little band of Disciples there had, at no little sacrifice, erected. Not counting the work which had been donated the building had cost only about $1,200, but it is located on one of the best lots of the city, and so built as to be turned into a parsonage when a larger building can be erected on the corner. Brother Crawford felt that his members had given so liberally he did not wish an appeal to be made for money, but cards were distributed and the people were asked to pledge what they felt able to give. About $200 was pledged at the morning and evening services. The building was well filled, both morning and evening, and the people listened attentively to the presentation of the plea for Christian union and the meaning and mission of the church in the world. Brother Crawford was more anxious to have the community hear and understand us than he was about the financial problem. If his health permits he will do a great work for New Testament Christianity in that city. In the afternoon there was a fellowship meeting at which the ministers of the city, including the Jewish rabbi and the Episcopal rector, spoke words of most fraternal greeting and congratulation. Brother Crawford, presiding, spoke wise words of appreciation in response. We came to esteem very highly Brother and Sister Crawford and his sister, Miss Crawford, who lives with them. We hope our readers will come to know Brother Crawford better, for though a young man he is thinking out for himself some of the great problems which confront Christianity today.

E. E. Crawford.

The Meeting at Portsmouth, Ohio

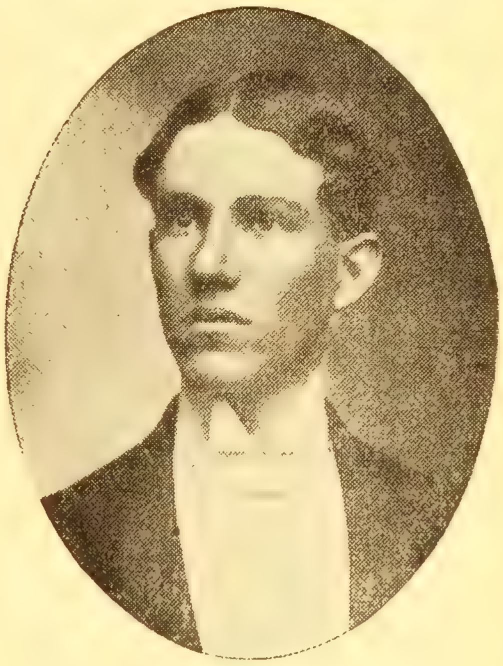
One of the greatest meetings ever held in the history of our brotherhood was recently brought to a termination at Portsmouth, Ohio, where our church, under George P. Taubman's leadership, acted in co-operation with W. E. Harlow as evangelist, assisted by his son Clyde, and H. S. Saxton and wife as singers. Other good meetings have been held here in the past, notably by W. J. Wright, J. A. L. Romig, J. V. Updike, S. H. Bartlett and S. M. Martin, while Brother Harlow himself gathered 301 into the fold in a previous meeting with this church. The meeting just closed resulted in 612 additions, which is a remarkable record, seeing that six large meetings have been held by this church within the past twelve years. The meeting lasted only six weeks, and during its course there were no claptrap methods employed. The appeal was to the conscience, and complete reformation from the worldly life was always insisted on.

Evangelist W. E. Harlow.

George P. Taubman.



Clyde Harlow.

The preparation was by prayer and advertising. The meeting began to be talked about a year ago, and for months the prayer-meeting centered on it. "Six hundred souls saved in six weeks" was a watchword. Good use was made of the press, money being spent to advertise through this, and by means of hundreds of large window cards and tracts. Lengthy daily reports were secured in the papers, and two forty foot banners were strung across the main street, while large banners were placed on all the street cars. Everybody worked, and the results showed that the work was well done and satisfactory. The cost to the church for the 612 souls won averaged about $1.50 each. The church was not afraid to spend a few dollars, and it reaped by its courage as well as by its prayers. Of the additions, 369 were by confession, 69 were by letter or statement, and 110 were brought back to the fellowship after having grown weary in the work or backslidden, while the rest came from the denominations.

The Revival at Syracuse

By William D. Ryan

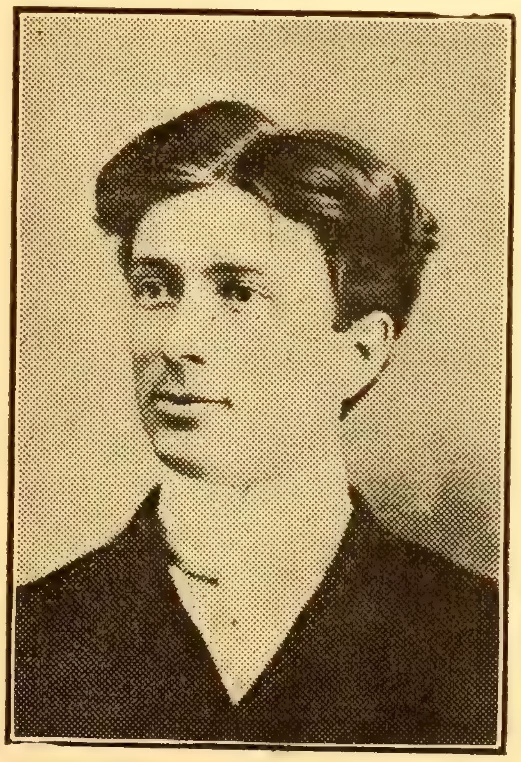
In comparison with the great numerical results of meetings held in many places, during the past winter, the Syracuse revival is not notable. But to those familiar with conditions confronting us in the cities of the east the results are most gratifying—even inspiring.

The Central Church in Syracuse was established more than forty years ago by W. A. Belding. Among its former pastors have been W. A. Belding, A. N. Gilbert, N. J. Aylesworth and E. R. Edwards. The present pastorate covers a period of four years. The church is situated in the midst of large public buildings and business blocks, and has no residence neighborhood contiguous to it. Compared with the denominational churches surrounding it, it is not large nor powerful and the city as a whole has known but little about the Disciples of Christ. The meetings just closed, however, would seem to mark the beginning of a new epoch in the history of the church. Extensive advertising was done. Every street car in the city bore conspicuous announcements of our meetings before they began, and almost up to the time they closed. Newspaper advertising was freely used, as were also large window cards. Some weeks as many as 10,000 folders were disributed among homes and factories. These contained not simply announcements of our services, but statements of the plea and purposes of the Disciples of Christ. Great mass meetings were held filling the largest theater in the city. So, while we tried to avoid the spectacular, our light was not kept under a bushel. Our people were well prepared for the meetings, and worked loyally for their success.



William D. Ryan.

Evangelist Herbert Yeuell wins through his powerful appeals to the conscience and the will. He is pre-eminently an evangelist. No one can be in his meetings a single night without knowing the complete Bible way of salvation before he leaves. He teaches constantly, and yet does not impress one as being over didactic. He is a natural orator and holds the closest attention of every one in his audience from the beginning of a service to its end. His supreme confidence in the power of the Gospel is the secret of his persistence. He is unquestionably the right man to establish a church in New Hampshire, and we may rest assured there will be an intelligent and efficient organization of Christians there before he leaves the field

This has been for us a financial revival as well as spiritual. In every way we have been richly blessed and go forward hopefully into the field of wider achievement.

By Herbert Yeuell.

The meeting lasted one month, entirely too short for a New York state meeting. But the church was prepared for only a two weeks' effort to gather results from a Chapman union meeting. Dr. Chapman, with all his forty workers, gave our church nothing, and our people were worn out and discouraged. The change from union preaching to New Testament teaching was resented by many of our people who thought the Chapman style continued ought to do the work. After a week or more there was general enthusiasm on "our plea" and that became the keynote of every sermon, and while many of the sentimental fell off, yet audiences continued to develop until when we closed there were many more interested than at any other time.

Our people were not prepared for a long campaign according to typical eastern conservatism, but when they saw the necessity of it they entered it heartily, until money for advertising and high rental of the best theatre became no object, and they learned as never before that large expenditure means large returns. Instead of borrowing to pay expenses they have money in the treasury. The immediate results were seventy-six additions and twenty-three others we know of who went elsewhere for geographical and other reasons. These are people who were untouched by the Chapman meetings.

William Dunn Ryan, the pastor, is one of the choicest men I have met. His transparent purity is an open book. He led his people nobly into the union meetings, thus opening their eyes to larger plans. While his church is small, badly located, perhaps generally unpopular to the extent that it is known, yet admirers regard him --- one of the best preachers in Syracuse. He has done much to unify his people, having taken the church under grave difficulties. Brother Ryan is scholarly to a fault. He is the only man who could establish a mission, a work that is thriving in a suburb, under the partial leadership of Brother Gerrard, who has been studying medicine. They are now in a meeting, under State Evangelist Tremaine, a most excellent man.

This is my second experience following union meetings. At the first we received 100 or more. I am to follow immediately the Chapman meetings at Dallas, Tex. When I get through I may have a few special experiences concerning union meetings to relate through the columns of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Union evangelism is one of the coming problems for our people, and I am not running away from it.

The Missouri Lectureship.

I wish to call the attention of the Missouri preachers to the lectureship. The next session will be held in Canton, Mo., April 9 to 12. The program is a very attractive one—see it elsewhere in this issue of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Let every preacher, who can so arrange his plans as to be present, send his name to Prof. Ben Cleaver, chairman of the entertainment committee, so that entertainment may be provided. It is well worth the time and money of the preachers to get the stimulus of such a meeting. Prof. Shailer Mathews and George A. Campbell will be our guests this year. You will be helped by them. Arrange to go.—Graham Frank, President.

The Christian Church at Canton, Mo., instructs me to correct the restricted invitation announced, no doubt through my misunderstanding. The entertainment of the guests at the lectureship, April 9-11, will include everything gratis—at least three meals and at least one lodging every day—and each unlimited in length and breadth.—Albert Buxton, Pastor.

The Missouri Christian Lectureship.

The date of this lectureship is rapidly approaching. It convenes at Canton, April 9-11, and a rich treat is offered. Professor Shailer Mathews, of Chicago University, will give us, on Monday night, "The Method of Jesus," and the next morning "The Message of Jesus." Informal discussion will follow.

George A. Campbell, of Chicago, will give us "The Common Man's Religion," and will be reviewed by H. A. Denton, while his "Fiction and Character" will be reviewed by A. W. Kokendoffer.

Professor R. G. Sears will give us "The Geographic and Historic Setting of the Old Testament." The review will be by our "young brother," Dr. W. T. Moore.

Professor C. M. Sharpe will give us "New Testament Criticism and the Historic Christ," which will be reviewed by Dr. Albert Buxton.

M. A. Hart's lecture will be on "The Training of the Child in the Bible School," and his reviewer will be C. H. Winders.

The closing lecture will be by J. H. Garrison on "The Present Phase of the Christian Union Problem," and if we can risk him without a review we can adjourn Wednesday night. If not, doughty warriors can do justice to him the following morning.

Dr. Albert Buxton, dean of the Bible College, Christian University, and pastor of the church, authorizes us to say that "entertainment for supper, lodging and breakfast is offered free to all." Professor Ben Cleaver is chairman of the entertainment committee and all names should be sent to him. A cordial invitation is offered to nearby Illinois brethren to attend. The invitation is broad and includes not only ministers but all interested in the subjects discussed.

One Way.

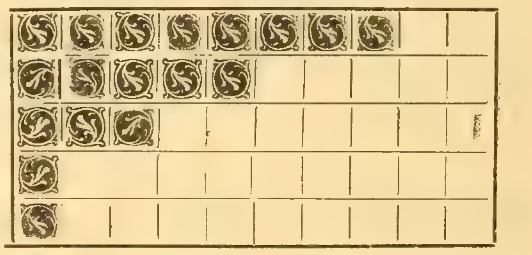
In conversation to-day with a member of the Building Committee of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, he said: "Sunday, three weeks ago, our Sunday-schools took a special collection for us. We have already received over $1,000 from it. Last Sunday night the Christian Endeavors were to take a similar offering. The money has begun to arrive. We will receive over $1,000 from that source."

This is good for our Cumberland Presbyterian brethren. But I can not help but reflect upon my efforts during the last three months. Why are we so far from the goal of our hope? THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and many of the leading brethren have stood by us nobly, and appeal after appeal has been made to assist us in saving the lot. I have worked at my desk for two months, from 8 a. m. until 11 p. m., with only time for meals. I have written over 10,000 letters. If each one to whom I have written had just sent us 25 cents we would have raised $2,500; but here we are with the month of March almost gone. Of course, it is not too late yet to bring success out of what now appears to be a failure. If the thousands of readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST would concern themselves about it to the extent of getting an offering from the Sunday-school or some department of the church, or if the preachers to whom I have written would follow the example of the good brother in Iowa. Here is the letter from the treasurer of his church:



"Dear Brother Kincaid—Find enclosed $6.45. Brother —— put your work before the church last night, with the above results. If this is not enough, I heard many of the brethren say they were ready to contribute again."

God bless this preacher and church. Will not others do likewise and let us bring success out of the rally yet? Send all remittances to T. N. Kincaid, Hot Springs, Ark.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Hot Springs, Ark., March 19.—Whiten one block.—Dr. W. H. Connell.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

An Oklahoma and Indian Territory Letter.

Three weeks in the two territories have made a favorable impression upon the writer. It is hardly less than wonderful to see the progress that has been made in Oklahoma and Indian Territories, whether viewed from a commercial, agricultural, civic, educational or religious standpoint. It will be interesting to witness this growth at some other time. I care now only to mention some good things "concerning the kingdom."

One of the blessings that has recently come to Oklahoma was the visit of A. McLean and Dr. Drummond, of India. That Brother McLean and Dr. Drummond should both visit three or four cities of Oklahoma was a real opportunity for these cities and the preachers and leaders of the churches adjacent, and should have been hailed as a special privilege, not to be lost. Two foreign mission rallies were held, one at Guthrie and the other at El Reno. They were conducted by these two men of God, and were a blessing. The attendance was not large at either place, but the spirit was reverent, devout and enthusiastic. One Sunday Dr. Drummond spoke at Enid, Okla., and at Kingfisher. On Monday morning he addressed the public school at El Reno—the first time anything of the kind had ever occurred. A. McLean made a great missionary address at Oklahoma City and spoke also at Norman, Okla., the seat of the territorial university. The rally at El Reno was pretty well attended by the members of the local church, but there were but few preachers present. The spirit of it was fine and addresses good. The people were blessed. K. C. Ventress, pastor at Guthrie, made careful preparation for the rally at Guthrie and spared no time or effort to make it a success. Brother Ventress is leading his hosts at Guthrie into larger works for Christ and his city. Happy is the pastor who has two such splendid preacher helpers as Pastor Ventress has in John T. Owens and W. A. Humphrey. These two are men of God and an inspiration to their pastor and associate. O. L. Smith is the great heart and the splendid spiritual leader of the forces at El Reno. He has some splendid associates in the work there. Spiritual life in his members is the keynote of Brother Smith's aim and work at El Reno. Brother Smith has been conducting a meeting for several weeks for the educational benefit of his members.

J. B. Boen is the leader of the hosts of Chickasha, I. T., and during his three years' pastorate has done much for the cause there. They have built a $20,000 house, a beautiful and serviceable edifice, with all modern appurtenances. Their services are all well attended. Young people are largely in evidence at his midweek prayer-meeting. Brother Boen told me that he had missed having additions only nine Lord's days in three years.

John A. Tabor, pastor at Watonga, Okla., recently held a five weeks' meeting at Hitchcock, with 102 additions—a remarkable meeting in a town of 250 people. There were about 30 Disciples there before the meeting. The church at Hitchcock provisionally engaged Brother Tabor for half his time as their pastor.

The north district convention of the Indian Territory met at Tulsa, Feb. 13-15. It was a good convention, in attendance, of preachers and members not preachers, in the matter of program, in speakers, in spirit and enthusiasm, and in the splendid hospitality of the church at Tulsa. It could not be otherwise with such a pastor as Randolph Cook. The entertainment was free and full, gracious and graceful. We did not get all the names of attendants. S. R. Hawkins, corresponding secretary of the churches of Indian Territory, is the leader of this splendid host of Indian Territory workers, and under his guiding hand, backed by his territorial board, large results have been accomplished. The leading spirits among the preachers in this district seem to be: J. T. Hawkins, of South McAlester; S. R. Hawkins, corresponding secretary; J. S. Hawkins, Pryor Creek; George Farley, Muscogee; D. M. Harris, Wagoner; Frank Van Voorhis, Okmulgee; R. S. Campbell, Holdenville; A. J. Williams, Vinita; A. M. Harral, Sapulpa; R. E. Rosenstine, Bartlesville, and Randolph Cook, Tulsa—a fine set of preachers. But the preachers are not all of it. The women who work with these preachers, as helpers in the Gospel here, wrought no small part of the success of the work in this territory, and helped in a large degree to make this convention a success. The women's part of the program was a very interesting, inspiring and helpful feature of the feast. The names of some of those who took part are: Mrs. A. M. Harral, of Sapulpa; Mrs. W. F. Smith, Mrs. Morton, of Okmulgee, corresponding secretary of Indian Territory; Mrs. Mitchel, of Pryor Creek, and Mrs. Lucy, of Perry, Okla. Earnestness and consecration to the great cause of missions characterized every speech and speaker. Mrs. Morton made a report of her efforts to enlarge the work in the territory, showing much work and no little spirit of heroic perseverance, and the work is growing under her leadership. Mrs. Lucy was the special representative of the national board. Sister Lucy gave us a splendid review of the work of the C. W. B. M. in fine spirit, to the delight and profit of all. She was one of the very earliest members of the C. W. B. M. and her heart and life is full of it. Some one said that the program of this convention was arranged on an ascending scale—the C. W. B. M. was the closing session of it. There were a number of splendid addresses made during the convention. We did not get to hear them all, but those which we heard were up in "G."

There is something doing in Indian and Oklahoma Territories. Let the brethren keep their eyes on this country. A new church has been dedicated in North Oklahoma City by Bro. J. M. Monroe, corresponding secretary for Oklahoma Territory. Brother Monroe is doing a great work in Oklahoma. Something about his work in another letter—and others. S. G. Clay.

Ohio.

James Small has been assisting the church at Washington C. H. in a meeting. W. H. Boden is the successful bishop of that diocese. They ought to do good in that saloonless town.——W. H. Pinkerton is assisting E. J. Meacham and the Wilmington forces in an evangelistic effort. They always have a fine meeting at Wilmington, so we shall expect good reports.——Chester Sprague has accepted a call to the churches at East Liberty, Middleburg and Mill Creek. He is welcomed back to Ohio, and will find some royal, good souls in these churches.——Pastor Fields, with Singer Saxton, won 41 additions in the Geneva meeting. About one-half of them were men. Why not? This meeting puts "our synagogue" at the head of the list in Geneva numerically.——J. S. Raum is at Madison Avenue, Cleveland, with F. C. Ford and his faithful band, leading sinners to Christ. These people deserve a great harvest.——C. A. Kleeberger held a very successful short meeting at North Hubbard. There were about 20 additions in ten days.——Secretary Bartlett has been holding a meeting at Sugar Tree Ridge in Highland county. It ought to be a sweet meeting, at any rate.——There never was a time when it was so difficult to get good preachers in Ohio as now. It is also true that churches and preachers were never so hard to please as now. Here is a field for your thinking and talking, if you are wise enough.——J. H. Goldner and wife and George A. Bellamy and wife, of Cleveland, go March 18 for a trip to California. Brother Bellamy will deliver some lectures while gone.——Lathrop Cooley preached his sixty-fourth anniversary sermon at Franklin Circle, Cleveland, Sunday, February 25. Just sixty-four years ago that day he preached his first sermon as pastor of that church. Only two people were present who heard the sermon at the first delivery. Brother Cooley is still a man of vigor and energy.——Ohio now has a temperance "search and seizure law." Speak-easies are already hauling out their goods in dry towns. A gloom is cast over the state by the continued illness of Governor Pattison. He has not been at his office in the state house since his inauguration. There is a grave doubt as to his recovery. God reigns, and may his will be done.

EASTER GLORY!

A beautiful exposition of the ministries of the National Benevolent Association of the Christian Church. This service will be sent free to all Bible schools that will present it and send the offering to the National treasury for the care of the hundreds of helpless ones in our Hospitals, Old People's Homes and Orphanages. Jesus said, "Whatsoever ye do unto the least of these, even so ye do unto me." The Benevolent Association was the first of our church societies to adopt Easter as the time for offerings. Each of them has an undivided Day for missions. This Association should have at least one undivided Day for this Gospel of the Helping Hand. Order supplies at once.

How They Do It in Kentucky.

One hundred and four members of our congregation went on a special train on a recent Sunday afternoon to Hawesville, Ky., county seat of Hancock county, to attend the organization of a congregation of Disciples of Christ. A few weeks ago we had neither congregation nor members in Hawesville, but as a result of a short meeting held by our southern Kentucky evangelist, W. J. Hudspeth, an organization of 50 members was effected. Nearly all of these came from the Baptists, and are among the most influential people of the community. For some time they had been drifting away from Baptistic faith, as practiced in Hawesville, and, after hearing the simple Gospel preached by Brother Hudspeth, called a conference with the evangelist, resulting in their decision to become Christians only. They have some means at hand and will proceed to build a house of worship at once. Trustees, elders and deacons were appointed. Brother Hudspeth showed himself a wise master builder in the whole matter, and none but the best feeling exists on all sides. F. M. Rains, who spoke for us on the Sunday morning, went with us to Hawesville and gave a short address, showing the strength and influence of the Disciples of Christ and the advances being made in world-wide missions. After his masterful address here Sunday it was decided that this congregation become a living link this year. Considering that we are yet in the building stage, this advanced step means much to us.

—O. P. Spiegel, who has for the past two years been general evangelist under the Home Board, has about decided to retire from that work the first of April, to enter the larger field as an independent general evangelist. He will associate with him a first-class singer. As those who read the account of the New York campaign in our last issue will know, he is now in a good meeting at Plainfield, N. J., which will likely continue on into the middle of April. Brother Spiegel has a fine reputation for evangelistic work.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Litchfield, Ill., March 19.—Eighty additions in 18 days; weather fearful, but audience great. Evangelist Fife is a power.—M. S. Johnson.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Owensboro, Ky., March 19.—R. H. Crossfield is a great general. A great church and theater meeting here yesterday; 20 additions. The Martin family are assisting; fine spirit and outlook.—Richard Martin, Evangelist.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Bloomington, Ind., March 19.—Twenty-three yesterday; 106 in last eight days; 486 to date. A new building is almost certain. The interest is deepening.—Brooks Brothers.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Greenville, Ill., March 19.—Meeting three weeks old; crowded out of church to the largest auditorium in town; 70 added. Tally Defrees, the worthy pastor.—E. E. Violett, Evangelist.

Special to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Connersville, Ind., March 18.—Nine confessions this morning; 12 men confessed Christ at men's meeting, 44 to-night, 65 to-day; 351 in 19 days. Some sects are sorry that Scoville stays. One-fifth of the population of the city attend the meeting every night. DeLoss Smith has returned and sings with tenderness and power solos that are leading many to Christ. Scoville's physical powers and endurance remain as marvelous as his ability to present the persuasive Gospel. Visiting evangelists and pastors from many cities come and go in wonderment.—P. M. Kendall.

Lewiston, March 8.—Our district evangelist, John Fuller, has just closed a successful meeting at Nezperce, with 35 additions. Money was subscribed for the support of a minister, and I have been called to take up the work.—E. F. Beaudreau.

Illinois.

Caldwell, March 14.—Meeting nine days old, with 15 additions—6 by confession; good audiences. Meeting continues several weeks.—George C. Ritchey.

Newman, March 18.—The church continues to grow since the Scoville meeting; 27 additions here and at Murdock recently.—O. L. Lyon.

Olney, March 12.—We began meeting March 8; 12 additions yesterday.—Lee Tinsley.

Paris, March 16.—We are in a meeting with home forces; 53 additions in 15 days. LeRoy St. John has just come to assist us.—Finis Idleman.

East St. Louis, March 18.—Our meeting at the Lansdowne Church closed with 25 additions—17 by confession, 2 by letter, 6 from denominations. E. T. McFarland was the evangelist.—C. O. Reynard, Minister.

Rossville, March 15.—Twenty-nine additions to date; will continue over Sunday. We are hindered by an epidemic of measles and bad weather. Mrs. J. E. Powell has charge of the music. H. H. Peters is the pastor. I go to El Reno, Okla., March 25.—Harold E. Monser, Evangelist.

West Salem, March 12.—We have just closed a meeting, with home forces, resulting in 23 additions—18 by baptism. The work is in good condition.—G. W. Ford.

Kenney, March 12.—Our meeting closed with 15 added and the church revived. Although the weather was unfavorable the attendance was good and the brethren are much encouraged.—James E. Stebbins and Wife, Evangelists.

Decatur, March 6.—Four more accessions, making a total of 85 since the new year.—F. W. Burnham, Pastor.

Quincy, March 6.—Since last report we have had 11 additions—4 by baptism, 4 by letter, 3 by statement.—Walter M. Jordan, Minister.

Greenville, March 11.—We closed our meeting with 42 additions—E. E. Violett.

Augusta, March 16.—One hundred and ten in meeting at Pittsfield; begin here with N. E. Cory, pastor; 1 addition.—H. A. Davis, Evangelist.

Mt. Vernon, March 17.—Thirty-one additions in a four weeks' meeting at Dahlgren—20 by confession, 11 by statement.—Lew D. Hill and Wife.

Waukegan, March 16.—Ten additions Sunday—8 by confession.—E. N. Tucker.

Indiana.

Indianapolis, March 15.—A short meeting at the Fourth Church resulted in 24 additions, making 29 since Jan. 1—19 by confession, 6 by letter and 4 from denominations.—Charles E. Underwood, Pastor.

Manilla, March 12.—Have just closed short meeting, with 5 confessions.—W. R. Jinnett.

Warsaw, March 12.—Five added yesterday—3 by letter and 2 by baptism; 13 additions since last November.—M. G. Long, Minister.

Bloomington, March 10.—We have just closed sixth week of meeting; 380 accessions—254 by primary obedience; will continue two weeks.—T. J. Clark, Minister.

Edinburg, March 12.—Twenty-five additions during February at regular services—23 by baptism. I began my second year March 1; 5 additions recently—3 by confession, 2 by letter. The congregation is working splendidly.—T. H. Adams.

Peru, March 12.—Our meeting closed with 26 added. H. K. Shields had charge of the music.—C. H. DeVoe, Pastor.

Sheridan, March 17.—Meeting closed with 68 added. Brothers Crim and Tapp were the evangelists.—A. P. Fifer.

Angola.—The church in Angola has closed another notable meeting, in which 56 souls became obedient to the faith. R. H. Crossfield, of Owensboro, Ky., and Mrs. E. J. Todd, of Flora, Ind., were called to our aid. For three weeks great congregations gathered to listen to the splendid teaching and the tender, thrilling appeals. The themes of the service became general topics of conversation throughout the community. A question box was used with telling effect. The student body, particularly, became deeply impressed with the intelligent and discreet work of the evangelists. Out from this student body came many to declare their faith in Christ, and others to complete their obedience and to adopt the plea for the "old paths." A number of young men of fine abilities will give themselves to the ministry of the Word as one result of this series of meetings. As another result a vast amount of valuable teaching has been done, which must inevitably yield a rich harvest.—Vernon Stauffer.

Iowa.

Coon Rapids, March 12.—We are beginning the sixth week of meeting—74 additions to date. W. C. Cole is the evangelist.—G. C. Stearns.

Des Moines, March 16.—Meeting at Humeston closed with 39 additions. I began at Deweese, Neb., last Lord's day.—Joel Brown.

Oskaloosa.—Since last September about 50 additions have been made to our membership. Our pastor, S. H. Zendt, also conducted a two weeks' meeting in the country, with good results. Pastor and people are looking forward to a good meeting with A. E. Cory, in May if possible, and hope to be able to secure Brother Scoville in Sept., 1907.

Kansas.

Topeka, March 16.—I assisted F. W. Emerson, Yates Center, Kan., in a four weeks' meeting, resulting in 46 additions. The Bible school attendance was increased from 125 to 187.—V. E. Ridenour, Singer.

Elk City, March 12.—Our five weeks' meeting closed with 87 additions—72 by confession, 8 by

Piles Cured

Without Knife or Instrument

Sample Package Free so That we Can Prove it to You.

"Every morning, for over 20 years, I never went to the toilet without fear and trembling, and I never left it without having suffered agonizing tortures. Many days I did not dare go at all, so much did I dread the terrible ordeal."

These are the exact words of a sufferer from piles and we hear the same thing almost every day. It voices the sentiments of hundreds of thousands of others in this country today, for it is estimated that of every ten persons we meet in church, the street, or the theater, seven are affected with piles.

Martyrs and needless martyrs, too, for since the discovery of the marvelous Pyramid Pile Cure no one need suffer one moment longer. There is now no excuse for having piles and if you continue to suffer from them you do not deserve a particle of sympathy, considering the chance we give you to prove it to your own satisfaction wholly free of cost to you.

Here is a typical case: Mr. Benjamin Shaw, Postmaster of Bland, New Mexico. He had suffered from aggravated piles for years, and was upon the eve of a serious surgical operation, believing that he had reached the limit, and that the operation offered the only possible means of relief and cure. Let us quote his own words in his letter of Oct. 31, 1905: "I was in great agony of mind and body. In the meantime, a gentleman told me of the virtue of your pyramid remedy. I fortunately found it at a drug store, and by the next morning I did not feel that an operation was necessary, and in three days I was able to return home, and a complete cure was accomplished to my great satisfaction and the surprise of the physician."

Send today to the Pyramid Drug Company, 2049 Pyramid Building, Marshall, Mich., and get a sample package by return mail and then go to your druggist and get a box, the price of which is 50 cts., and get well without pain, trouble or cutting.

statement, 1 by letter and 6 from denominations. J. P. Haner, of Purdy, Mo., was the evangelist and Miss Lulu Gilliland of Kansas City, Mo., had charge of the music. J. W. Ball is the pastor. —R. M. Shaffer, Elder.

Wichita, March 5.—The meeting at the Central Church closed with 61 additions. The preaching was done by the pastor, and Frank Huston, of Indianapolis, had charge of the music. There were 21 additions at regular services during January.—C. F. Stevens, Pastor.

Girard, March 5.—Two additions since last report—1 by letter and 1 by confession.—F. H. Schmitt, Pastor.

Missouri.

Eldorado Springs, March 12.—Three additions recently—2 by statement, 1 by restoration.—John Giddens, Minister.

Milan, March 9.—Eleven additions since Jan. 14; work in fine condition.—J. J. Limerick.

Minden Mines, March 11.—Two additions recently. Charles H. Swift, the pastor, is doing good work.—F. M. Usher.

Troy, March 12.—One addition at Elsberry yesterday. We are in a meeting here, with N. J. De Laney as evangelist; 3 additions—2 by confession, 1 by letter.—E. G. Merrill.

St. Louis, March 19.—At Compton Heights—5 confessing and 1 by letter.—F. N. Calvin.

Carrollton, March 15.—Four additions at Milan recently—2 by confession and 2 by letter, making 17 added since Jan. 14.—J. J. Limerick.

Joplin, March 13.—I held a month's meeting at Carl Junction, a railroad town ten miles north of here, resulting in 69 additions—40 by confession, 10 from the denominations, 6 reclaimed and balance by letter and statement. Our membership is now about 109. L. D. Sprague, of California, Mo., assisted us.—J. W. Baker, County Evangelist

Kirksville, March 13.—Six additions by confession yesterday—12 added since last report.—D. A. Wickizer.

Paris, March 11.—Our meeting with Brooks brothers delayed; two additions this morning—1 by confession and 1 by letter.—J. H. Wright.

Michigan.

Yale, March 15.—A short meeting held by J. S. Raum, of Saginaw, closed with 7 added—2 by confession, 5 otherwise, and the church much strengthened.—R. B. Brown.

THE TWO FOUNDATIONS—
Matt. 7:15-29.

Memory verses, 24, 25.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Be ye doers of the word and not hearers only.—Jas. 1:22.

It is a characteristic of Jesus as a teacher that he laid down great and universal principles which are valid alike in the natural and in the spiritual world. These he illustrated by reference to obvious and visible phenomena of nature which showed the working of the principle, and then he applied them to the more important spiritual realm. It was because, with wonderful wisdom, he chose truths which are of universal validity that he could make his statement of them so simple and concrete and at the same time so large and general.

The Sermon on the Mount contains many such large principles which hold good for every department of life. For example, "Where thy treasure is, there will thy heart be also." Here is a truth which is as true in business as in religion. The man who has invested in oil is interested in oil; he whose treasure is in bank stock is interested in whatever promotes the prosperity of banks; he who has invested his thought, money and prayers in the things of the Kingdom of God will find his interest there. Again, "No man can serve two masters." Jesus saw and proclaimed the fatal weakness of divided attention and divided loyalty. No one can be a loyal subject of two kings or citizen of two countries. No one can properly follow two professions at once. This is experience and common sense. It is spiritual sense, or common sense in the realm of spiritual things, that "no man can serve God and mammon." In such ways as this Jesus set forth what we will not call either "the natural law in the spiritual world" or the spiritual law in the natural forld, but God's universal laws operating in both the natural and the spiritual worlds.

One of the greatest of these universal principles is the law of cause and effect which is set forth in the first verses of the lesson. "By their fruits ye shall know them." It is a principle of science that like produces like. We live in a world of order where the sequence of cause and effect is unbroken. The more science learns about the world the more certain is it that things do not happen by chance but by causation, and that the totality of causes completely determines the effect. It was this principle to which Jesus appealed in his warning against false prophets and against mere verbal pretensions of piety.

The law of cause and effect holds good in spiritual things. The fruits are the test of the tree; the life is the test of religion. The grace of God can work great wonders in the life of man, but it works in harmony with this divine principle of causation.

Two practical applications of this law may be made. The first has reference to discerning between true and false religion. It is not primarily the business of any individual to judge the quality of another person's piety ("judge not"), but persons who assume leadership must be judged by those who accept or reject their guidance. In such a case, says Jesus, the safest test of a prophet is the fruits of his religion in his own life. It is of the first importance that one should be able to judge of the reality of his own religion. Here, too, the test of fruits should be applied. Does my religion make me a good father, husband, or son, a good wife, mother or daughter? Does it make me a good citizen? Does it produce in my life the joy and peace and love which are the true fruits of the Spirit? If not, my orthodoxy is of no avail. If so, my opinions may need correcting, but I need not be discouraged as to my spiritual condition.

The second application of the law is this: If we wish to reap the blessing of the spiritual life we must sow that kind of a crop. We can not sow selfishness, worldliness, lust, falsehood and expect to reap the fruits of eternal blessedness. The grace of God will work no transforming miracle to give us a harvest of grapes and figs when we have industriously sown thorns and thistles.

LIVES THAT ENDURE.—Matt.7:24,25; 1 Cor. 3:10-15; Eph. 2:19-22; 1 Tim. 6:17-19.

Look, and upon every life that gives promise of enduring through time and over into eternity, whether its day be on this or the other side of Christ, and somewhere upon it you will see the sign of the cross.

There is more in the future for the children of faith than mere endurance. For us to seek everlastingness only would be to repeat the error of the ancient goddess, who sought and secured everlasting life for her mortal lover, but neglected to ask for everlasting youth, so that his wretchedness increased with the flight of time. Eternal life is infinitely more than mere continued existence, "and this is life eternal, to know thee, the only true and living God and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."

John Howard Payne's life will endure as long as men yearn for "Home, Sweet Home," and Washington's while political liberties are held dear, and Lincoln's long as serfs are praying for emancipation. Such lives endure not simply as a memory, but as a force and inspiration to others adown the generations to do again their mighty works and more greatly bless the ever increasing millions of the children of men. We, too, shall endure and so endure according to what we have actually done.

All lives that endure are guarded by One divine in his love, as omnipotent in his power. Not one who can sing a song of cheer, wreathe tearful faces with smiles, enrich one hour with love, jewel one moment with a joy, or bring the least heavenliness down to earth but satan would destroy. The fell destroyer is abroad; our only safety is under the egis of divine protection. Let us not venture out of his presence, nor rely on our own moral strength. Only in him is there refuge, safety and immortality.

Michaelangelo summoned renown enduring as time from marble blocks changing into forms divine under the magic of his chisel, and Raphael won it through pictures whose voiceless eloquence will proclaim his fame to the last race of men. But how much longer our lives will endure if, instead of working on stone or canvas, we select as objects of our life work the lives and moral natures of men, women and children, and make God and his purposes known to them and help fit and prepare them for the highest heavens!

The names of Judas the betrayer, Pontius Pilate the murderer, Julian the Apostate, Voltaire the scoffer, Paine the blasphemous, Strauss the professor, Hume the infidel, Renan the satirist, and Ingersoll the infamous, may all endure for centuries, as some of them have, but their lives have been banished into eternal destruction from the presence of God and the angels. When a man is gone from earth, the name by which he was known here is a thing as apart from him as is the body he once inhabited. We need not be so concerned about the name we leave behind us and which the thoughtless crowd may bandy as about the enduring lives that constitute ourselves in happiness or wretchedness forever.

The house on the sand may have been as commodious and snugly built and in other ways attractive as the one on the rock. The fatal difference was in its location. So with people. Many are brave, brilliant, compelling, actuated by noble purposes, holding coveted places of usefulness and honor in society, and in nearly all respects on an equality with, if not superior to, the children of the Kingdom. But the crisis of death approaches and they are not prepared to endure it. The superstructure of their lives, delectable as it may be, falls into ruin because of a fatal defect in the foundation; they were not built on Christ. Let us envy no man of the world, let us pity and love him rather, and plead with him to build on the enduring foundation of Christ and Apostles.

FROM CALVARY TO PENTECOST.

THE SEVEN SAYINGS ON THE CROSS.—Matthew 27:46; Luke 23:34,43,46; John 19:25-30.

The First: "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me"! If Jesus completed the Passion most divinely, he began it most humanly. He trod the wine press alone. A more depressing sense of abandonment never made any one more susceptible to temptations to swerve from the line of duty and glory. But having loved us in the beginning, he loved us unto the end. Who can hear this cry of forsakenness and then deny him, even in the presence of social ostracism and alms house doors?

The Second: "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." One who could lay down his life for his friends might then have been a conception of optimistic genius, but one who would relinquish his life for his enemies was not a creation of the imagination of men of that day—he must be a character portrayed and not one created. Luke even asks us to hear him pray for the forgiveness of his murderers! How well it becometh us who by faith have heard that prayer, to "forgive those who have trespassed against us"

The Third: "To-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." Without one note of uncertainty Jesus tells the dying, penitent thief, who had become conscious of the divinity of his companion in suffering and trusted in him, of life on the morrow when the death damp would be kissed from his brow by sunlight eternal. That same sweet promise of life beyond he breathes into the heart of every saint to-day, and happy anticipations of its joys rob death of its sting and the grave of its victory.

The Fourth: "Woman, behold thy son"! "Behold thy mother"! Years before, the saintly Joseph had left Mary in widowhood. John and James appear to have been the only apostles endowed with possessions, and John seems to have been dearer to Jesus than even Mary's other sons and daughters. The care of this queen of the world's motherhood was all he had to bequeath his friends, and this inexpressibly tender token of his love is bestowed upon John who could most appreciate and care for it. Jesus here illustrates a filial thoughtfulness that in two sentences has done more to sanctify the home and fireside than all volumes on social philosophy ever written. O, that on the ears of all bereft widowhood might fall the gracious words, "Mother, behold thy son," and find that guardian a true disciple of Mary's Son.

The Fifth: "I thirst." The Man of Sorrows' sufferings were not only those of his emotional nature produced by the feeling of abandonment, but the pitiless fingers of pain were playing on every nerve center in his sensitive body. This brings him into helpful relationship with all the world's sufferers. A notorious drunkard tried in vain all the advertised rum cures. Eventually he won a complete victory over the drink demon. Once he paused in the rounds of a singularly useful life to give the secret of it. He said: "I heard my Savior's cry of thirst from the cross, and determined that since he endured such thirst for my sake, I would endure my thirst for his sake, and he helped me till it is gone."

The Sixth: "It is finished." It was a long, trying way from the young virgin mother's arms in Bethlehem to Golgotha. The years were few, but into them were crowded all the experiences of man from Eden to the end of time; there were cradle lullabys, the wild cry of the mob, the voices of human gratitude and divine approval; the Messianic prophecies were fulfilled, the disciples were trained, the Father was revealed, the world was being saved; neither love's beguilements nor hatred's persecutions swerved him from duty and destiny; he finished the work given him to do. Let us, too, be able to say: "I have fought a good fight; I have kept the faith; I have finished my course."

The Seventh: "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit." The sufferings are ended now. Pillowed on the assurance of the Father's love the inner peace making him oblivious to the wild tumult without he falls into that dreamless slumber whose awakening was in Paradise. May that same confidence be ours as the twilight falls, and may we in the spirit of his greatest apostle know that "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of rejoicing which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give to me at that day, and not unto me only but unto all them also that love his appearing."

People's Forum

For Federation—A Crown of Thorns?

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

For many years I have been a constant reader of the "Christian Standard" and The Christian-Evangelist. They are great papers and welcome visitors to my home. In fact, they come so often and stay so long that we regard them as members of the family. Brother Lord, being a younger man than the Sage of St. Louis, imagines the world is about to collapse and we are in danger of becoming "a disappearing brotherhood." Well, it will be a long time even after the death of McLean and Rains and Muckley.

I have read the little controversy over federation between our good editors with no little interest. The Christian-Evangelist of March 8 is before me. I have just finished reading Brother Garrison's reply to James T. Lawson's nine questions. Immediately I took up my pen to endorse all Brother Garrison said. He is not only a Christian, an "Israelite, indeed," but thoroughly orthodox. I verily believe many good brethren have looked at Brother Garrison through colored classes and have misunderstood him. Many seem to think to follow him is to be led into a regular "Custer charge," to be slaughtered and ruined. I have no such fears. His head is now too gray; his race too nearly run. For one, I am not willing to see these old heroes, who for many long years have fought our battles for us, die with a crown of thorns on their brows that their brethren have placed there. I want to help to put a pillow of down beneath their weary heads.

In the light of this article I could stand by the side of Brother Garrison in this federation movement. This is the way he understands the New York platform, and New York is not responsible for Oregon.

The older I grow the more anxious I am to see the people of God united. How can we unite until we learn to love all men? How can we learn to love them as long as we call them, in an insulting way, "sectarians" and "the offspring of Rome"? When will they ever learn to love us? What is the use to pray for union and then in a sectarian spirit do all we can with tongue and pen to prevent it? May it not be inexpedient for "us" to build a church in a little town with a population of 300 or 400, when they already have five or six churches there? Can not our missionary boards make better use of their money? "What fools we (sectarians?) be!" In the rivalry, prejudice and heated discussions of the past, men of faith have seldom sat down, as representatives of a common cause, to study the Word of God together to see if union, under the divine Master, were even possible. Times have changed. Christians everywhere are praying that all enmity and divisions may forever pass away. We ought to lead in this glorious warfare.

GEESLIN.

Born July 18, 1838. Died February 5, 1906. Aged 67 years, 6 months and 17 days. Brother David Geeslin was born in Brown county, Ohio, where he resided until about 30 years old. Then he moved to Iowa, where he remained for 12 years, when he came to Kansas, settling on a farm near South Haven, where he lived until his decease. He was married to Angelina Elvira Easter in Highland county, Ohio, on the 12th day of January, 1860. His wife and eight children survive him. The children consist of four sons and four daughters, as follows: Rebecka Jane (now Mrs. M. E. Harlan), whose husband is pastor of the Christian Church at Brooklyn, N. Y.; Benjamin Cary Geeslin, a practicing physician at Arkansas City, Kan.; Alice Ann Payne, of Blackwell, Okla.; Jona Hartsell Geeslin, residing on a farm in Blaine county; Hinson Hall Geeslin, who is still residing at home; Mary Magdalene Heenay, of Blackwell, Okla.; Errett Coleman Geeslin, and Edith C. Geeslin, still living at home. Brother Geeslin confessed his faith in the Savior and enlisted in his service by obedience during his boyhood days, and gave all his life to the service of the Master. His was a life of faithfulness unto the very last. There was never a moment when he gave evidence of the least doubt as to the truthfulness of God's Word. It was his support day and night, and when life's sun was setting it did not fail him then. He always had a reason to give for the hope within him to them that asked. He would defend the faith of Christianity with all the powers of his manhood, and no argument would cause him to waver in the least. He tried to rear his children in that faith, and has so well succeeded that all the children are to-day members of the Christian Church and occupy important positions in the church work in the communities where they reside. Brother Geeslin sleeps in what we call the sleep of death, and to us it is only a sleep; for his faith has conquered, and to-day he is safe in the presence of God. Death to the Christion is only the closing of eyes to the changing scenes of time, to open them to behold the fairer and more beautiful things of that home of the redeemed soul. Brother Geeslin has come, has lived, has gone; his life has left its impress upon the world, and there are many hearts that have been made glad because Brother Geeslin has been able to assist them in seeing clearly their duty to the Master and planting within them the same trustful faith that has characterized his life all the way through. Brother Geeslin was one of God's noblemen; he was one of the church's faithful ones who could always be depended upon. We can speak of him in confidence and faith as to the outcome of his life. P. H. Guy.

MYRES.

Sister Martha M. Shappee-Myres was born in Horse Head Chemung county, N. Y., Oct. 18, 1835, and died at her home in Miller, S. D., Jan. 19, 1906, of paralysis. She was married to Frank Myres, Sept. 18, 1858. To them were born three daughters—Mrs. Lena F. Redman, Fresno, Cal.; Mrs. Ethel F. Gifford, Pierre, S. D., and Mrs. Mina Waters, Miller, S. D. One year after marriage Mr. and Mrs. Myres moved to Iowa, where they lived for 18 years; then to Nebraska, where they remained for eight years; thence to Miller, where they have resided for 18 years. Sister Myres was stricken blind eight years ago. She confessed her Savior years ago, and when the Church of Christ was organized in Miller, she came in as one of the charter members. Her funeral was conducted at her home church by the writer, in the presence of a large and sympathetic audience, and her remains laid to rest in the G. A. R. Cemetery, near the city of Miller.

A. O. Swartwood.

WILLMOTT.

Mary Jane Willmott departed this life in Kansas City, Mo., Feb. 12, 1906. For more than 30 years she was a consecrated Christian. Early in the '70s she and her husband, William W. Willmott, made public confession of their faith in the Christ. It was at the First Christian Church, Seventeenth and Olive streets, St. Louis. Dr. Hopson was ministering unto the congregation. Brother Willmott was soon made a deacon. Some years ago, at Liberty, Mo., he died, leaving the subject of this notice and an only son, William Canby Willmott, to mourn his absence. Mrs. Mary J. Willmott, Susan B. Canby and Sarah B. Ellis were sisters and daughters of O. H. P. Breckenridge and Nancy E. Breckenridge, of Kentucky. Mrs. Willmott was the oldest of the daughters, and Mrs. Ellis, the sole survivor of the family, is the youngest, now living in Bentonville, Ark. Previous to her death Mrs. Willmott had for many years been afflicted and with heroic patience had borne her sufferings. She was an exemplary Christian, interested in the work of the church. Liberal in her gifts to all missionary enterprises and substantially sympathetic to the benevolences of the church, she read with increasing interest of the great work we are setting before us to bring honor to God and for the salvation of the world. Unable to attend church, she constantly had in her hand the Word of God. For more than 30 years she was a loving reader of The Christian-Evangelist, and among the last deeds of her life was to remember helpfully a department in that paper to aid an orphan and a missionary. She has laid away the body of flesh and pain and entered into the rest for which she yearned. The funeral services were conducted by R. G. Frank, of Liberty, and J. P. Pinkerton, of Plattsburg. The interment was in Greenlawn Cemetery, at Plattsburg, Mo., Wednesday, Feb. 14, 1906. J. W. Ellis.

PAINE.

Miss Lois C. Paine died Feb. 6, 1906, in Wahoo, Neb. She was born in Springfield, Mo., in 1872, and when she was 16 years old united with the South Street Christian Church. Some years after her family removed to Denver, where she, with them, united with the Central Christian Church. During years of ill health, no word of complaint ever passed her lips. Her patience and cheerfulness, under all circumstances, was remarkable. Her death was calm and peaceful, as had been her life. Mrs. Charles Perky.

"Beware of the Dog."

BY E. O. SHARPE.

Trudging along on the dusty way,
A pilgrim in tatters came.
He gazed o'er the fence at a garden gay
And longed for a taste of the same;
But then he jumped like a frightened frog,
For he saw a sign: "Beware of the dog!"

A toil-worn man laid down his tool
To gain his just demands;
The world said, sneering, "You're a fool!"
As it fell into other hands.
In a great machine he was less than a cog,
And learned but this: "Beware of the Dog!"

A maiden stood at the altar rail
And gave her heart's pure gold,
But the man she loved drove a cruel nail
In the hand he had pledged to hold,
And this is the wail from her prison bog:
"Beware! Beware! of the Human Dog!"

'Tis a slander, foul, on the noble brute,
So leal to his master's cause,
To link his name with the ill-repute
On the nasty human paws;
So, scourge with scorn and pitiless flog
The human brute, but—Honor the Dog!

The Bronze Vase.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

[Mrs. Revore, mother of the twins, Raymund and Rhoda, when dying tells them that there is a secret which may or may not have great influence upon their later lives. The secret is in a letter which is in a tin box in the bank of the town. The box is to be opened and the letter read only if either of the twins makes the other very unhappy. The mother dies, and Raymund and Rhoda are left to the mercy of strangers, their mother's half brother in St. Louis having failed to answer repeated letters from Mrs. Revore. The new minister, Brother Bellfield, takes the children into his already overflowing home. Rhoda has a visit from a mysterious man named Boggs, who claims to have been sent by Mrs. Revore's half brother to find out whether the children know anything of a bronze vase. After much delay it is decided to send Rhoda to an orphan home, and Raymund to Mr. Omer's farm.]

CHAPTER X.

When, according to the message delivered by Wizzen, the twins hurried to the house of Miss Glory Aggency, they found Mrs. Omer awaiting them. She was, of course, in the parlor; it was difficult for the children to think of Mrs. Omer sitting down in any room save a parlor. She was elegantly dressed, yet everything about her gave an impression of stiffness, so that it did not seem possible that she could be comfortable. Even her bonnet had a hard, sharp-edged appearance, and the gleam of metal suggested that it was buckled to the head. He face, always grave and cold, betokened the importance and the responsibility of a "leader." "Children," she said, looking at each in turn, "you have kept me waiting a long time."

Miss Glory did not scold them, because she knew the peculiar aversion Wizzen felt for hurried motion. He was fond of motion, it is true; but, like most of us, he had his preferences. Miss Glory wore her teeth and her black apron and her brass thimble. "Come in, children," she said. "Mrs. Omer has not told me a word. She has been waiting for you."

At that moment Mr. Merlin Aggency looked into the parlor, then precipitately withdrew.

"How old is your brother, Miss Glory?" inquired Mrs. Omer, looking at the closed door.

"He is eighty-three," said Miss Glory.

"He is a great care to you," said the other. "I wonder how you stand it. You deserve great credit. It is marvelous. Miss Glory, your life would be so different if you could find a home for him in one of those comfortable—ah—"

"He needs me," said Miss Glory abruptly, "and I need him."

"Pardon me," returned the "leader," "but he has kept your life shadowed ever since I have known you. It is a weight to your heart all the time. And he seems so strong. It seems that he may live to be ninety, at least."

"I think it very likely," said Miss Glory. The other looked dissatisfied, but as Mr. Merlin Aggency now entered the room and definitely seated himself, she turned to the twins. "I am here to tell you," she announced, "that I am just back from Kansas City. As you know, there is an orphan home in Kansas City that takes good little boys and girls when they are quite young. Your being twelve debarred you, according to their rules. But I myself went to these worthy people, and I myself pleaded your cause with them."

Mr. Merlin Aggency fixed his bright, eager eyes upon Mrs. Omer's face, and leaned forward on the edge of his chair, as a cat watches for the coming of a mouse. Mrs. Omer, somewhat disconcerted by this attention, turned her head away from the persistent gaze. Rhoda and Raymund grew pale at the sound, "orphan home," and, as they were sitting side by side, they took each other's hand, without knowing that they did so.

"I represented to these worthy people," pursued Mrs. Omer, "that your mother had been known to us for seven years; that she was a good woman, devoted to the church, industrious, although not skillful, with the needle, but willing to do her work over again without compensation, and that you, Rhoda and Raymund, have good names. They told me the house was full, that every bed was already occupied."

The children's faces brightened.

"Then what is to become of them," Miss Glory exclaimed, rapping the back of her chair with her brass thimble in her disappointment, "I am sure I do not know."

"Wait," said Mrs. Omer, waving a jeweled hand at her majestically. The diamonds on Mrs. Omer's hands were the admiration of Crawley. She wore as many as her fingers could well support; they danced with merry laughter at festive scenes, they shed a holy radiance at church services, they flooded the eye with a solemn rhapsody of color at funerals. "Wait! I am not done. I, too, realized the sad necessity of finding homes for these children. I myself have passed anxious moments over their destiny. I pleaded, exhorted, I even took advantage of my intimacy with some of the most influential members of the executive board, and urged that as a reason. And although one of them lived three miles away, I myself boarded a street car, all alone—"

Mr. Merlin Aggency here brought diversion by crying in a sharp, excited voice, "Four!"

Mrs. Omer turned toward him hastily. His eager eyes were fixed upon her in relentless expectancy. A little confused, she looked into her lap. Perhaps the sight of the diamonds restored her. She continued, "And at last I partially succeeded. But it is very difficult to influence a board. I mean a city board. Of course small towns like Crawley can be reached in almost anything. But cities are different. However, I have some experience. I have been on city boards. I myself—"

Mr. Merlin Aggency cried, "Five!" and rubbed his hands in high satisfaction.

"Brother!" said Miss Glory, gently.

Mr. Merlin Aggency turned to her for appreciation. "'I myself'—five!" he said, nodding his white head. "Do you make it five, sister Glory?"

Mrs. Omer colored painfully. She rose. "The rest is told in a word," she said stiffly, "and really, I have overstayed my time. I must be back to the farm in a brief time; I have brought Nelsie Loraine a little ring, and she will be so impatient to see it." Nelsie Loraine was her daughter. "The effect of my visit—" she caught Mr. Merlin Aggency's eye; he was patiently waiting for another "I, myself," but she disappointed him. "I say," she added, raising her voice as if to drown out the eager gaze, "the effect is as follows: they will take Rhoda, but they are quite, quite too full to admit Raymund. Besides, there can be squeezed in one girl in the girls' dormitory, but there is not another inch of space in the boys' dormitory. I am going back to Kansas City next Saturday, and I will take Rhoda there with me and place her. As for Raymund, I have been thinking: I feel sorry for the boy, and sorry that the children have to be separated. I have decided that he ought to be on a farm, where he can help work for his living. So I my—"

Mr. Merlin Aggency's lips parted.

"So we will take him ourselves. When I come to town to take Rhoda to Kansas City, Mr. Omer will pick up Raymund, and take him home to the farm. Now, it is all arranged, and I must go, for Nelsie Loraine will never forgive me if I linger any longer."

She started toward the door. Rhoda cried out, "But we can not be separated! If one goes to an orphan home, the other must go, too!"

"There is really but room for the one of you, and that one a girl," said Mrs. Omer, conclusively. "Good-evening, Miss Glory, you owe me a call, I think."

"I think so, too," said Miss Glory, "but I do not make calls."

"Ah, yes!" returned Mrs. Omer. "And that is why I say that your life ought to be freed from the—er—"

"But Mrs. Omer," gasped Raymund, "if you can take me to work on the farm, couldn't you take Rhoda, too?"

"Indeed, no," said Mrs. Omer decidedly. "I have a daughter of my own, and I do not care for my very own child—" Her tone seemed to exclude Mr. Omer from any degree of partnership in Nelsie Loraine. "You would not understand," Mrs. Omer added. "It is enough for me to say that we can not take Rhoda. Rhoda will go to this nice, good, comfortable orphan home where some good, kind, motherly woman will find her and want to adopt her. And you will come out to our farm where we will treat you kindly. Good-evening, Miss Glory." Mrs. Omer carried her diamonds away.

Rhoda and Raymund remained as if glued to their chairs. Presently the boy burst forth with, "How can Rhoda go to Kansas City while I stay here? Miss Glory, mother left me to be her protector. That is what Raymund means—a protector. And I am going to protect her as long as I live."

"I will not go to that orphan home!" cried Rhoda, her blue eyes flashing fire.

"Children, listen to me," said Miss Glory, sitting down before them, and laying a thin, bony hand, but after all, a kind hand, upon a knee of each. "I am sorry it has happened this way. But it can't be helped.

It always makes matters worse when we cry out against what can't be helped. Rhoda must go to the orphan home, and Raymund must go to the farm. There is only one word for it, and I believe in calling everything by its name. The name of this thing is Necessity."

"We could just stay with Brother Bellfield," gasped Rhoda blindly.

"No. You could not stay there, and be a burden to him. He is too kind for you to be willing to embarrass him in that way."

"He said we could stay as long as we wanted to," Raymund faltered in a voice of acute pain.

"He is a good man," said Miss Glory abruptly, all the more abruptly, no doubt, that she might conceal her emotion. "He understands children. I don't. If I did, I could say all this to you without making you so miserable. Brother Bellfield would share his last crust with you. But would you be willing to take a piece of his last crust? Don't you know he and his wife do most of the work for that large family? His oldest son, Jasper, that trifling, lazy——"

"He is looking about for work," said Rhoda, feeling that she must defend Brother Bellfield's family. "I feel sorry for him. And Mr. Morton can't work because he has a great trouble. He is so sad."

"Well," snapped Miss Glory, "is that dowdy, sticky-faced wife of Jasper Bellfield sad? And there is the invalid sister for somebody to always look after. And now a letter comes that the father and mother of that sticky-faced, frumpy, lazy wife of that no-account, idle Jasper Bellfield are going to swoop down upon them for a month's visit—and no beds to give them. Brother Bellfield and his wife will have to sleep on the floor in the attic."

"We didn't know any more were coming," said Rhoda in surprise. "Where will they be put?"

"Brother Bellfield didn't tell you for fear of making you think you were too many there. But that's the truth; too many you are. You will have to leave! And where will you go? So be ready to take the train Saturday, Rhoda, and Raymund, it's the farm for you."

Their faces were so miserable that the old lady instinctively felt in her apron-pocket for her box of cough lozenges; but Rhoda, suddenly bursting into loud sobs, put her hands over her face and ran from the room. Miss Glory hesitated a moment, then hurried after her. Raymund began to cry unrestrainedly. It did not matter, any more, how many tears ran down his face. He did not seek to conceal them. Little old Mr. Merlin Aggency stared at him in open-mouthed wonder, for the scene had been quite beyond his powers of counting. The tears coursed unchecked as the future darkened its glass before the youth's mental vision. The venerable accountant came to his side and put his arm about Raymund's neck.

"Come, boy," he said, "it's not so bad, is it? You can always name a detail. Look about you! Cheer up!"

"Oh, Mr. Aggency," sobbed Raymund, grasping his hand, "and after mother's thinking we would always be together! Perhaps I will never see her again. Perhaps she will die away from me. What good will an education do without Rhoda? Oh, Mr. Aggency, what will become of us?"

The old man patted his head. "Boy, boy," he said gently, "let me get my ledger. Let's count it!" He was so eager to be of comfort that Raymund could not but be touched. He tried to smile. "That's it!" cried the old man, skipping to the mantelpiece for his blank book. "Troubles disappear when you go to count them."

Hearing and Doing.

BY WALTER S. WHITACRE.

To-day if you will hear His voice,
  Harden not your heart;
'Twixt life and death he gives you choice,
  Choose the better part.
His voice is sweet, His accents clear
And none who listen fail to hear
The message of His wondrous love
That comes to earth from heaven above.
  Yield to Him your heart.

And when the voice of Christ is heard,
  Listen and obey.
He asks you to accept His Word;
  Do it now—to-day.
To hear alone has ne'er sufficed
To bring an alien heart to Christ.
Be swift to hear and sure to do
If you would walk the pathway true.
  Hear Him and obey.

The man who hears and fails to do,
  Builds upon the sand.
The floods will sweep his house from view,
  For it can not stand.
But he who heeds what he has heard
And willingly obeys the Word,
Builds safely on the solid rock,
Secure from time's tempestuous shock.
  Build not on the sand.

Harvesting the Orange.

BY LASALLE A. MAYNARD.

At the very time the winter winds are fiercest in northern latitudes and the snows are drifting among the apple trees and eddying around the snug farmhouses of New England, and the middle west, the orange, that favorite child of the sun, comes to its luscious prime under the cloudless skies and in the genial air of southern California and hangs pendant, like a globe of molten gold, from the evergreen branches, ready for the hand of the harvester. From early in December, when fruit is picked for the Christmas market, until May, is the busiest season of the year for the orange grower, and all through these months one may see among the groves that everywhere crowd up to the highway in the "orange belt," groups of pickers, tawny Mexicans, little brown men from Japan, and occasionally a few whites, deftly clipping the fruit from the trees with shears and placing it carefully in canvas bags suspended from their shoulders. The navel orange tree, the prevailing type, is of low stature, seldom over 10 or 12 feet in height, so that the greater part of the fruit is easily reached from the ground; for that in the higher branches the stepladder comes into play. From the canvas bags the fruit is transferred into small boxes placed at convenient points to be picked up later by the wagon men and drawn away to the packing house. Each of these small boxes contains an average of 200 oranges, and a skilled picker will fill from 75 to 100 boxes a day, receiving for each box the sum of 3 cents.

An orange tree in its prime will yield from four to six boxes per tree, and the groves will average about 100 trees to the acre. A 10-acre orchard will, therefore, yield in a good season about 4,500 boxes. The orange is easily injured and rendered unmarketable by rough handling, and great care must be exercised all through the process of harvesting and packing to avoid loss from this source. Japanese pickers are favored among the orange growers, not only because of the neatness, care and skill which mark their work, but also because of their sobriety and faithfulness and their prompt and cheerful compliance with all orders and regulations. In most of these respects their conduct stands out in sharp contrast with that of the average white laborer of their class.

From the orchards the boxes are transported in open vans to the packing houses which are generally situated in convenient proximity to some railroad siding. On orange packing house in full operation is pleasant to the eyes and to other senses as well, redolent as it is with the perfume of the garnered fruit lying about in heaps like drifts of solidified sunshine. The operations are simple, quiet and largely automatic, with due care at each step of the process to avoid injury to the fruit. If the oranges need washing, which is not often the case, they are gently dumped into a shallow vat where they are moved along by a traveling belt between brushes submerged in water and carried thence up to a platform to be dried in the sun. If they have no need of this cleansing process they are dumped into another capacious box or apron, to be caught and carried by another slow moving belt up to a platform, where they pass along under the inspection of a group of workers who pick out the imperfect fruit, or "culls" as they are called, and deposit them in canvas chutes for other disposition. From this point the stream, freed from its imperfections, flows on and down a gentle incline to a lower level after being caught up on the way in a pocket-like contrivance, in which the weight of the oranges is taken and registered. On the lower lever the oranges, which still, like poor Joe, are "allus a movin' on," are made to separate themselves into the three sizes or principal grades by which they are known to the market, "standard," "choice" and "fancy." This is done by the simple device of a long trough or shallow wooden channel, with a slit at the bottom running lengthwise and varying in width according to the sizing desired. As the little rivulet of oranges flows along this trough the separation is effected by the fruit dropping through the slit, according to size, the smallest first and last of all the golden beauties which are labeled "fancy." As they thus separate themselves, the oranges roll down through side chutes into shallow canvas boxes whence they are picked up by the deft and nimble fingers of other workers, usually young women, wrapped in soft paper and packed in the boxes, not to be seen again until opened for sale in the eastern markets. From the packers the boxes are trundled to a long bench where the open side is closed with a few quick strokes of a hammer, and thence on into a convenient car, where, firmly secured in layers by crosswise slats, they are ready for their long journey over mountain and plain to the orange lovers of the middle west and eastern seaboard.

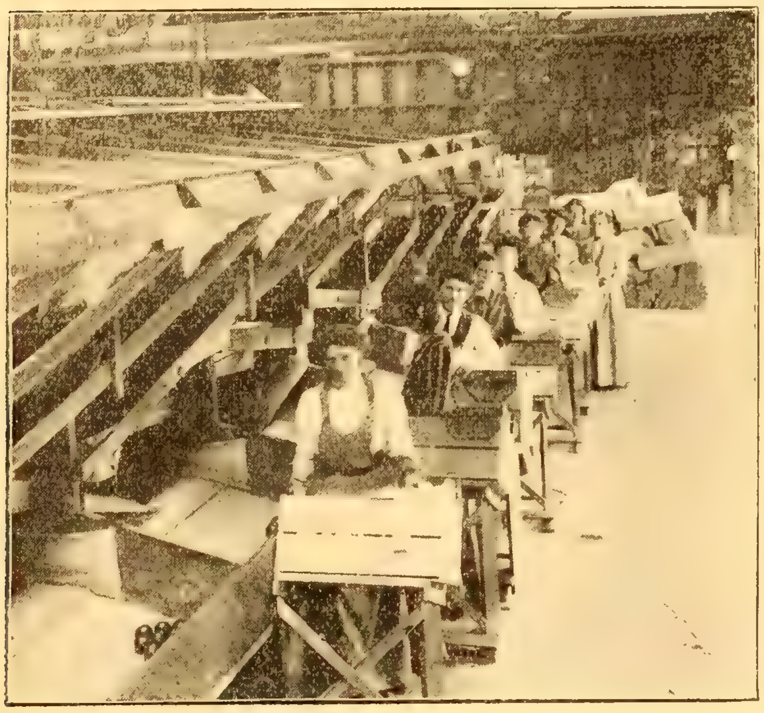
I have confined myself thus far to a brief description of the harvesting of the orange crop, as witnessed in southern California. There are many other phases of the industry, from the setting out of the nursling tree to the marketing of the product, equally interesting and worthy of attention. The trees are transferred from the nursery to the orchard when they are about 2 years old, and are in fairly good bearing when they are 5 years of age. In a favorable climate and under proper care the tree lives and maintains its productiveness with little variation for many years. The once famous Wolfskill orange orchard, near Los Angeles, the first one planted for profit in California, is now over 50 years old. Many small orchards of seedlings planted in the early 60s are still flourishing. One such in the town of Sonoma has trees 3 feet in circumference, which have borne in recent years as high as 25 boxes each. The mother of all the navel orange trees in southern California, planted by Mr. Luther C. Tibbets at Riverside, in 1873, is still flourishing, and when I saw it a few weeks ago was hanging low with fruit of a tempting size and quality.



The orange growers of Riverside do well to guard this tree with jealous care and watchful pride, for out of it has grown the orange industry as it exists to-day in California, and which now represents a direct investment of over fifty millions of dollars. The so-called citrus fruit belt extends from San Diego to Tehama county, embracing an area of about 1,500,000 acres. Within this limit may be found nearly all the 70,000 acres of orange trees now under culture. Riverside has gained a world-wide fame as the home of the navel orange, and it still leads all other sections in the volume of production. Here the orange industry may be seen in its best and happiest estate. At one elevated point near that town I saw spread out before my eyes not less than 30,000 acres of this delectable fruit, or nearly one-half the total orange acreage of California. One company of Riverside growers alone has under its management 2,800 acres of citrus fruits, chiefly oranges, and its shipments of oranges and lemons last year reached a total of over 1,200 car loads. Other centers of the orange belt are Redlands, Pomona, Ontario, Covina, Duarte and Monrovia, each of which has its own packing houses and its local associations of growers.

But while I am in the line of statistics let me give a few more figures which will convey some idea of the dimensions of the citrus fruit industry in California. According to a table compiled by the "California Fruit Grower," the output for the past four years was as follows:

| Season. | Carloads. | Boxes. |
|---|---|---|
| 1901-2 | 19,180 | 6,904,800 |
| 1902-3 | 23,871 | 8,593,560 |
| 1903-4 | 29,399 | 10,480,488 |
| 1904-5 | 31,422 | 11,105,364 |

The citrus fruit crop for the present year is variously estimated at from 24,000 to 35,000 car loads. This crop brings to the growers a yearly revenue of from $15,000,000 to $18,000,000, an amount nearly equal to the gold output of the state which, in 1904 was [illegible] 600. In all probability the time will soon come when the gold minted from the sunshine of California will exceed that dug out of its mines, for there is good reason for the belief that when the Panama Canal is completed and better and cheaper railroad transportation is afforded to the east, the citrus fruit business will enter upon a new and far more prosperous era of existence. The orange has the inestimable advantage in its favor of a more limited area of production than any other staple fruit, while the popular demand for it increases with the years.

The system of irrigation in vogue among the citrus fruit growers might be made the subject of an interesting chapter by itself. For in southern California where for from six to eight months not a drop of rain falls, it is true in a very literal sense that "water is life" and it must be had at any cost. Fortunately, it is not difficult to tap a water vein almost anywhere in the orange belt with artesian wells, or to find an ample supply for storage purposes in the high mountain ranges threading the country, so that while a vast amount of money in the total has been expended in the development of an irrigation system, the cost per acre to the grower is not a burdensome tax. In the most favorable districts irrigation costs about $5 per acre. In the process of watering the orchards two systems are adopted, the furrow and the basin. The former, which is the more common, consists in plowing furrows between the rows of trees down which the water, brought to the orchard in pipes or in a canal, is allowed to flow gently and gradually until the ground is thoroughly saturated. A later and what is believed by many to be a better method is the basin system. This consists in hollowing out around each tree a basin equal in area to the spread of the branches. Into each of these basins the water is made to flow until all have been filled and the soil will absorb no more. Care is taken that the water does not come in contact with the trunks of the trees, which would result in grave injury. This process is repeated from two to six times during the rainless season, the applications of water varying according to the duration of the dry period, the location and nature of the soil. It is an old saying among growers that "the orange tree must have its feet dry"; it loves the sunshine with a never ending love, and will flourish and yield its sweetest fruit under conditions where many other tree growths would wither away and perish.

To a student of economics nothing in the orange industry is so interesting as the business system under which the bulk of the product is marketed. An organization of shippers, known as the Citrus Union, handles about 20 per cent of the product on a commission basis; but more than 50 per cent goes through the hands of the Southern California Fruit Exchange, an association composed wholly of orange growers, directed solely

What Sulphur Does

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and, mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health; sulphur acts directly on the liver, and excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and can not compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins, while experimenting with sulphur remedies, soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep-seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article and sold by druggists and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles and especially in all forms of skin diseases as this remedy."

At any rate people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers" will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers, a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

by them, and working on a strictly mutual and co-operative foundation. The exchange has its headquarters in Los Angeles, with a central board of directors made up of representatives from the 75 or more local exchanges scattered throughout the citrus belt. Through this central board, acting in co-operation with the boards of the locals, the industry in almost every phase is supervised and directed to the end of eliminating the middle man, economizing in the cost of packing and marketing, controlling the volume and time of output, and turning back into the hands of the producer the total income from his crop, minus only the actual expense of handling and transportation. The exchange represents in combination an amount of capital, a volume of business and a sum of individual and collective influence which, under intelligent and experienced direction, are sufficient to carry great weight in the market places and command the respectful attention, if not the ready compliance, of the railroad corporations. Both in theory and practice, it furnishes a striking illustration of the advantages and benefits of the co-operative principle applied to a great industry.

For reasons too numerous to mention here, orange growing in southern California has attracted to itself an unusual number of men of high intelligence and a progressive and enterprising spirit. Evidences of this appear in the enthusiastic interest displayed in the growers themselves in the purely scientific phases of orange culture, in the generous support they give to societies devoted to horticultural study and research, and in their readiness to seize upon and utilize in their business to the utmost the latest results of these scientific inquiries. By these means such problems as present themselves in the selection of proper soils, in the best and most economic methods of fertilization, in the propagation of new and improved fruit stock, and in the warfare against insect pests, are met and solved in an effective and, in most cases, a highly successful manner. In the last named field of effort, the fight with injurious insects, the California fruit growers lead the world. Acting apparently on the suggestion conveyed in the familiar couplet about the little fleas which "have smaller fleas to bite 'em," they have searched out the insect enemies of their most formidable insect pests, and set the bugs to fighting each other, Kilkenny fashion, so effectively that their fruit orchards have been left measurably at peace and comparatively free from such former scourges as the San Jose scale, the mealy bug, the red spider, the cottony cushion scale and other predatory creatures of this ilk, some of whom became so formidable that they threatened the virtual extinction of the fruit industry. In its search for the parasitic enemies of these pests, whose work should keep the balance of nature even, the California Horticultural Society sent its agents to China, Japan, Australia and South Africa, where they captured and brought back colonies of microscopic creatures, whose scientific names are enough in themselves to drive any plain American bug into nervous prostration. Thus the San Jose scale, formerly one of the most dreaded enemies of the fruit grower, found itself face to face one day a few years ago with the aphelinus fuscipennis, and while it did not capitulate on the spot, it began a fight against such odds that to-day the San Jose scale has lost its terrors for the California orchardist. One tiny insect, rejoicing in the name of the Australian ladybird, was imported from the land of the Southern Cross, and set to work upon the cottony cushion scale with such effect that this pest has also been practically eliminated from the field. Did space permit, many interesting, if not thrilling, details might be given of these battles of the bugs in California, in which the fruit growing interests have been benefited to the extent of millions of dollars. It is a struggle in which many of the serried foes of the orchard have met their Waterloos and Appomattoxes, but new scourges are continually appearing, and the warfare, like that against sin, must be waged continually.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Here is an extremely well-written letter, and as the sender appears quite young, it was no doubt dictated to an older hand: Velda Zinc, Peru, Neb.: "I came to this country on Thanksgiving day; anyhow, the principal words I heard that evening were expressions of thanksgiving. Everybody laughed and kissed each other, and me, too, though I did not care for anything but my blankets and supper. My aunt, who seemed to be there to do things for mother and me, told about the Advance Society work. In those days all the letters that came were read at my mother's bedside; they would read them and laugh and cry as they did when I came to them. My aunt fixed up a card, put it in a tiny envelope all tied with blue ribbon, and sent it to Sunday-school. They said it was my name for the cradle roll. The head lady said I was only three days old. I wonder how I could be on a cradle roll, when my bed was a clothes basket? My aunt told me all babies didn't have beds, food, gifts, blankets, and all towns didn't have cradle rolls. But she told me about your friend who is in a far-off country, working for such things; that she left her own home, bed and blankets to teach how to love. She said the Advance Society is helping her and a lame boy who has no home. I send you a little from my warm basket, for I am so thankful to know you—aunt says you love little folks—and thankful I was sent to a Christian home, and that I may sign myself your little friend." (From Velda's warm blankets came a dollar, which I shall divide between Charlie and Drusie. What a blessing it would be for orphans and missionaries, if people began helping them while still on the cradle roll! And what a blessing it would be for the giver! Here is a letter from another young person, not quite so young as Velda. The letter is printed by her own hands, and looks very much like some of my first manuscripts): Helena Gary, Moscow Mills, Mo.: "I send 25 cents for Drusie and 25 cents for Charlie. I am a little girl 7 years old. I became a Christian when 7 years old. I like to read the Av. S. letters. How is Felix?" (To judge by his yowling, he is hungry just at present, but it may not be; sometimes I think he doesn't know what he wants; he only knows that he wants.)

Mrs. J. R. Goodwin, Abilene, Kan.: "I inclose $5.10; the ten cents were given for Charlie's fund by my Sunday-school pupils, Fred Burke and Warren Reese. The $5 is my birthday gift to Drusie and Charlie. God bless them both; may Charlie get enough funds for his education is my prayer. I am very much interested in those two persons; so I am in 'The Bronze Vase.' I am glad they found the last chapter of 'The Woodneys.'" Charlie, Orphan Home, St. Louis: "I am in good health now. Our new matron is in bed, sick. The last few days have been very pleasant. Don't think that I am tired of receiving letters from you. One is welcome at any time. I am expecting a letter from Bessie" (his sister). "I am going to school every day. I am sorry your aunt died" (Mrs. Willmott, of Kansas City). "I hope your mother returned safely. How is Felix getting along? I expect he is all right as that is his nature." (When Charlie visited our home he became well acquainted with Felix, hence speaks from intimate knowledge. I am glad to print his testimonial.)

Here is a letter from Plattsburg, and although I lived in that town most of my life, and nearly everybody there knows me, nevertheless the letter contains $10 for our work; $5 from Mrs. Nan Porter for Charlie's education, and the other $5 from Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Shaver, "to be used," they say, "as your judgment dictates," and it dictates an equal division between Charlie and Drusie. Of course nobody in Plattsburg belongs to the Av. S., or ever has—at least long enough to get on the Honor List. But in spite of their knowing me so well, somebody there has always contributed to our work! Mr. Shaver requests me to tell "the real truth about the Arkansas climate and razorback hogs." The only acquaintance I have with the razorback hogs is the sausage we buy from the shop. The price of the sausage sticks so sharply that I am quite sure it must be made of razorbacks. As for the climate, I am on hardly better speaking terms. The fact is we have had very little Arkansas climate since we moved here. When it is blowing a mile a minute, the natives say, "This is from Kansas." When it begins to snow they say, "This is from Missouri." When the water bucket freezes hard in the kitchen, they say, "It's awful up in Iowa and Ohio, now!" If the other states would keep their weather at home I'm confident it would be glorious here all the time. Earl R. Brown, Medaryville, Ind.: "You may think it long since you heard from me. I have had so many first weeks that I never got to the other weeks. But at last I have finished my third quarter." Dorothy Brown, same address: "I read the letters and 'The Bronze Vase.' My brother and I are in the ninth grade and my sister in the fourth." (And all three send their Av. S. reports in the same envelope. That is a branch of the Av. S worth having!) "There are only 11 pupils at our school. I was 11, Feb. 7. Grandma gave me a dime and a penny, and grandpa gave me a dime. I send 11 cents for Drusie and Charlie, not much, but I will try to send more the next time." (It is as much as you are! I think to give away more than half of your birthday present is fine.)

Bertha Beesley, St. Clair, Mo.: "As they have begun to accuse me of that dreadful thing of getting married, I think I'll have to disown the statement by writing a letter. I'm not married, but am teaching school. Oh, yes! To-day is your birthday, isn't it? Last Thursday night quite a number watched the eclipse of the moon. Several of us were just learning to skate, and we passed the early part of the evening on the ice. You can guess the falls we got and the laughter we provoked! Later, we went home to warm and watch the eclipse. It looked like the coming of a dire calamity, as the light of the moon grew dimmer, and the snow-covered hills showed so spectral-like. We had a joke about a popular young man of the community who was to leave the next morning. We said the moon was hiding her face for very grief. Yours in the work." A Grayson, Mo., girl: "And this (Feb. 11) is your birthday! Of course, being a man, you are not ashamed to tell how old you are." (I am proud of 36.) "Well, that is the best way, after all. Last year on my birthday my pupils came to my chair and wanted to know how old I was, so they could give me a whipping. I said, "Girls, I will tell you how old I am, but if you give me that many licks I won't be able to teach this afternoon." They sighed and said, "Maybe not, well, we will shake hands with you." (But did you tell them how old you are? Or was that the kindergarten-way of distracting their minds?) "I trust God may permit Charlie and Drusie to do a great work in helping spread the kingdom. I send a dollar for each. May the Av. S. work continue of helping young people form a habit of reading good books. Don't publish my name." A. Hughes, Mexico, Mo.: "I have long delayed writing relative to little orphan Charlie. As you know, Charlie, and a two-year-younger sister, Bessie, were left to me by will of their dying mother, while I was hovering between life and death—the effects of a gunshot wound. As soon as I could travel on crutches, I took the boy to Bethany Hospital, Kansas City, Kan., and after the best advice from eminent surgeons and physicians, had his leg amputated. The medical men said it was either that or an early death. They said he would become stout, and it has so proven. Adverse circumstances followed me here, owing, I think, largely to ill health; but I am now improved in health and business matters." (Mr. Hughes is District Deputy of the Modern Woodmen of America.) "I am going to try to help in the education fund, giving something toward it year by year, in my giving of tithes for the Master. Charlie deserves a chance to develop what is in him. The spirit of the Av. S., in taking interest in this, one of God's little ones, is born of a kind and Christian purpose." Bessie Tracy Ryman, Liberty, Mo.: "Well, this is Feb. 11, and I suppose you are about ready for the cake and lemon ice." (This is over in March, but I am still ready for them.) "We are quite lonely to-day. Mr. Ryman has gone to visit his father and mother, but I was afraid to go and take the baby. You know something about Missouri weather; we can't trust it." (I can trust it to come down here about once a week. I wish we had a custom house on the state line and could make it pay duty. Arkansas would go right ahead and get rich without developing these mines and valuable veins of ore that are as thick as hops about Bentonville.) "I am so glad we visited you in Plattsburg before you moved. I know you enjoy the climate in Arkansas." (Yes, I wonder Noah was ever willing to leave it.) "I wish the inclosed for Charlie were many times the amount." (Mrs. Ryman sends a dollar; it was with her that Charlie spent a month of his vacation last summer. I have a letter from Mrs. F. A. Potts, Chattanooga, Tenn., saying that she and her husband have laid by $10 for Charlie's education fund. She offers to send it at once, but says it is drawing interest where it is—interest for Charlie. So I have written her to keep it for us. You will all remember that it is there for our use. But in making reports I can announce only the money that has been sent to me, and which I have seen and deposited. We have now on hands $54.31 on Charlie's Education Fund. Our greatest expense will be boarding him, while he is attending some business college.)

Drusie R. Malott, South Chih-li Mission, Tai Ming-fu, North China: "There is so much here to be done, and I am kept so very busy, that I do not realize how time passes. It is much upon my heart to keep in touch with those who are so faithfully praying and sending offerings, but if you were here, you would realize how the many things crowd upon one—things that must be done right at the time. If sometimes my letters seem far apart, I hope the dear ones of the Advance Society will understand how it is, and I trust they will continue faithful in prayer for 'me and mine'—that includes friends and loved ones, our missionaries and these Chinese. We have many faithful 'helpers in prayer' in the homeland, who have heard of us only through the papers. It is wonderful how the Lord works. We had a blessed, happy Christmas and a happy New Year. Christmas evening we gathered at the home of our director, and had a good old-fashioned 'sing.' In the afternoon the missionaries' children had a little program in the school room. On the last night of the old year we had our usual 'watch meeting' from 10 till after midnight. That was a precious meeting, full of praise and song and earnest prayer. A few minutes before midnight we closed the old year by partaking of the bread, and welcomed the new year by partaking of the wine. It was a meeting never to be forgotten. A company of missionaries have just held a series of big meetings, going the rounds of our stations. At Wei Hsien, 15 men, at an after-meeting at midnight, were praying out aloud at the same time, seemingly forgetful of the presence of others. Here at Tai Ming-fu I beheld a sight I never saw before (but, bless God, I expect to see greater things soon). It was worth a trip to China just to see the beaming faces of 16 of the boys from our boys' school, as they obeyed their Jesus in baptism. Some of the youngest did not seem more than 8 or 10, but the way they spoke of their Savior would have put some of the gray-haired Christians of the homeland to shame. It was inspiring to hear each one join in the singing as he stood in the water just before being baptized. One dear little fellow was so happy that he started the song again after it had been sung once, and we had to sing it again, as he stood in the water with Brother Troxel. And when Brother Troxel prayed for him as he was raised from the water—as he did for each one—the boy's two hearty 'amens' were so earnest that some of us could not keep back the tears, though there was a shout of joy and praise in my soul that would not stay back. There is quite a large 'family' here. Two new parties of missionaries came this winter, including nine grown people and five children. Their zeal and joy is an inspiration. It seems marvelous what the Lord has done when I reflect that every one of our 1904 band is here in active service. Yet we cry for more laborers. My friend, please do not be burdened, or take it too much to heart, if the Av. S. members do not respond with offerings. Leave it with God. Trust him. I do. The Lord can raise up helpers and send funds from places of which we never dream. Do not try but pray and trust. With greetings to each of the members of the Advance Society, by his grace I shall let you hear from me more frequently." (Drusie does not catch exactly my point of view, or my contention. Trust God? Of course I do! I know God will accomplishe his purposes; I know his Gospel will extend to the uttermost parts of the earth. I know Drusie or somebody else will be upheld in the work. But I want the Av. S. to help for their own sakes. I never give a penny for missions without gladness. I want my readers to be happy in this giving. There is no happiness under heaven to compare with that of helping to spread the story of Christ, and helping to support his helpless ones. Those who do not love to give for such causes, do not know true happiness. And I want you all to share this happiness which passes the understanding of the world. In two weeks we will print some letters from some of our oldest members: Melvin Ledden—it has been so long since we heard from him!—and Donnie Swift, Flossie Davis, Ruth Sampsel, and Gerald Dever's mother; the Honor List will also appear. Some of the new reports are splendid.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

We are all dreaming, hoping, and praying for a great Centennial celebration, but it is men like R. H. Newton inspiring each department of our local churches to undertake and do some definite work who will make it great.

An Actual Propagandist.

BY R. H. NEWTON.

The clear and confident notes of the bugle call of the centennial propaganda are of the sort to inspire to greater effort the followers of the Master. What more splendid aims, what more pleasing to our Lord and worthy his followers than the salvation of a million and a quarter of precious souls, and the doubling of our offerings to all departments of the Lord's service by 1909? How much it means, not only to those saved, but those that shall have part in the saving.

It appeals to me strongly on account of its definiteness. There is nothing like having a mark to shoot at. But the victory will be gained only through the local church and the individual Disciple. Let each adopt the watchword and bend all effort to its fulfillment.

The Normal church desires to do its full share in the four years' campaign. Our aim is to double our local membership and the efficiency of every department of the church work. Our official board recently voted to make an earnest effort to become a living link church before 1909. These are the things for which we are praying, planning and working.

One thing indispensable in enlisting and arousing the membership is the religious journal. So we are with you in the work for 100,000 subscribers and readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I am glad to say more of our people are reading our church papers this year than ever before, and it helps wonderfully. They talk about the inspiring reports. Continue to sound out the watchword and call to mighty achievement until we forget our petty differences over methods in the busy and more important work of saving souls.

Normal, Ill.

Appreciative Constituents.

Enclosed find $2 for the "best Evangelist" on earth.—Etta Comstock, Olivia, Minn.

I would not be without this paper, and while I live you can depend upon my taking it.—E. H. Hill, Des Moines, Iowa.

Hope to send more names soon. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is fine—better and better.—Jewell Howard, Amarillo, Texas.

Continue THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. It is getting better every year. May it long continue doing good.—D. A. Titus, Pueblo, Col.

It is the best religious paper I ever read, and it gets better all the time. We enjoy reading it so much we can not do without it, and expect to take it as long as we live. —Harriet Jacobus, Lake Charles, La.

I am moving away from many old friends, but I want one of the best of them, THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, to follow me to my new home.—Melvin Hobbs, Smith Center, Kan.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is a great paper. May it continue to grow in influence and power. Keep the standard high. Do not begin to cater to the narrowed element.—John P. Sala, Elyria, O.

Allow me to tell you we have been readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST (the best paper we ever read) for nearly 24 years. We began soon after the combination of the two papers, and I do not want to miss a number.—F. A. Hanson, Eureka, Ill.

Sometimes I feel I can not afford to take your paper, but then I can not possibly do without it. I read it through entirely. I love the spirit it always manifests, and at all times and under all circumstances.—Mrs. A. Thomas, Red Oak, Iowa.

I am unable to earn wages any more, except to do mending for the neighbors. I so earned the money I am sending for THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, whose pages are a great consolation to me, especially since I have become a shut-in.—Mrs. Marion Rentfro, San Jose, Cal.

Enclosed find $1.50 for THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, which I think is one of the best papers published in the United States. I get more good information out of it than all other papers combined. I have been taking it for the last 30 or 35 years, and it is much better now than ever before.—M. Owsley, Bloomfield, Iowa.

I never miss an opportunity to speak a word for your admirable journal, whose spirit of catholicity is most heartening in these days of stress and storm. Be sure I shall do all in my power to place such literature in the hands of our people.—W. C. Macdougall, St. Thomas, Ont.

Enclosed find $1.50 for THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I admire its western news service. It tells what we are doing as a people everywhere. I love its broad spirit. God bless your paper, and may its help for the conversion of the world be long continued.—Henry A. Blake, Providence, R. I.

I have been a constant reader of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST since 1865. It grows better as it grows older. I pray the Lord will spare your life for many years and that you may see even richer fruit of your labors in the near future than you have in the past.—J. A. Morsman, Napa, Cal.

Have read THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST so long I hardly know how I could keep house without it, now as I am closing my long life. I will be 89 next August. I believe my life has been made better and more happy by reading THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for so many years.—A. Teachout, Cleveland, O.

We pastors owe it to the cause to circulate such papers as THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Especially it this true at this praticular time of "our movement." The papers can do much to save us from sectarianism. The Lord bless and enlarge THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.—D. W. Moore, Springfield, Mo.

I have just finished reading THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I want to thank you for your part in the production of this splendid number. The disciples of the Gentle One ought to be gentle, even if they conduct a religious journal; and I have always found the spirit of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to be as sweet as the dew of Hermon. You certainly have the right outlook in your attitude toward federation. The Disciples have everything to lose and nothing to gain by a spirit of aloofness. If we have the truth we shall lose nothing of that truth's transcendent glory by giving it to the world. Truth has never done else than gained when placed in the limelight and studied without bias and passion. Our plea is too splendid to be hidden under a bushel of sectarian narrowness. If we can get it to where it is free from the stigma of being a sect shibboleth with a consequent suspicion that such a condition always will arouse in the mind of the sincere of another fellowship, we can cry with Monte Cristo, "The world is ours!" Let me again express my pleasure in your journal and your part in it.—Frank Emerson Janes, Fremont, Neb.

Sticks to the Text.

There are papers and papers in our common brotherhood, as well as all kinds of brethren in our churches. I find a pretty sure way to grade up one's religious views and to measure the spirit of the man in him by the religious journal he delights in. I have often in the last ten years read your poem, "What We Stand For," and in carefully reading THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST I find you do "stick close to the text." Again, "In faith, unity; in opinions and methods, liberty; in all things, charity." While others of our better papers live in a large measure up to this wise and workable motto, I feel safe in saying you "more than they all." The unity of the spirit must work itself out in a body and be seen in men. Much of our preaching and journalism would not tend to hasten Scriptural unity. Some who have such cut and dried plans for Christian union will never live to see it on their plans. I am most heartily interested in having such a paper in every home in Christendom. Let us have 100,000 of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELISTS before our centennial, and may every other good paper realize its expectations in enlarged circulation for the sake of the church.

Current Events

The Moral Conquest of China.

President James, of the University of Illinois, proposes a conquest of China by the force of moral and intellectual reform, and has sent to President Roosevelt a communication outlining his plan. Assuming that China in her present condition contains some elements of serious danger to the civilization of America and Europe, he asserts that military force is not the most potent instrument for combating the yellow peril. There is reason to believe, or at least to suspect, that China is on the verge of another anti-foreign outbreak. The suppression of this by force of arms is not the best way of meeting the emergency. There should be a moral instead of a naval demonstration. There should be a display of sympathy with the aspirations of the more intelligent Chinese. President James suggests that an American educational commission shall be sent to China to study the intellectual conditions there and to invite Chinese students to come to the United States. The suggestions of President James are wise and timely. Corporal punishment may be necessary for a bad boy, but it is not the only thing necessary. Physical force may be needed to protect the life and property of American citizens, but this is by no means solving the Chinese problem. Suppression is easier than education. This ought we to have done and not to have left the other undone.

Ohio Reforms.

The Ohio legislature is carrying on a campaign of reform with great vigor and energy. One element of it is the enactment of a bill fixing a maximum rate of 2 cents a mile for all the railroads in the state. This bill has become a law. One effect of it is the discontinuance of the clergy half-fare privilege in that state. This reduction from 3 cents to 2 cents a mile is, we believe, a timely action. The 2-cent rate has already been in operation on most of the trunk lines, and it has been shown that the roads can afford it. In densely populated states like Ohio, where there is much local traffic, the roads can prosper on that rate. The New York Central has always been a 2-cent-a-mile road. Its competitors have met its rate, on both local and through business, and they have all prospered. The amount of business transacted by the railroads has increased almost beyond belief in the last ten years. The railroads give this as a reason for inadequate equipment and accommodations, and it is, within limits, a good excuse. But it is also a reason for the reduction of transportation charges.

Another item in the Ohio reform movement is the raising of saloon licenses from $350 to $1,000. We need scarcely repeat what we have so often said, that we do not consider any conceivable elevation of the license fee as an adequate handling of the liquor problem. Nevertheless, a high license is better than a low one. The higher the better. It is estimated that this addition of $650 to the license fee will put 6,000 saloons out of business. In some cases, this will only mean a transfer of patronage to those whose proprietors feel able to pay the license fee. But it also means that, with greater concentration of the business, it will be easier to enforce the liquor laws and that a large proportion of the lower and more dangerous dives will be put out of business. For this half loaf we should be grateful.

Leasing Public Land.

Certain bills have been introduced into Congress to authorize the leasing of public land for periods of five years for grazing. In the old days there was more public land than everybody could use, and there was no trouble about it. Then came a period when, especially in the more desirable regions, there was not enough free range to satisfy all demands, and there arose bloody struggles to get and keep possession of what none of the claimants had any legal right to. More particularly did the cattle men and the sheep men clash, for wherever sheep have grazed cattle refuse to go. The cattle men have, therefore, had increasing difficulty in finding free range for their stock. As the era of disorder has gradually passed, there is less fighting for the range than formerly. The stock men in the semi-arid regions now try, in some legal way, to control the water supply of a given district, knowing well enough that control of the water means monopoly of the surrounding land. Thus, in many cases, large bodies of public land, in some cases hundreds of square miles, are occupied and monopolized by ranch men, who effectually exclude settlers and pay nothing for the privileges which they enjoy. The proposition now before Congress is that stock men be permitted to lease public land which is unsuitable for agriculture, at an annual rental of 1 to 6 cents per acre. A good deal is being said against this proposal on the ground that it tends to exclude settlers and to build up great private domains. There are two sides to that question. It must be admitted, in the first place, that no man can say with assurance of infallibility that any given land is "unsuitable for agriculture." The development of methods of dry farming has done much and may do more to turn grazing land into farm land, and facilities for irrigation are sometimes discovered in unexpected places. On the other hand, homesteaders are already practically excluded from vast areas which are nominally open for homestead entry. The enactment of the proposed legislation will not make them any less accessible than they are at present. The question really at issue is whether or not the actual occupants of these great tracts of public land shall pay for it. Certainly it is better to lease than to sell at a low rate vast areas which may hereafter become valuable.

Mr. Hamilton's Charges.

Mr. Andrew Hamilton, former disbursing agent for the New York Life, has been much criticised by the trustees of that company, as well as by the public, for the part which he took in the illegitimate use of the funds of the company, especially in connection with campaign contributions. Last week before the Armstrong committee of the New York legislature Mr. Hamilton broke loose with a stirring denunciation of his former colleagues in the New York Life. He asserted that they had been aware of all that he had done and had uttered no word of protest until he was under fire; that he had disbursed no money without their knowledge and approval, and that, if any funds had been improperly used, they were not only equally guilty with him for such misuse, but were also guilty of meanly and treacherously attempting to make a scapegoat of one who was no more responsible for the alleged abuses than themselves. The denials which were at once entered by the trustees who heard Mr. Hamilton's words—and many of them were present when he spoke—were very emphatic in language, but somewhat vague and general in content.

Humane Murder.

Not many weeks ago we commented on the opinion of an eminent non-medical gentleman that the law ought to permit taking the life of persons incurably and painfully afflicted. This suggestion has now been put in more definite shape by the introduction into the Iowa legislature of a measure entitled, "a bill for an act requiring physicians to take human life." The author of the bill is Dr. R. H. Gregory, a member of the house. The bill is carefully drawn and provides that the hopelessly insane and idiotic, persons suffering from painful and incurable disease, and children born hideously deformed or mentally deficient shall be put to death by anesthetic. In every case, the county coroner and three physicians shall agree as to the hopeless character of the case, the nearest of kin to the subject shall consent, and in the case of persons over ten years of age and of sound mind, the action shall be taken only upon the initiatory request of the subject himself. The practice of medical murder in such cases is already general but secret, says the author of the bill, and scarcely a day passes in any great hospital without the quiet putting away of some hopeless and incurable sufferer by the most eminent physicians and surgeons who risk a charge of murder for the sake of giving the only possible relief to a patient. He reminds us, too, that injured animals are killed for humane reasons. There are two objections. The first is that there are some values in human life which abide even in spite of pain and hopeless incapacity for work. The second is that even three doctors and a county coroner may sometimes be unanimously mistaken as to the incurability of a case.

Christian Union: A Historical Study.

II. Post-Apostolic Age.

2. Rise of the "Catholic" Church.

We have spoken of the change in doctrine and polity which occurred during the second century. But there was another change, which, in its far-reaching consequences, was not less important than that which pertained to the government of the church. It was the introduction of the idea and function of the priesthood into the Christian ministry. This idea, suggested it may be by the custom of heathen religions, was supported by examples from the Jewish religion with which Christianity was supposed to have a close affinity. This idea naturally tended to exalt the ministry, and to introduce for the first time the distinction between the "clergy" and the "laity." The idea spread rapidly, increased the power of the bishops and prepared the way for the rise of the "Catholic" church.

Professor Fisher says: "The church stood forth after the middle of the second century as a distinct body. It claimed to be, in opposition to heretical and schismatical parties, the 'Catholic' church. Membership in this visible church was believed to be necessary to salvation. Within the church, and not beyond it, the Holy Spirit had his abode. The unity of the church was secured and cemented by the episcopate—by the bishops viewed as the successors to the apostles. The episcopate, like the apostolate, in which Peter was the center of unity, was a unit. This idea is developed and insisted on by Cyprian, who was involved in hard contests with dissenting setcs."*

It is pertinent to remark, in this connection, that the overture of union based on the "historic episcopate," which was received from the Protestant Episcopal Church, a few years ago, and acted upon by one of our national conventions, presented a theory of union which does not reach any further back in the history of the church than the second century. It is clear that the union which existed in the apostolic age was not "secured and cemented by the Episcopate," but, as we have found in these studies, was secured by faith in, and allegiance to, the Lord Jesus, and was cemented by the mutual love of the members. Being united to Christ by their mutual faith, they found themselves united by a common life and the bond of mutual love. In that age there was "one faith," but there was no attempt at uniformity of opinions and theological deductions, through the formation of an authoritative doctrinal creed. The authority of Christ had not yielded to ecclesiastical authority, and the freedom which these early disciples had in Christ had not been surrendered for the sake of conformity to doctrinal standards and for the enhancement of the power of the bishops. Any union, therefore, based on the authority of bishops, considered as successors to the apostles, who have had no successors, and could not have, in their apostolic office, does not go back far enough, and does not rest upon the foundation on which Jesus said he would build his Church. It is, therefore, an impossible basis of union which our Episcopal brethren present, and, while we honor their zeal for the unity of Christ's church, we never expect to see it accomplished on the basis which they propose, nor on any basis of ecclesiastical authority.

But there are sincere friends of Christian union, who long to see the divisions in the church of Christ healed and who, while repudiating the idea of effecting such a union on the basis of ecclesiastical authority, cling to the view that there must be the acceptance of a common doctrinal creed in order to a real Christian union. Perhaps no one would venture to say that any such creed now in existence would serve as a basis on which all Christians could unite, but they are not without hope that such a creed can be formed. Nor can they see how we are going to keep heretics out of the church without such a doctrinal statement. We might ask whether such statements have served the purpose of keeping heresies and heretics out of the church—or whether they have not rather had the effect of exciting unprofitable speculations, and producing schisms in the body of Christ. On this point what lesson does the post-apostolic age of the church teach us?

Does not the student of church history recall the great doctrinal controversies which raged in that period? There was the Arian controversy, relating to the divinity of Christ, to settle which the Council of Nice was called; and following that there was the discussion about the numerical unity, or the identity of the three persons of the Trinity as to substance; the relation of the divine to the human nature of Jesus, concerning which one party was condemned as heretics; whether Christ really had two natures or only one, as the Monophysites contended; then there was the "Homoousian" and the "Homoiousian" views, the former that the Son is of the same essence as the Father, the latter that he is of like essence, etc., etc., to the end of the long and weary chapter. While the Greeks were thus philosophizing about the doctrine of the person of Christ, the Romans were equally busy speculating about the doctrine of sin. As one follows these heated discussions, notes the bitter feelings, the excommunications, the exiles and the schisms growing out of such controversies over purely speculative questions which do not belong to the substance of the faith, he can but marvel that those who professed to be followers of Jesus could have departed so far from the simplicity of his teaching and the meekness and gentleness of his spirit in so short a period of time.

Such was the result of an effort to secure uniformity of theological opinions, by the formulation of doctrinal statements which were to be binding on the consciences of all within the Church. "Now, these things were our examples to the intent we should not lust after evil things, as they also lusted"—"evil," not in intention but in their results.

We leave the study of the post-apostolic age, which we have looked into only for its lessons on the subject of Christian union, with these conclusions:

1. Distinguishing, as we must, between that natural and legitimate development in thought and adaptation to existing conditions, and a departure from essential and abiding principles, the church of the post-apostolic age made a grievous mistake in forsaking the simplicity of the Gospel, both as relates to doctrine and to polity.

2. The plan of maintaining unity in the church by increase of ecclesiastical authority, or the effort to compel doctrinal uniformity by the formulation of doctrinal creeds, was a departure from Christ's method and proved a failure.

Recruiting An Army of Bible Students.

It was a happy thought to devote the month of April to a widespread movement throughout the brotherhood to bring all the church members into the Bible schools and to gather in a vast army of unrecruited children as well, thus doubling as nearly as possible the present attendance. The function of teaching in the church is constantly assuming greater importance in the minds of thoughtful people. It is a lamentable fact that the mass of church members are so ignorant of the Bible. It is impossible for any religious body to achieve any great and lasting good in the world whose members are not Bible students. This is especially true of a religious body that has for its aim the carrying out of a religious reformation. All reformations succeed in proportion as they bring religious faith and practice to the test of God's will as revealed in the Scriptures. It is not enough that the originators of such a reformation should have been intelligent in the Scriptures; those who are to carry on the work they inaugurated must be diligent students of the Word of God, also, or the work of reformation will become one of *de*formation.

We have felt for some time that the revival most needed now, and one that underlies other needed revivals, is a widespread revival of Bible study. But that revival, we are now constrained to believe, must come through the Sunday or Bible school, which has more and more become the teaching function of the church. In order, however, that this Bible study be accomplished satisfactorily two things are absolutely essential, and we understand that this concerted Bible school movement through the month of April, which we trust will be only the beginning of a continuous and permanent rally of forces in that department, has these two objects in view, namely: (1) Increasing the attendance by bringing the church membership, as far as possible, into the Sunday-school or under its regime of study, and gathering in a larger number of those who are without the church, especially the children; and, (2) raising the standard of efficiency in the teaching force.

The need of the first of these requirements is obvious. The great bulk of our church membership is without any regular and systematic study of the Bible. How is it possible that they grow in grace and in the knowledge of Jesus Christ without such study? How can we hope that our churches and membership will discharge their obligations in mission work, in education and benevolence, and meet their responsibilities as a religious body in connection with the other religious forces of the nations and the world, in extending the kingdom of God over all the departments of life—domestic, social, industrial and governmental—without that deeper spiritual life and soul culture that comes from an intimate and devout study of the Bible? They are not likely to have such knowledge apart from their connection with the Bible school.

And how can they have such instruction in the Bible school, even when they are there, unless the church give more attention to supplying qualified teachers in these schools? Here is a great obligation resting on the church which it has not hitherto properly realized. It will be a great gain if this concerted movement among the Bible school workers of the brotherhood shall succeed in impressing this obligation on the churches, and in pointing out some practical method or methods by which our Bible schools may become actual schools of the Bible in which, according to the most approved pedagogical principles, the Bible may be taught to young and old, Christian and non-Christian.

This task which we have roughly indicated—the gathering of our entire church membership and all the children accessible into the Bible schools, and then properly equipping these schools with competent and faithful teachers and the necessary apparatus—is fundamental to our future development along proper lines. We therefore congratulate our Sunday-school leaders in the various states on their plan to co-operate during the month of April to at least begin this great task. We bespeak the hearty co-operation of ministers and church officials, and we assume that of Bible school superintendents and teachers for this great concerted Bible school rally throughout the brotherhood. The Christian-Evangelist is glad to offer its columns and its influence to the furtherance of so worthy an enterprise.

The correspondence at the close of the Editor's address on "Federation," delivered at the Des Moines congress, is a valuable feature of the published pamphlet. In it important questions bearing on this subject are asked and answered, and this discussion is very timely just now. The pamphlet is published by the Christian Publishing Company.

What Ails Us?

Whence this commotion among our scribes? Why all this excitement and heated writing? What is it that stirs the minds and even the consciences of the brethren that they are sounding dismal notes of alarm? Is it because of the worldliness that infests our pews and the commercialism that has invaded many of our pulpits? Is it because of the low type of piety that prevails in our churches and the small attendance at our prayer-meetings, and the scarcity of grown-up church members in our Sunday-schools? Is it because more than half our churches are doing little or nothing for missions? Have the people come to understand at last the poverty of our colleges and become alarmed at our indifference to the cause of Christian education and grieved at the small salaries and hard work of our college men, while hundreds of our churches are languishing for educated and trained ministers? Have they caught a vision of what the Master meant when he said to his disciples, "Ye are the light of the world," and are stirred in their hearts because we are letting even the religious world have so little of the light that the Master wants us to reflect on the subject of Christian union, because of the lack of brotherly love, fraternity and closer co-operation?

No, indeed! "None of these things move us" to any considerable extent. It has come to our ears that the great Protestant bodies of this country, weary at last of sectarian divisions and strifes, and longing for a closer fellowship among Christians and a more united service for God, have submitted a basis for such co-operation, and have asked us to express ourselves on the desirability and feasibility of such a basis of closer fellowship in service. It is this that has alarmed so many of the brethren for the safety of the ark! This is why some of our papers are filled with indignant articles against the wily denominations for setting a "trap" for us, and against the brethren who see in this action of these religious bodies, the beginning of the fulfillment of our labors and prayers, and a great movement of the Spirit of God. And some of the leaders among us, intimidated by these outcries of partisan zeal or of false alarm, bemoan the fact that God has sent this test upon us to try us, instead of regretting and being humiliated by this sad revelation of our unfitness for leadership in a great forward movement of the people of God. Nothing would so befit the present situation as a season of humiliation, fasting and prayer. Great and merciful God, look in pity upon us; forgive our lack of vision and our unresponsiveness to thy divine call; lift us out of the ruts of conventionalism and traditionalism; fill us with thy Spirit, and lead us on to the fulfillment of thy gracious purposes concerning us!

Notes and Comments.

A brother writes: "Will you please give me a condensed statement of what church federation means?" It means an awakening conscience among Protestants concerning Christian union. It means a present effort to put to use all the unity that now exists among the churches in order to enhance the influence and effectiveness of the church and to promote a more perfect unity. It means the subordination of denominational interests to the general interests of the kingdom of God. It is just at this point that it provokes most opposition. Its aim is the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for unity. Its method is uniting, as far as we can now, in doing Christ's work as the best means of increasing our unity. Its principle is, freedom of action to all, free, voluntary service, and no surrender of conscience or conviction of duty.

It is a mistaken idea which some people have, that the chief thing about federation is for a committee representing the different churches to decide about planting a local church in some community. As a matter of fact such questions seldom arise, and when they do the reasons why they should arise will be very obvious, and the decision would ordinarily be unanimously endorsed. But in case any church could not see its way to act with the majority, it must act on its own responsibility. It is not bound except by the counsel of its sister churches. This occasionally happens, but does not destroy the co-operation in other respects. This is a local and very subordinate feature of the general aim and scope of church federation, which is intended to present to the world a united voice and united action on the great moral and social questions of the times, to give visible expression to existing unity, and to cultivate an increasing oneness till our Lord's prayer for unity be fulfilled.

A contemporary prints a business note addressed to the Christian Publishing Company by a subscriber to The Christian-Evangelist, ordering his paper stopped because of its position on federation. The contemporary says it waited to see if this communication appeared in our paper, and as it did not, it accommodatingly published it in its own columns. In the same paragraph it tells of a letter from one of its agents sending a list of subscribers for that paper because of its opposition to federation. That is a telling argument with our contemporary! It may be unfortunate for The Christian-Evangelist that it does not choose its position on public questions with reference to its bearing on its subscription list; but we would not exchange the reputation which The Christian-Evangelist has throughout the brotherhood by running its editorial policy independent of the counting room for all the financial gain which might have resulted from a time-serving policy. It remains to be seen, however, whether this great brotherhood will permit a paper to suffer in its subscription list because of its advocacy of what it believes to be truth and duty, regardless of popularity. At present there are no indications that our readers will forsake us for standing true to the original purpose of our reformatory movement.

Editor's Easy Chair.

On the south slope of a New Mexican arroyo, under the bluest of heavens, bathed in the warm rays of the sun, save as the branches of a pinus edulis serve to shade the eyes, on the day of the vernal equinox, the Easy Chair is located at this writing. The arroyo is dry at this season, but later on it will be carrying the melted snow and the rain from the mountains into the valley below in a mad torrent of haste. But now the soft, dry sand makes a comfortable seat, and a granite boulder excellent backing. "Round Top" lifts its graceful summit in front of us, while a huge cactus, with its yellow pods, stands 5 feet high and 6 feet in circumference hard by. White clouds float high in the blue empyrean and the soft wind sighs through the branches of the pinon and the cedar. Do not envy us this seclusion and quiet amid these romantic surroundings, for its duration is to be all too brief. Already we are thinking of time-tables, reservations on the sleeping cars and other necessary preparations for the homeward journey. So we are sure our readers will not begrudge us these tender caresses of sun and breeze, and this soothing and healing balm of nature, especially in view of the fact that we have recently been excommunicated by some of the ark-defenders, as not "of us"! Do these well-meaning but misguided scribes who assume the responsibility of deciding who are and who are not "of us," and who glibly pronounce sentence against the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for "surrendering our plea," stop to consider how many fond and sacred ties they are rudely severing in cutting us off from a holy cause that has commanded the love, labors and sacrifices of a lifetime, and from fellowships and associations dearer than life itself? The rays of the sun have grown so fierce that the "Easy Chair" companion has been placing some cedar boughs on the sunward side to cast a cooling shade. How like a woman! She does not believe the Easy Chair Editor is a very bad heretic!

We have received a great many letters of late from brethren all over the Union deprecating the spirit of controversy that has prevailed in some of our papers of late, especially the coarse and rude personal attacks, and expressing their hearty approval of our position on current questions. These brethren who have kindly encouraged us by their letters are, many of them, far more concerned about these attacks, and about this whole opposition to the next possible step in the direction of Christian union, than we are. We have seen these storms rise before and have heard the fierce thundering all around the horizon as if the day of doom had come for the cause we plead. Then we have seen the dark war clouds roll up their sulphurous folds and drift away, leaving the sun of peace shining from clear heavens. So it will be again, and the atmosphere will be all the clearer for the thunderstorm. Of course, while it lasts some timid souls will hide their heads in a feather bed to ward off the lightning, or put cotton in their ears so as not to hear the thunder; but the returning sunshine will restore even these to a normal condition. In the course of time the heretics who were exiled during the storm will receive the right hand of fellowship and be welcomed back to the fold. These spells are epidemic among us, and signify immaturity, just as children are subject to all manner of childhood diseases. When these diseases have "broken out" well the patient recovers. Some of the brethren have had a "fine breaking out," and we may now expect convalescence and ultimate recovery. By and by, when we all come to the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, to the estate of spiritual manhood, we shall not be subject to these panics and ebullitions of bad temper, nor be carried about by every wind of doctrine, but, being men in spiritual stature, shall quit ourselves like men.

The arroyo is becoming more shady, and the hills and mountains are wearing a softer tint. There is something very fascinating in these red granite mountain sides and these far-stretching, semi-arid plains. Once a man becomes inured to this life, the overdone civilization of the cities becomes irksome to him. In McClure's for March, Stewart Edward White, writing of this great southwestern region, tells of a young adventurous Englishman, who drifted to the far west and fell in with the cowboys, sharing their adventures and hardships for awhile. But, having fallen heir to a vast fortune in England, he returned to it. In a few years, however, he turned up in camp again with his old companions, and being questioned why he had left a fortune in England for the wild life of the southwest again, he replied:

> "They wanted me to canter between hedge rows—I who have ridden the desert where the sky over me and the plain under me were bigger than the islander's universe! They wanted me to oversee little farms—I who have watched the sun rising over half a world! Talk of your ten thou' a year and what they'll buy! You know, Harry, how it feels when a steer takes the slack of your rope and your pony sits back! Where in England can I buy that? You know the rising and the falling of days, and the boundless spaces where your heart grows big, and the thirst of the desert and the hunger of the trail, and a sun that shines and fills the sky, and a wind that blows fresh from the wide places! Where in parcelled, snug, green, tight little England could I buy that with ten thou'—aye, or an hundred times ten thou'? No, no, Harry, that fortune would cost me too dear. I have seen and done and been too much. I've come back to the Big Country, where the pay is poor, and the work is hard, and the comfort small; but where a man and his soul meet their Maker face to face."

We can quite understand it. We already feel the clutch which this land of mystery and sunshine, clear sky, pure air and ever-shifting tones of color is getting upon us, and we must hasten away.

One sees things very clearly in this transparent atmosphere, far away from the smoke of the cities—say St. Louis and Cincinnati! From this high altitude and seen through this crystalline air, recent events among us have a significance which might not be discerned from the center of the conflict. Be assured these things do not happen. They have a meaning and a purpose. As we have written to a number of brethren recently, responding to their kind letters, this question that has risen among us has come to try us, and that, too, in the weakest place which every religious movement in the history of the world sooner or later develops. How far have we drifted from the original aim and spirit of the fathers of this movement? No one knew this until this question of federated co-operation arose, and there came to us a proposal from the leading religious bodies of this country that we take the next possible step in the direction of Christian union. The weak place to which we referred is the tendency to crystallize and build up a big denomination! Read the "Declaration and Address" of Thomas Campbell, and then read some of the current files of our religious newspapers. A blind man can see the difference. The one is a plea for unity among Christians; the other a plea to let the other religious bodies alone, and let us go on and build up ourselves. But we shall yet see that the truest way to build up ourselves is to seek to build up the kingdom of God in its wider interests. So it looks, at least from this high altitude. Perhaps it may seem different to us when we get down into the smoke of the cities.

But see! The mountians are purpling in the distance, and the evening shadows are lengthening and creeping over the valley. Already we feel the chill of the approaching evening. We must up and away, for the post office is two miles distant, and the Easy Chair must go off by the night's post. Adios!

The Men God Needs To-day.

The men God needs to-day are true,
  To self, to man, to God, to all,
With eyes not blinded by their lusts,
  And ears alert to duty's call.

The men God needs to-day are brave,
  In time of conflict and of peace,
With hearts to fight the battle through,
  Till wrong and suffering shall cease.

The men God needs to-day are wise
  To know the purposes of God,
To learn the lessons he has taught
  In all the past his feet have trod.

The men God needs to-day have hope
  For coming days, to them the best;
They see the Kingdom even now
  Among the people taking rest.

AN APRIL BIBLE SCHOOL CAMPAIGN

THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN BIBLE SCHOOL ASSOCIATION.

By W. H. McClain, President.

Those associated in the inauguration of this movement do not feel that any apology is necessary upon the part of the promoters.

It is agreed by a very large proportion of our Christian workers that better things in Bible school work is a crying need of the church and that teaching is a function of the church not subordinate to preaching, but co-ordinate with it. I regret to say that the ordinary church does not recognize its obligations to the fullest extent, nor does it take the same pains to provide good preaching. Because the Bible school is less effective than it should be as a school, it is less effective than it should be as an evangelistic agency; still it is probably even now the most potent evangelistic agency we have.

J. H. Hardin, Superintendent of Bible School Work in Missouri.

The Bible School Association has, for four years, been trying to put its work on a firm basis, but encouragement from a large part of those who ought to be friends of the movement has been very meager.

As far back as 1901 an attempt was made to inaugurate a Bible school association and those most interested have each succeeding year presented at our annual convention, at such time as they could get a few minutes apart from the convention, the claims of the Bible school work, but I regret to say that the co-operation, if we look at present results attained, has not been equal to the effort put forth.

Until our state and national conventions can see their way clear to recognize on their official programs the importance of Bible study and teacher training, we shall have to "wait and murmur not." A number of states, through their Bible school agents, are co-operating, and a number of our colleges are arranging to give more attention to the preparation of teachers for our Bible schools, and more and more our leading ministers are giving the association their encouragement and co-operation. "Though we are cast down, we are not discouraged," and we are still hoping for larger and better things in the way of Bible school instruction and Bible school work.

Among the leading brethren who have served on our board, and those who have given us encouragement, are: President Burris A. Jenkins, of Lexington; J. H. Bryan, secretary of Bible work in Iowa; Prof. G. P. Coler, of Ann Arbor; P. Y. Pendleton, of Ohio; T. J. Legg, superintendent of Bible school work in Indiana; Robert M. Hopkins, superintendent of Bible school work in Kentucky; J. H. Hardin, superintendent of Bible school work in Missouri; President W. E. Garrison, Butler College; Charles M. Fillmore, of Cincinnati; Howard C. Rash, of Kansas; H. F. Davis, of Missouri; Prof. R. E. Hieronymus, of Eureka; Prof. Lockhart, of Drake University, and hosts of others scattered throughout the country.

In behalf of this body of Bible school workers and the "on-coming hosts of the church," I appeal through these columns of The Christian-Evangelist to all who are willing to co-operate to meet with the board in Buffalo next fall and to help us to make this association what it really should be.

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH AND THE BIBLE SCHOOL.

By J. H. Hardin.

Christian education is going to be the next great burden upon the hearts of our people. Not in the sequestered form alone, of a few colleges; not alone in the form of university culture and training. The teaching that the church must do is too democratic for the limits of academic methods. The colleges and universities can give us the leaders, but with these to teach and lead, the church must educate all the people; not in the learning of this world, but in that higher spiritual realm of the knowledge of God and his kingdom. The method for doing this is not to be some new thing brought in. It is nigh us. It is called the Sunday-school. But it is now an unrecognized method, so far as many people in the church are concerned. It is neglected, ignored and sneered at. It is often poorly organized, inefficiently manned, and its teaching is often a farce from the fact that so many Christians who could efficiently do this work ignore it entirely. But this will not continue much longer. The teaching function of the early church is to be restored. Even now individual Christians and church officials are beginning to see anew the possibilities in the Bible school as a fundamental function of the church's life and progress.

Robert M. Hopkins, Superintendent of Bible School Work in Kentucky.

The Disciples of Christ, of all people, have a place for the educational work to be done by the Bible school. Our understanding of the power and place of the Word of God, our grasp of the relation of truth to the human mind, our definite acceptance of the work of the teacher in bringing men to Christ and in building them in Christ; in short, our plea in all of its legitimate application, obligates us to use the Sunday-school as a method of educating all the people in a knowledge of the Lord.

PRESENT STATUS OF BIBLE SCHOOL WORK.

By A. W. Kokendoffer, President of the Bible School Board of Missouri.

For some years there has been a growing demand for a new departure in Bible school work. In method and efficiency of service we were painfully conscious of lethargy; in the reach of the present expenditures unsatisfying. The money being given by the schools was not being used wholly for the advance of the schools. Recently, under the competent and experienced management of J. H. Hardin, the "new departure" has been inaugurated. Great institutes are being held, teacher training classes organized, and lectures upon our movement are being delivered, and thus impetus and individuality given to the work. Soon also interstate rallies are to begin.

We urge, therefore, thorough co-operation. This is our opportunity. Let us test the virtue. Let every Bible school worker and lover fall into line. Then Hannibal convention reports will thrill us with joy and warrant the continued progress of the "new departure."

OUR TEACHER TRAINING.

By Barclay Meador.

The teacher training course in use at the First Christian Church in Kansas City is the "Revised Normal Lessons," by Dr. Jesse Lyman Hurlbut. It is divided into seven parts and subdivided into forty lessons. It is intended to sweep the horizon of the world of Bible knowledge and Bible school activity into which every conscientious teacher seeks admission upon taking a class. As an outlin it is scarcely more than suggestive. So far as pursued by the teacher training class at the First Church it has had the effect of stimulating as well as instructing. We need what it is doing for us in both respects.

The seven divisions are as follows: Part I. The Bible and its books; II. Bible History: (1) Old Testament, (2) New Testament; III. Bible Geography; IV. Bible Institutions; V. The Sunday (Bible) School; VI. The Sunday (Bible) School Teacher; VII. The Sunday (Bible) School Scholar.

ONE THOUSAND NEW SCHOOLS.

By T. J. Legg.

We are in on the "four years' crusade," but many good workers are overlooking the Sunday-school as our greatest auxiliary. Half the new converts must come from the Sunday-school; others will write about the necessity of building up the Sunday-school, but I want to suggest new schools.

J. H. Bryan, Superintendent of Bible School Work in Iowa.

No city is half occupied by our people; while in every town and in many villages and rural districts are open doors for mission Sunday-schools, more than 100 of them in Indiana alone. I want to call, in the name of the Lord, on every preacher and Sunday-school superintendent or worker, to enter one of these fields adjacent to your church and on the first Sunday in April plant a mission Sunday-school, nurture that school, and it will be an immediate feeder to your church. In three years it can be developed into a self-supporting church with 100 members. What would come of this? During the last 13 years under the leadership of the Indiana Christian Sunday-school Association we have planted Sunday-schools which have been developed by that association and the State Missionary Society into 82 churches with a membership of more than 12,000, and property worth more than $190,000. Give Indiana 100 new Sunday-schools in April and to the brotherhood in proportion, and it would mean 100,000 new converts before 1909. This is no dream; we have Indiana's record in churches—living churches—right on the map.

The state workers can not do all this work in April; but the churches already organized can. Let the standard for April be: 100 new Sunday-schools for Indiana, 1,000 for the brotherhood; 100,000 Sunday-school converts for 1909. Brethren, select a strategic point for a new Christian Sunday-school, organize it April 1 and send in your report.

BEGINNING POINT OF POWER.

By Marion Stevenson, State Superintendent of Illinois Bible Schools.

The observant and thoughtful minister knows that the Sunday-school stands at the beginning point of power in relation to all that he seeks to do. The satisfactory accomplishment of all his good purposes waits upon the quality of the work which the ideal school does. It is his finest evangelistic opportunity and then his best opportunity for culture and discipline.

The wise minister, therefore, will assist with all his might the simultaneous rally for our Sunday-schools which occupies our attention during the month of April.

WHAT WE NEED.

By S. B. Ross.

Shall we rally the children into the Bible schools during April? Shall we make the Bible school work an auxiliary to the four years' campaign for Christ and his church? By all means let us do this. It will interest those in the great work of world-wide work for Christ as perhaps nothing else will. Not a rally for numbers so much as for more of Christ in the teaching, more of the spirit of the Master in our methods, more of a longing for souls for him who gave himself for us. We need better workers, better methods, better results in our work. Let us pray for guidance and help to make the Bible school a still larger rallying place for the bringing of precious souls to Christ.

THE CAMPAIGN IN IOWA.

By J. H. Bryan, State Superintendent.

In the four and one-half years of our special Sunday-school work in Iowa we have had nothing which has done so much for the churches as the simultaneous Bible school campaign promises to do. There are more preachers who will preach a special Sunday-school sermon, and more churches which will work for the upbuilding of the schools than in any rally we have held. Special effort will be made to bring up the enrollment of the schools to equal or surpass the church membership. New schools will be organized, and those which have gone into winter quarters will be revived. During the month most of the schools will use the suggested program. Special efforts will be made to enlist our own church members in Bible study. In many places the home department will be established, and classes of young men and young women and business men will be organized. During the month plans will be laid for making the results of the campaign permanent, and arrangements made to follow the spring and summer campaign in the school with evangelistic meetings in the fall. In my addresses I am constantly repeating the statement of W. J. Wright, our secretary of evangelism, that "the chief evangelistic agency of the church is the school." We in Iowa are looking forward to the centennial convention, and hope to report our church membership doubled by that time. We understand the responsibility laid upon the Bible schools in the matter, and agree with Centennial Secretary Warren when he says, "To do this, we must first double our schools." The campaign has been pushed in institutes, through the mails, in Drake University, and in every issue of the state paper, for the last six weeks. We are expecting great results from the campaign, and praying and working for them.

WHAT WE ARE DOING IN KENTUCKY BIBLE SCHOOL WORK.

By Robert M. Hopkins.

"The Bible school is a school," is the foundation upon which we are building our Bible school work in Kentucky. We believe that a good Bible school has social features and musical and missionary and evangelistic as well, but above all these it is the educational service of the church. We may call attention to one of two items that illustrate our method of procedure.

During the winter months we have held a number of educational institutes in the various Kentucky colleges. The first of these was in the College of the Bible, Lexington, where over two hundred young men are preparing for the ministry. We had four instructors in this institute: Prof. H. M. Hamill, of Nashville, Tenn., the superintendent of training work for the Methodist Church South, was chief instructor, and he was assisted by I. J. Spencer, pastor and superintendent of the Central Church, Lexington; Prof. H. L. Calhoun, of the College of the Bible, and Robert M. Hopkins. Such topics as "The Importance of a Teaching Ministry," "The Teacher Preparing," "The Teacher Teaching," "The Bible School at Work," "Soul Winning," were discussed, and the institute was enthusiastically received by the students. The results from such an effort can hardly be estimated.

Another feature of the work this year is a series of conferences for the superintendents in the state. We are to have three, one of which has already been successfully conducted at Lexington in February, another will be in Louisville in April, and the third in the newly annexed western part of the state in June. These conferences are not for the transaction of business or the raising of money, but are devoted exclusively to the discussion of plans and methods, the answering of questions regarding difficulties actually being encountered, and the suggestion of new ideas and books regarding the Bible school. While this is the first year we have attempted such gatherings. their success and helpfulness are already assured.

In the special campaign for April, into which the Kentucky schools are entering enthusiastically, special emphasis is being laid upon the educational value of the Bible school. The first Sunday in April has been known in Kentucky for several years as "Bible school day," and the preachers in city and country are asked to devote one entire service and sermon to the promotion of their own local Bible schools. This year by means of personal letters we are asking them to call attention particularly to the school as the teaching service of the church. The same great commission that commands, "Go baptize." also bids us "teach." In the campaign itself also the superintendents are asked to strive for more thoroughly prepared lessons and stronger co-operation on the part of Christian homes.

Last, but by no means least, we are using every exertion in the field in the furtherance of this same idea. Our district conventions which are held in April, May and June, will be permeated with the thought that the church teaches the Bible in the Bible school. Subjects have been assigned with this idea uppermost. Our institutes with individual schools, too, are stirring the workers with the inspiration that comes from this great thought. We emphasize the necessity for maps, blackboards, charts, sand-maps, stereoscopic views, written reviews, definitely assigned tasks, supplemental Bible lessons, the teachers' meeting, the training class, the teachers' library, the home department—all because we are really engaged in an educational work in the Bible school, we are teaching, we are "causing to know," and our subject matter as well as the end in view far transcends in importance those which claim the time and attention of the secular teacher. It is well to strive for a large and regular attendance; in common with other schools we must mave it; it is also essential that we raise large contributions, both for the sake of the scholar who gives and in order that we may adequately meet the needs of the school—but why not let the banner be given to the class that has the best prepared lessons, that can quote the largest number of new Scripture passages, that hands in the neatest and nearest correct home tasks? It is necessary for the secretary to report the progress of the school in numbers and finances. but it is not also essential that the superintendent or other proper officer report the progress of the school from an educational viewpoint? To this end let us have promotion day, installation day and parents' day, as well as special reviews and examinations, short papers read on pertinent subjects, drills and memory exercises.

The April simultaneous campaign bids fair to be a most potent stimulus to the Bible schools all over the land; they will grow in numbers and influence and efficiency in every way. But we are hopeful that above all the workers will bear in mind the distinguishing characteristics that should attend the Bible school. We must not furnish legitimate grounds for the students of a certain eastern university who are prone to ask this riddle, "When is a school not a school?" and give this answer, "When it is a Sunday-school."

FOOD HELPS

In Management of a R. R.

Speaking of food a railroad man says:

"My work puts me out in all kinds of weather, subject to irregular hours for meals and compelled to eat all kinds of food.

"For 7 years I was constantly troubled with indigestion, caused by eating heavy, fatty, starchy, greasy, poorly cooked food, such as are most accessible to men in my business. Generally each meal or lunch was followed by distressing pains and burning sensations in my stomach, which destroyed my sleep and almost unfitted me for work. My brain was so muddy and foggy that it was hard for me to discharge my duties properly.

"This lasted till about a year ago, when my attention was called to Grape-Nuts food by a newspaper ad. and I concluded to try it. Since then I have used Grape-Nuts at nearly every meal and sometimes between meals. We railroad men have little chance to prepare our food in our cabooses and I find Grape-Nuts mighty handy for it is ready cooked.

"To make a long story short, Grape-Nuts has made a new man of me. I have no more burning distress in my stomach, nor any other symptom of indigestion. I can digest anything so long as I eat Grape-Nuts, and my brain works as clearly and accurately as an engineer's watch. and my old nervous troubles have disappeared entirely." # FEDERATION — A Symposium

Some Questions on Federation.

The following letter was sent out by the Editors to a number of brethren, and we continue in this issue the publication of their replies.

In view of the discussion which has been in progress among us for some time on the question of the federation of the churches, The Christian-Evangelist desires to publish a symposium on the subject, for the benefit of its readers, and with the purpose of molding public sentiment rightly on this important issue which now confronts us. Will you kindly, therefore, favor us with brief answers to the following questions which seem to us to embrace the points in discussion:

1. Defining church federation as an agreed-upon method of co-operation in those things which the co-operating churches hold in common, and in which each co-operating Christian body has full freedom to be true to its convictions of truth and duty, are we not, as advocates of Christian union, logically committed to the federation movement as the next practicable step in the direction of the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for the unity of his disciples, and as a practical manifestation of the degree of unity which already exists?

2. Do you approve of the Basis of Federation submitted to the evangelical churches of America for their approval, by the late Inter-Church Conference in New York City, as presenting a practicable plan for such co-operation?

By J. P. Pinkerton.

Replying to questions 1 and 2, in your communication of recent date, I answer both in the affirmative. I have seen no reason to change the position I assumed in a sermon preached in my pulpit immediately upon the adjournment of the Inter-Church Conference. It seemed to me then as a bright and hopeful indication of the answer of Christ's prayer for the unity of his disciples, that we were logically committed to the federation movement and that any attitude of opposition or indifference to the proposed co-operation of the followers of Christ, was not only illogical but seemed to me absolutely absurd. I did then and do now approve the basis of federation, and fail to see that in acting upon it, I am at all sacrificing any cherished conviction or compromising an iota of truth. Indeed I have been practically engaging in the co-operative work recommended by the Inter-Church Conference.

By Howard T. Cree.

Permit me to say that with my first acquaintance with the "federation idea," I hailed it with great joy as an additional and more practicable method of co-operation of various Christian bodies toward the final ideal of perfect unity. Our preachers have always favored and labored for anything that looked like a closer union of Christians, either in doctrines or practice, according to the statements of the men who have led inter-denominational efforts of various kinds, and it is a source of joy to me that I have never spared myself to make such efforts a success.

Defining federation as you have done in your first query and as I have always understood it and considering it not at all as a final goal, but only as an effort toward that goal, I am free to say that the logic of our position as a brotherhood and the plea of our people demands our favoring it as strenuously as and more so than any religious body. It seems to me there can be, in such an arrangement, in which we in common with others have the utmost freedom, no surrender of the principles which have moved us from the beginning and given us such great success. The brethren who fear federation may mean a curtailment of any of our legitimate Christian privileges, either as individuals or as churches, certainly do not catch aright the spirit of the federation movement or rightly interpret the program suggested.

I presume no one assumes the basis of federation adopted by the New York conference to be an infallible document; it is only the expression of human opinions as to methods of expediency, and is the least objectionable of any plan I have seen submitted. Why should we raise the question of "liberty," when article four distinctly says: "The federal council shall have no authority over the constituent bodies adhering to it; but its province shall be limited to the expression of its counsel and the recommending of a course of action in matters of common interest to the churches, local councils and individual Christians. It has no authority to draw up a common creed, or form of government, or of worship, or in any way to limit the full autonomy of the Christian bodies adhering to it." Were the plan of the council studied more at first and certain interpretations of it less there would be more unanimity of sentiment on the subject and a less number of articles which reveal the sad fact that the writers either have not seen or utterly forgotten the propositions under discussion.

I heartily approve the plan as the most practicable yet submitted for co-operation and pray my brethren everywhere may lend their influence to the furtherance of its main idea.

Augusta, Ga.

By H. C. Kendrick.

1. With emphasis, yes. I could not answer otherwise without belying my prayers and sermons for the past twenty years. Why there should be any discussion of such a question is a growing wonder to me. Are we about to become bitter partisans and sectarians who for a century have so strenuously fought the sectarian spirit? The great minds and the great hearts among us have spoken their most eloquent words in advocacy of Christian union. Did they mean it? Or was it just a "plea"? "But federation is not Christian union." No one, to my knowledge, so believes or has ever so intimated. It is only a step in that Christian evolution whose end will be union in Christ. This blessed finality can not be reached by a single bound. For the "Disciples of Christ" to have nothing whatever to do with federation would be to throw away the greatest opportunity of bringing to blessed consummation the one supreme desire of their hearts that has presented itself in a hundred years. I believe in going among sinners and to the heathen, not to be contaminated by sin nor to endorse heathenism, but to convince them of the errors of their ways. So I believe in mingling in kindly spirit with these learned and devout believers in Christ that we may partake of their devotion and learning and join them in the promotion of righteousness and peace on earth, and also to tell them of the light and the liberty we have, building on the one foundation, having the one and only and all-sufficient Book, untrammeled by human creeds. Yes, I believe we are committed by the combined logic of the head and heart to the federation movement as the next practicable step in the direction of the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for the unity of his disciples.

2. I answer affirmatively as to question number two. I approve of that basis of federation not according to the interpretations and definitions of others, but in harmony with my own comprehension of the spirit and unmistakable teaching of such federation. This does not make me endorse every phrase in said basis nor federation as it may be interpreted and promulgated in some of the states. I endorse no kind of federation that would destroy any Christian principle or rob us of God-given rights and privileges. Our brethren of the states should seek to have the vitally objectionable features eliminated before they rush into print with burning words of condemnation. I know by personal knowledge that there was a disposition in the great conference in New York City to make all possible changes so that the basis of federation might be the least objectionable. One of our brethren suggested that "Lord's day" be substituted for "the Sabbath," and a prominent Presbyterian minister said, "That is much to be preferred," and the entire committee yielded without debate.

Our own brethren do not seem to have a monopoly on the soul stirring plea of Christian union. Brilliant men of God, in fiery terms, condemned the spirit of division and pleaded for "one faith, one Lord, and one baptism."

We should suffer no people to excel us in faith and love, and in loyalty to Jesus Christ. To make insinuations, to impugn the motives of brethren, is neither Scriptural, logical nor fair. It grieves the Spirit of God and wounds the hearts of brothers in Christ. Let no one mistake abuse or brilliant repartee for careful and logical statement. Why is it not a part of "our plea" to deal generously with our brethren and to practice brotherly kindness?

How easy it is to be misled by false issues! Why cry "fire" when there is no fire? I have never seen a word from the pen of any advocate of federation proposing that the matter be brought to the consideration of the convention in Buffalo. Why should the minds and hearts of the brotherhood be disturbed over something that is not proposed, unless it is to have the satisfaction of saying, "we killed it"? Why should we thus embarrass our managers of the missionary enterprise and possibly injure the good work? Our conventions have all they can do in looking after the great interests already inaugurated. Let us have a special and separate meeting for the discussion of federation and other questions of moment. To say, I will not give to missions if the brethren in convention endorse or refuse to endorse federation, would not be the speech of a loyal subject of him who said: "Go teach the nations." The question of federation is a matter of opinion and I accord to my brother the same liberty in this that I demand for myself. Whatever may betide, I intend to stand by the last words of my Master with all the energy of my being. If I can not have my way in plans and methods I will adopt those of others which may be far better. I will prove the plan good or bad by helping to work it. Loyalty to Jesus Christ in speech, heart and life is the supreme question of the century. Brethren, I suggest a prayer-meeting. Let us pray.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

Murillo is to be studied at Seville. Murillo is the mightiest and most magnificent Andalusian. His house is in the Jews' quarter. In the cathedral we saw his "St. Anthony" and in La Caridad six of his masterpieces. La Caridad is a church founded as a hospital by a dissipated young man to atone for his excesses, whose epitaph reads, "Here lie the ashes of the worst man that ever was"—a boast upon a tombstone. The "Miracle of the Loaves and Fishes" and "The Thirst" are two Murillos here that are specially wonderful. In the latter Moses is striking the rock. In the suffering revealed by the faces of the Israelites and the eager joy of people and beasts of burden on receiving relief, there is the dramatic contention of pain and pleasure, which shows his genius. The museum has 23 Murillos. "St. Felix Holding the Holy Child" and "St. Thomas Distributing Alms" are masterpieces; the latter Murillo's favorite. Here also is the "Virgin of the Napkin" and other priceless examples of the Spanish school of painting.

The cathedral includes not only the Giralda tower, but the Court of Oranges, and the Columbine library. The first consists of existing portions of the original mosque and has great bronze doors and a Moslem fountain. A suite of rooms in the upper story contains a priceless collection of books and manuscripts, most of which were the property of the greatest of navigators. In a glass case are the original journals of Columbus and the travels of Marco Polo, which he used in his voyages and which first suggested to him the existence of a new world. Well-nigh every page has his notes, clearly legible after 400 years.

The royal tobacco factory is one of the sights of Seville. Here 4,000 women sit at long tables, many with babies in their laps or in cradles, rolling cigars and cigarettes, and talking incessantly. Two million pounds of tobacco are used yearly. The weed was once chewed, smoked and snuffed in the cathedral, and Pope Urban issued a bill against it. Seville has many parks and promenades. The principal promenade along the river front, called "The Delights," is an arbored road. Sierpes ("The Serpents") is an interesting street, lined with shops and overhung with sails drawn from roof to roof. Fans are a feature here, and the fair Sevillians are said to know how to use them with a grace and eloquence as no other women. Across the river, down which Cortes, Pizarro and Columbus sailed to their discoveries, is the Triana, the exclusive quarter of the Spanish gypsies. Here the costumes and dances and diablerie of these dark-skinned, dark-eyed children of India may be seen, and you can have them play the tambourine, guitar and castanet and pick your pocket with equal cleverness. An incident of a gypsy at confession will show their skill as thieves. In the midst of his confession he spies a silver snuff box in the priest's pocket, and quickly transfers it to his own. Continuing his confession, he said: "Father, I accuse myself of having stolen a silver snuff box." "Then, my son, you must certainly restore it." "Will you have it yourself, father?" "I, certainly not; you must return it to the owner." "The fact is, I have offered it to the owner and he has refused it." "Then you can keep it with a good conscience," replied the unsuspecting confessor, and the gypsy withdraws with his booty. Lying, however, is not peculiar to the Romany folk over here. "Are you telling the truth?" asked some one of a native. "Madam, I am an Andalusian," was the answer. One in Seville can not help remembering the hated name Torquemada. Visions of this monster, the inquisitor general, and his eleven tribunals, which converted this fair land into a blazing Tophet, come before us, in spite of ourselves. Think of 8,800 burned to death and 96,000 otherwise punished, often with sufferings worse than death. Spain was called the hell of the Jews. In the Triana quarter of Seville is still shown the place where the dreaded tribunal met, whose deeds cause humanity to shudder. Pius V. was shocked at the bull fights and issued an edict against them, and then another, favoring the torturing and barbaric cruelties of the inquisition. Isabella has this sin, as well as Charles V. and Philip II. With her permission, in 1481, in eight months in fair Seville, 2,300 were burned and 17,000 punished and degraded under this horror of horrors, in the name of religion. Montezuma made human sacrifices to his gods; what better did their Catholic majesties of Spain?

Seville is a mass of white houses amid gardens of green and gold. Granada, says an Arabic poet, is "a pearl set round with emerald." The capital of the ancient kingdom of Granada is built on two declivities of the Sierra Nevada mountains. The Darro flows through it and falls into the Genil just outside the walls. Its site is 2,000 feet above the sea, and is singularly picturesque and beautiful. It has handsome squares and fountains and edifices. It is set in a paradise of beauty, surrounded by snow-mantled heights, with plains and orchards and vineyards, a noble prospect on every hand; but its chief attraction is the far-famed Alhambra, the ancient palace and fortress of the Moors. Bayard Taylor said this was not to be compared with certain temples and mosques in India, certainly not equal to the Taj, the jewel of Asia; but Washington Irving has cast a spell over the place that can never be lifted. Alhambra signifies in the Arabic "the red castle" and comes from the color of sun-dried bricks used in the outer walls. It has room for 40,000 men. Between 1248 and 1354 the palace was built. Its splendid decorations and exquisite painting are ascribed to Yusuf I. After the expulsion of the Moors, 1492, the conquerors by many acts of vandalism began to spoil the marvelous beauty of the Moorish stronghold. They went to work whitewashing and soiling and renewing, and building partitions, and defacing this pearl of Moorish art, and some of the towers the French had blown up when the robber Soult was in this region and plundered Seville to the extent of $30,000,000. Then came the earthquake of 1821. But enough is left to show the gorgeous magnificence of this seat of the Moorish monarchs and to remind us of Bagdad's glories in the period of Haroun-al-Raschid and the dreams of the Arabian Nights.

The buildings stand on a hilly terrace, a strongly fortified wall surrounding them, and by the Gate of Pomegranates the visitor enters the grounds, wooded by elms, brought from England by Wellington in 1812. This park is adorned by beautiful waterfalls and sparkling fountains, and enlivened by the songs of nightingales. Through the Gate of Judg-

A TORPID THINKER

The Frequent Result of Coffee Poisoning.

A Toledo, O., business man says that for three years he had no appetite for breakfast; that about once a month he ate solid food at that meal, generally contenting himself with his cup of coffee and having no desire for anything else.

Coffee frequently plays this dog-in-the-manger trick; while it furnishes no nutriment itself, it destroys the appetite for food which is nutritious. The result was, in time, a torpid mentality, which was a distinct handicap in his business operations.

"Last Christmas," he says, "I consulted my brother, a practicing physician in Chicago, and he advised a diet of Postum Food Coffee, instead of the old kind, and also Grape-Nuts food. Since that time I have followed his advice with most excellent results. My brain is active and clear in the morning when it naturally should be at its best; I no longer have the dizzy spells that used to make me apprehensive; I have gained materially in flesh and feel better in every way.

"The Postum seems to be no less a food than the Grape-Nuts, and the two together fill all requirements. My wife has tried several of the recipes in your little booklet and we have enjoyed the result, but to my mind Grape-Nuts food is best when served with sliced fruit and covered with cream." ment, a massive portal where, according to Oriental custom, open air courts of justice were held, we pass into the Place of Cisterns, a large plateau flanked by towers. To our left rises the Alcazaba, the ruined fortress, from whose tower are noble views of the city and its surroundings. To the right is the palace of Charles V., an unfinished structure. Beyond this is the Palace of the Kings, bare and unadorned without, but within unrivaled in splendor of its halls and decorations. It is a series of palaces, each having its own court. There is the Court of the Myrtles, with its pool surrounded by myrtle. Then the Gallery of the Ambassadors, the reception room of the kings, where Charles V. was married to Isabella of Portugal, and Columbus had his audience with Ferdinand and Isabella, and Boabdil held his last council, with its ceiling inlaid with white, blue and gold in circles and stars, imitating the vault of heaven. Then the Court of Lions, the most famous, with its alabaster basin resting upon 12 marble lions, its 124 graceful columns, its ceiling like festoons of heavy petrified lace, or a grotto of stalactites. There is the Hall of the Abencerrages, so called from the legend that Boabdil invited these worthies to dinner in this hall and then decapitated them. In those times an invitation to dine any gentleman had to think over twice before accepting. Here are exquisite arches sustaining a roof beautifully inlaid with blues and browns and reds and gold. There are the Hall of Justice and the Hall of the Two Sisters, which also contain this delicate arching which seems like the work of fairies, and stalactite grottoes, said to be suggested by the work of bees in the honeycomb. # The Coffee Debate.

The published statements of a number of coffee importers and roasters indicate a "waspy" feeling toward us, for daring to say that coffee is harmful to a percentage of the people.

A frank public discussion of the subject is quite agreeable to us and can certainly do no harm; on the contrary when all the facts on both sides of any question are spread before the people they can thereupon decide and act intelligently.

Give the people plain facts and they will take care of themselves.

We demand facts in this coffee discussion and propose to see that the facts are brought clearly before the people.

A number of coffee importers and roasters have joined a movement to boom coffee and stop the use of Postum Food Coffee and in their newspaper statements undertake to deceive by false assertions.

Their first is that coffee is not harmful.

We assert that one in every three coffee users has some form of incipient or chronic disease; realize for one moment what a terrible menace to a nation of civilized people, when one kind of beverage cripples the energies and health of one-third the people who use it.

We make the assertion advisedly and suggest that the reader secure his own proof by personal inquiry among coffee users.

Ask your coffee drinking friends if they keep free from any sort of aches and ills. You will be startled at the percentage and will very naturally seek to place the cause of disorder on something aside from coffee, whether food, inherited tendencies or something else.

Go deeper in your search for facts.

If your friend admits occasional neuralgia, rheumatism, heart weakness, stomach or bowel trouble, kidney complaint, weak eyes, or approaching nervous prostration induce him or her to make the experiment of leaving off coffee for 10 days and using Postum Food Coffee, and observe the result. It will startle you and give your friend something to think of. Of course, if the person is one of the weak ones and says "I can't quit," you will have discovered one of the slaves of the coffee importer. Treat such kindly, for they seem absolutely powerless to stop the gradual but sure destruction of body and health.

Nature has a way of destroying a part of the people to make room for the stronger. It is the old law of "the survival of the fittest" at work, and the victims are many.

We repeat the assertion that coffee does harm many people, not all, but an army large enough to appall the investigator and searcher for facts.

The next prevarication of the coffee importers and roasters is their statement that Postum Food Coffee is made of roasted peas, beans or corn, and mixed with a low grade of coffee and that it contains no nourishment.

We have previously offered to wager $100,000.00 with them that their statements are absolutely false.

They have not accepted our wager and they will not.

We will gladly make a present of $25,000.00 to any roaster or importer of old fashioned coffee who will accept that wager.

Free inspection of our factories and methods is made by thousands of people each month and the coffee importers themselves are cordially invited. Both Postum and Grape-Nuts are absolutely pure and made exactly as stated.

The formula of Postum and the analysis made by one of the foremost chemists of Boston has been printed on every package for many years and is absolutely accurate.

Now as to the food value of Postum. It contains the parts of the wheat berry which carry the elemental salts such as lime, iron, potash, silica, etc., etc., used by the life forces to rebuild the cellular tissue, and this is particularly true of the phosphate of potash, also found in Grape-Nuts, which combines in the human body with albumen and this combination, together with water, rebuilds the worn out gray matter in the delicate nerve centers all over the body, and throughout the brain and solar plexus.

Ordinary coffee stimulates in an unnatural way, but with many people it slowly and surely destroys and does not rebuild this gray substance so vitally important to the well-being of every human being.

These are eternal facts, proven, well authenticated and known to every properly educated physician, chemist and food expert.

Please remember we never say ordinary coffee hurts everyone.

Some people use it regularly and seem strong enough to withstand its attacks, but there is misery and disease in store for the man or woman who persists in its use when nature protests, by heart weakness, stomach and bowel troubles, kidney disease, weak eyes, or general nervous prostration. The remedy is obvious. The drug caffeine, contained in all ordinary coffee, must be discontinued absolutely or the disease will continue in spite of any medicine and will grow worse.

It is easy to leave off the old fashioned coffee by adopting Postum Food Coffee, for in it one finds a pleasing hot breakfast or dinner beverage that has the deep seal brown color, changing to a rich golden brown when good cream is added. When boiled long enough (15 minutes) the flavor is not that of rank Rio coffee but very like the milder, smooth and high grade Java, but entirely lacking the drug effect of ordinary coffee.

Any one suffering from disorders set up by coffee drinking (and there is an extensive variety) can absolutely depend upon some measure of relief by quitting coffee and using Postum Food Coffee.

If the disease has not become too strongly rooted, one can with good reason expect it to disappear entirely in a reasonable time after the active cause of the trouble is removed and the cellular tissue has time to naturally rebuild with the elements furnished by Postum and good food.

It's only just plain old common sense.

Now, with the exact facts before the reader, he or she can decide the wise course, looking to health and the power to do things.

If you have any doubt as to the cause of any ache or ail you may have, remember the far reaching telegrams of a hurt nervous system travel from heel to head, and it may be well worth your while to make the experiment of leaving off coffee entirely for 10 days and using Postum in its place.

You will probably gather some good solid facts, worth more than a gold mine, for health can make gold and sickness lose it. Besides there's all the fun, for it's like a continuous internal frolic to be perfectly well.

There's a reason for

Our Budget

—Let April be given to a special campaign in the Bible schools and to the pushing of the work of the American Christian Missionary Society in the churches.

—Unions of Sunday-school teachers in Kansas City and St. Louis have been organized.

—The latest word from the Editor-in-Chief indicates that Dr. and Mrs. Garrison expect to be in St. Louis by April 1. It will be a source of gratification to his many friends to know that President W. E. Garrison, of Butler College, has already greatly improved in his physical condition. He will remain in New Mexico until thoroughly cured, which may require a year's time, or even more.

—The church at Dearborn, Mo., is amply supplied with applicants for its pulpit.

—Central Illinois Christian Ministerial Institute, Champaign, Ill., April 10, 11.

—R. A. Omer is now holding a meeting at Abilene, Kan., for W. L. Lodwig, who is his son in the Gospel.

—The district convention will meet with the church at Smith Center, Kan., April 17-19. F. E. Blanchard is the pastor.

—O. D. Maple, pastor of the Christian church at Marion, O., and Elder McBroom, of Rockbridge, O., have just held a debate.

—Mrs. Atwater and Mrs. Helen E. Moses are visiting the mission stations of the C. W. B. M. in Jamaica and Porto Rico.

—Labor trouble at Bizbee, Ariz., has delayed the erection of the church there, but the outlook for its speedy completion is now better.

—O. H. King has just closed his sixth year of work with the church at LaGrande, Ore. The church is out of debt and ready to go forward.

—C. P. Smith has just relinquished his pastorate at the North Side Church, Kansas City, to take charge of the Main Street Church, Mason City, Iowa.

—J. E. Dinger, who has recently entered upon the evangelistic field, is now in a meeting at Watonga, Okla., which C. C. Gardner, of Marion, Ind., as singer.

—In an excellent meeting held at Coon Rapids, Ia., by W. G. Cole, the membership was doubled. The church there, under Bro. G. C. Stearns, is working well.

—A C. W. B. M. auxiliary has been organized at Plainville, Kan., and Brother Ingle reports that the church has just entered upon a short protracted meeting.

—The brethren at Warsaw, Ind., are looking forward with joy to April 8, when they expect to burn the mortgage on their property. Marshall G. Long is the minister.

—We are in receipt of an excellent little tract entitled "Household Baptisms," and a brief history of infant baptism, by E. L. Shelnutt, editor of the "Southern Evangelist," Atlanta, Ga.

—The fifth anniversary of the dedication of the church house at Farmington, Mo., will be observed on Saturday, April 7. Stephen J. Corey, G. A Hoffmann and others will take part in the services.

—E. M. Smith, one of the members of the Missouri Bible school board, whose photograph appears on another page, was called to Virginia last week, owing to the dangerous illness of his mother.

—Prof. H. T. Sutton, Cotner University, has just closed a missionary institute for the church at Ord, Neb. Six new elders and deacons were ordained and a fine mission study class organized.

—J. Murray Taylor, who has for some months past been doing special evangelistic work, has accepted a call to the Genesee Avenue Christian Church, Saginaw, Mich., where he will begin work May 1.

—As a result of the recent meeting held by J. B. Lockhart at Cincinnati, Ia., the church there has been freed from debt, and Brother Leonard, who has been serving them part time, will become their regular minister.

—Repairs to the building at Siloam Springs, Ark., are progressing, and some new furnishings will soon be installed. We hear that C. D. Purlee is doing a fine work and one badly needed in that neighborhood.

—A church has recently been organized by C. O. McFarland and wife, state evangelists, at Silex, Mo., with eighty-five charter members. Arrangements are being made to erect a substantial building at the earliest opportunity.

—Our mission family at Monterey, Mexico, is just now especially interested in the effort that is being made to establish a permanent work in San Luisito, a district known as the toughest and most fanatical part of the city.

—A. M. Hale, of Illiopolis, Ill., has recently given a two weeks' series of instructive sermons to the church at Buffalo, Ill. During his absence L. A. Chapman, of Mechanicsburg, filled the Illiopolis pulpit for three successive Sunday evenings.

—M. H. Jacks has left Scottsburg, Ind., to take the work at Devey and Center Square, but he will have one Lord's day a month free and will be glad to deliver special sermons or addresses or do regular work, as his time permits.

—J. T. Quisenberry writes that the brethren at Lockhart, Tex., "are trying to keep up with the centennial procession of the brotherhood." This is in connection with the announcement that the apportionment for foreign missions has just been doubled.

—Arthur Braden, pastor of our church at Auburn, N. Y., who in his recent meeting was assisted by Miss Lulu Clark, of Cato, N. Y., in the department of singing, commends her very heartily as both consecrated and talented for musical direction in evangelistic work.

—One hundred and forty dozen cookies is the record for one day's baking of the ladies' aid of the Central Church, Marion, O. That seems to indicate that there is going to be plenty of life in the dedication exercises and the meeting this church is just about to hold.

—A small but promising church has been organized by I. G. Inman at Sabinas, Mexico. Sabinas is a town that is growing very rapidly, and we need a good church building there. The young man who has been put in charge of the new organization was converted through reading the mission paper.

—As a result of the self-sacrificing work of E. S. McKinney, the minister, and the efforts of E. V. Spicer and E. M. Douthit as evangelists, our brotherhood now has the best house of worship in Woodward, Okla., and the largest membership, where a year ago we had no church building and only a small organization.

—J. V. Updike and James E. Hawes have again joined hands for service together in the evangelistic field. Brother Updike's address in Salina, O., and Brother Hawes lives at Ada, O. During the past five years the latter has been preaching in Ohio, but now returns to the work of singing evangelist.

All Run Down

In the spring—that is the condition of thousands whose systems have not thrown off the impurities accumulated during the winter — blood humors that are now causing pimples, boils and other eruptions, loss of appetite, bilious turns, indigestion, and other stomach troubles, dull headaches and weak, tired, languid feelings.

Hood's Sarsaparilla removes all these humors, cures all these troubles; renovates, strengthens and tones the whole system. This is the testimony of thousands annually.

—Parker Stockdale, who recently joined our brotherhood after having served in the ministry of another religious organization, has been holding a meeting very acceptably for our church at Independence, Mo. L. J. Marshall writes that he hopes some of our churches will keep Brother Stockdale busy until he is regularly employed by some congregation.

—Thomas Wallace, pastor of our church at Mount Ayr, Iowa, has been preaching in Chicago and speaking before the ministerial association there. He will visit F. A. Higgins, pastor of the church at Benton Harbor, Mich., and will lecture in other parts of that state, after which he will take charge of the church at Aurora, Ontario, Canada.

—E. H. Clifford reports that the year's work of the Fourth Christian Church, Indianapolis, where G. M. Anderson is pastor, shows that there were 59 additions, 31 being by baptism, while there was a total of $2,837 raised, being an increase of $109 over the preceding year. The missionary receipts are especially good, totaling up the sum of $740, an increase of over $79.

—Evangelist J. P. Johnson, of Nashville, Tenn., has been employed by the church at Chetopa, Kan., for half time. He desires to use the other half of his time in evangelistic work in southeast Kansas and adjacent territory. Brother Johnson has held some good meetings and those interested can address him care of Dr. W. J. Latta, at Chetopa.

—Frank D. Draper, the minister, writes us that the Third Church at Youngstown, O., has found it necessary to rent part of a dwelling house to meet the growth of the Bible school until they can erect their new auditorium. The foreign offering has gone far beyond any previous record, and this year the church expects to support a native worker in the foreign field.

—The work of the Mitchell Park Church, St. Joseph, Mo., shows steady growth. C. A. Lowe is pastor here, and during last year there was paid on the debt and interest $984, while $85 were raised for missions in addition to this amount and the general expense fund. There were 43 additions to the church. All the organizations show good work done.

—We regret to learn of the death of Clarence H. Elliott, who died at Goldfield, Nev., after but a few hours' illness of pleuro-pneumonia. Mr. Elliott was related to A. J., E. E. and H. V. Elliott, of Peoria, where he had formerly lived. Another brother, Walter S., is in North China, while his mother, Mrs. Frances D. Elliott, and his sister live at Indianapolis.

—R. S. Smedley, who is in field work again in Oklahoma, reports that at Gotebo, Kiowa county, the brethren are roofing a church building 28x40. At Martin View a building of the same size is now being enclosed and at Munyon, Greer county, a $5,000 building will be built. At the last place the ladies' aid, with $75 in bank, has headed the list with $1,000. Brother Smedley is now J. M. Monroe's living link evangelist.

—A gift of $1,000 for the endowment of a memorial room in the new orphanage of the National Benevolent Association in St. Louis, in honor of Sarah Margaret Chiles, of Atherton, Mo., has just been made by a near relative. Memorial funds can be very appropriately given to this building, or the new hospital at Valparaiso, Ind., or the proposed new orphanage at Cleveland, O. George L. Snively will give full particulars.

—We were able to announce only the fact that Drake had won in its oratorical contest with the other Iowa colleges as to who should furnish the orator at the coming inter-state contest at Topeka, Kan. Drake's representative, John H. Booth, was first, not only in delivery, but also in thought and composition. He is one of the Bible College men, where he has been almost three years, having come from Colorado Springs. He stands high in the estimation of those who know him.

—A note from Bro. Ashley S. Johnson informs us that although the new building is not done, the School of the Evangelists at Kimberlin Heights, Tenn., was opened for the new term with every room full and extra beds placed in the reading room to accommodate those desiring to attend. Since the fire in December, 1904, there have been about 500 applications. The amount still required to meet the necessary expenses of rebuilding and equipment is $3,500.

—W. J. Cocke had the pleasure of raising $8,000 during his last week in Georgia to complete the new church at Dublin. He was unanimously asked to become the pastor, but declined, having already accepted work under the Kentucky state board. The state board of Georgia has passed resolutions commending the character, ability and invaluable services of Brother Cocke while state evangelist, and all the Atlanta papers contain articles eulogistic of what he has done for the state. He is now located at Lexington, Ky.

—The work of preparation for the annual offering for home missions has begun in the field. W. J. Wright and W. H. Pinkerton are holding rallies in western Pennsylvania and eastern Ohio and West Virginia. Brother Pinkerton continues through Ohio and Indiana, while Brother Wright next goes into the west. George B. Ranshaw is busy in Kentucky and Illinois in the same work. One encouraging feature of the campaign this year is the number of spontaneous rallies that have been asked for and planned by the local ministers.

—B. W. Rice reports that the brethren at Twin Falls, Idaho, have called W. C. German. A new church of 45 members has been organized there, and as the growth in this region is likely to be great during the coming year, it is the purpose of the congregation to be abreast of the need and opportunity. G. M. Read, of Peabody, Kan., has been called to the church at Voiser, where a few struggling brethren hope to put a now precarious cause on a firm foundation. Those who have made application for work in Idaho will take note of these appointments and await patiently the opportunity of the brethren to send personal replies.

—It is strange how a misconception once planted in the minds of people persists in spite of repeated corrections. Here is a writer lamenting the fact that "if we should federate in a town of 3,000 where all the four leading Protestant bodies are organized, we will first have to select a preacher. He happens to be one from the Presbyterian church, a good man, but founded in Calvinistic ideas," etc., etc.! The brethren, of course, object to this, "but we have federated, and he is our preacher"! And he writes earnest protest against federation as "of the devil." Now, this good brother means entirely well, but he has been reading the wrong kind of literature. Who of us would not think federation was "of the devil" if we had his idea of what it is? But is there any way to disabuse the minds of honest people who really wish to know the truth concerning this subject?

Prof. Shailer Mathews, who is to be Chief Guest of the Missouri Lectureship.

—Something of a sensation occurred last week in the disappearance of Miss Nina Brandt, the daughter of John L. Brandt, pastor of the First Christian Church, of St. Louis. The matter has been given wide publicity in the press, and we are glad to say that the young lady was traced, after some difficulty, and by the time these lines appear will have been joined by her father in Las Vegas, N. M. She had a sudden case of mental aberration induced by ill health and overwork. Miss Brandt had for some time centered her desires on becoming a missionary in China, and this desire seems to have become uppermost in her mind during her period of hallucination. She was making her way to the coast with the intention of sailing for that country. As soon as a clue was obtained indicating that she had started westward her father followed as fast as he could. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is glad that it was able to have some part in discovering the whereabouts of Miss Brandt and rejoices with the members of the family and the First Christian Church that what seemed at first to have all the marks of a dreadful crime has terminated in the finding of the missing girl, with every prospect of a speedy restoration to her mental equipoise and the family circle.

—We are in receipt of a good-natured suggestion from L. T. Van Cleave, of Azusa, Cal., to the effect of calling for the previous question, and closing the discussion on church federation. He asks for a vote at once on the question of "Tabling this whole business from the Garrison resolution at Omaha, in 1902 to the last editorial deliverance, and proceeding at once to carry out the great commission." The suggestion is a little belated, if it refers to our discussion with "The Christian Standard," as that has been closed. It is a little previous if it refers to the expression of sentiments on the subject, on the part of the people, as we have just recently invited such expression of sentiment. We hope the brethren will not get nervous, and will be a little more discriminating in their judgments. Denunciation, personal epithets and the odium theologicum should indeed be stopped; indeed it should have never been regarded; but the kind and deliberate discussion of this important issue is exceedingly timely, and this is the only kind of discussion we propose in The Christian-Evangelist. Time was when our people, generally, thought that they were assisting in "carrying out the great commission" by pleading for Christian union. We hope that time has not entirely passed. There has been no proposition before us coming from the religious world one-half so important in its bearing on the subject of Christian union as the action of the New York conference, and it deserves dignified and fraternal consideration. So far as The Christian-Evangelist is concerned it is determined that it shall receive such consideration.

To the Men of the St. Louis Churches.

Under the auspices of the Business Men's Association of the Christian churches a banquet of the St. Louis chapters will be held at the Planters Hotel on Monday evening, April 2. Mr. J. Breckenridge Jones will be the toast-master and the chief speaker on the occasion will be Dr. E. L. Powell, of Louisville, Ky. Brother Powell is known to be one of our first-rank speakers, and his annual banquets in Louisville have become an institution in that city an invitation to which is eagerly coveted. At the last one held in February more than five hundred men attended and the "Courier-Journal" gave a four-column report. Among the other speakers will be Mr. Johns, the managing editor of the "Post-Dispatch" of this city. It is hoped that there will be a very large attendance of the men of the churches of St. Louis and district. All are invited. The expense will be $1 a plate. Those who can attend should send their names at once to Mr. Harry K. Lange, Frisco building.

The General Board meeting of the St. Louis City Missionary Society of the Christian churches will be held on Thursday, April 12, at 8 p. m., at the First Christian Church. All the members of the official boards of the several churches, together with the presidents of all the auxiliary societies of the said churches, are members of this board, and these are urged to attend this meeting as well as all who are interested in city missions. No pledges will be asked, and no collection taken, but a good program will be provided. The members of the St. Louis churches, in view of the fall campaign they have decided to enter upon, must begin to formulate plans.

Our Diagram.

Look at it: seventeen black squares, when there ought not to be one. This will be our last report but one, which we will make about April 18. It will take us until that time to round up the work at home, and get in the promises of help that are outstanding. We are hoping that many of our brethren will take the offering we have asked them to take the first Sunday night in April, and when we make all of our collections at home and get in these outstanding collections, we will be ready for our last report. We have raised in all $1,300 in cash, and $300 in conditional pledges, making $1,600 in all during the rally. We thank The Christian-Evangelist and all of our friends who have aided us, and we shall ever strive to be worthy of their friendship and assistance. T. N. Kincaid.

As Seen From the Dome.

cate and beautiful architecture, bed rooms and summer rooms, whispering gallery and labyrinth, halls and passage ways, and everywhere the words of the Koran: "There is no God but Allah," "There is no conqueror but God," "Glory be given to our Lord." A veritable Acropolis is this Alhambra at the feet of the snowy "Mountains of the Moon," with the rich vega stretching away, beautiful with streams and vineyards, orchards and orange groves, and looking down upon the once proud city of Granada, which fast crumbles to decay. "A dreamy world, all glimmering to the eye in summer sunshine," but which in moonlight has its supreme spell. Down in the old city is the church where Ferdinand and Isabella lay entombed, a museum of monstrosities, with the sword of Ferdinand, the flags of Castile and Aragon carried in battle with the Moors, the standard worked by Isabella, which was hoisted over Granada after the victory, the casket now empty which contained the famous jewels, and the two bulks of lead with simple letters "F." and "I," which mark all that is left of the conqueror as the glorious sun-swept ruin on the hill marks all that is left of the conquered.

What a fascinating chapter in the world's history closes when Boabdil reins in his horse at Padul on a spur of the Alpujarras and looks back and sighs, "Allahu Akbar," "God is most great!" No country in Europe had approached the cultured dominion of the Moors. For centuries Spain had been the center of civilization; the seat of the arts and sciences. It shines for a little time under Ferdinand and Isabella, like the moon, with a borrowed light, then comes eclipse—barrenness, where the Moslem grew his vines, olives and yellow corn; ignorance, where wit and learning had flourished; stagnation in place of progress. Boabdil crosses into Africa, and his descendants are beggars.

But one does not need to see Granada to know the Moor. After all, it is doubtful if the Alhambra in its decay is as good an exhibition of their art and architecture as one sees in Seville in the Alcazar and the Giralda. It is magnificent and kept in a state of repair. The Alcazar or palace of the Moorish and Spanish kings, with its gardens, is an Oriental dream. It is soon to be occupied by the young king and his bride on their honeymoon, and it is worthy.

The goat and the mule seem to be animals of Spain. An interesting custom in Granada is the driving of the goats morning and evening through the streets to deliver fresh milk to the customers. The goats are milked en route. A small pail is let down from an upper story by a cord, money is taken out and replaced by milk and the goats are driven to the next door. What advantages over the Washington way! No rattle and bang of wagons and milk cans in the early morning to disturb the sleeper, fresh milk for the babies and no chance for the milkman to patronize the pump!

After all, there is nothing we have seen in Spain upon which the Dome does not look down. Even the Giralda tower, a fair copy of which one sees on Madison Square Garden, in New York, is beneath the Dome. Old Glory and Washington before any castles in Spain.

To Southern Illinois Ministers.

The annual meeting of the Christian Ministerial Association of Southern Illinois (seventh and eighth districts) will convene at Albion, Edwards county, May 8-10, 1906. An unusually good program is in course of preparation. At least two of our strongest representative brethren from outside these districts are expected to give addresses. It is earnestly hoped that each minister in southern Illinois will plan to be at every session of this meeting. Come early and stay late. Brethren who have recently moved into the district are requested to forward their names and addresses at once. CASPAR C. GARRIGUES, Sec.-Treas.

Another Generous Gift.

R. M. Snyder, of Kansas City, has just pledged $500 to the permanent fund, conditioned on the whole $15,000 being raised by July 1, 1906. This makes now $8,000 of the amount needed. I am working on the plan of getting one hundred pledges of $100 each. We have just one-half of this number; fifty more must be found in the next three months, or the $5,000 of R. A. Long, and some of the other money pledged, becomes lost to our state work. We have sent out nearly 100 letters to brethren and sisters throughout the state asking for $100 each. We are anxiously looking for the answers to these letters. Every favorable answer now will secure others. Nothing succeeds like success. Remember it is not necessary that you pay the money now; we are receiving obligations running over a series of years. Can't you give to this fund? T. A. ABBOTT.

Rapid Growth in the New Country.

Our cause is advancing at Enid, Okla., where Scott Anderson and his faithful wife are held in the highest esteem. Since January more than 25 have been added to the membership, and our large church building will hardly accommodate those desirous of attending the Sunday evening services. The Endeavor Society has increased from a membership of 30 to more than 100. The Sunday-school has taken on new life, and a canvass of the city is soon to be made for the purpose of enrolling all the young people who are not yet members. Efforts are being made to clear the building of debt, and when this is consummated there will be rejoicing in Enid and rapid growth in spirituality and good works among our own members. The appreciation of Brother and Sister Anderson was manifested a short time ago in some valuable gifts from the members of the church.

L. E. Boyer.

Three Wonderful Books!

I announce to all preachers and scholars that I have ready for delivery three of the most remarkable books of modern times. The first is called "The Blue and The Gray," written in argumentative verse, to give the true cause of the war, to show the negro is under a curse, and that giving him the franchise was an infringement of the Bible. The other two books are "Sermons" written to show that original Christianity is the only true religion. To trace God's church from Jerusalem to the present day. To explain and identify all the "beasts" and "harlots" of the Rev. of John. To show that life is the result of organism and begins with a birth in nature and in grace. Many other difficult subjects explained. These books are called: "Diamonds of truth from beginning to end." The author is aware they will do a world of good and is selling the three for $1. No preacher, no scholar, in fact no one, should fail to send for these three boks. Address J. A. Cunningham, Tupelo, Miss. References to churches given when wanted.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Cincinnati Letter.

The foreign missionary rally for Cincinnati and vicinity, held in the Central Church, was by far the most largely attended of all the foreign rallies in this city, and the enthusiasm was never greater. The addresses were full of inspiration, instruction and encouragement. Mrs. Lillie W. Molland of China spoke both in the morning and afternoon on the work and needs of China. She brings a message that stirs the hearts of God's people to a burning desire to do greater things for missions. The educational influence of the returned missionary certainly can not be estimated. Let us pray that God will help us to wisely apply the lessons they bring us.——The church at Harrison has enjoyed a splendid meeting in which Frank Thomas, of the Little Flat Rock Church, Rush county, Ind., did the preaching. There were 24 added. Brother Thomas' work as an evangelist was very satisfactory to the brethren at Harrison. H. W. Milner, the new minister there, is already greatly loved by his people.——The Mount Healthy Church has also enjoyed a good meeting, 14 being added. The pastor, S. Boyd White, did the preaching.——Richmond Street Church has employed a minister in the person of a Brother Thompson, of Missouri.

Baltimore Notes.

The Christian Temple has passed its first anniversary and the report was $10,137 raised and 113 persons added to the church. The Bible school has an enrollment of 397, with an average attendance of 340. We have seven Chinese in the school. When the temple work began, something over a year ago, we decided to keep our old church—Calhoun street—as a mission station, instead of selling it. Although we needed the money from the sale, yet after careful consideration, we decided that Baltimore needed another life saving station more than we needed the money, and so, with assistance from our home board, that work was set up and Bro A. F. Reiter is doing good service there. The temple has its building only half completed. Its main structure has not been erected, only the chapel, which is a three-story stone building, with seating capacity about 500. This, with the lot, cost $25,000, and it is one of the handsomest chapels in the city, but already we are overcrowded. If our audiences are to be accommodated we must face the new necessity of going ahead to complete our building. Our first move was a great undertaking, and this is greater, but doubtless for the good of our work it will have to be done. Our plan now is for a building to seat 1,800 or 2,000. The Temple Seminary has been doing good work this session. This three years' study of the Bible has been one of the greatest fascinations in our work. Teaching is neglected too much. The ministry owes it to the flock, the Christians to their new converts, to teach them the Word of God. It takes time, but it pays. It calls for work, but it means better service. Every church ought to be a school and there would be fewer Christians going back into the world.

C. M. Kreidler is having constant additions at Twenty-fifth Street Church. About 35 persons have taken membership there since he came on Nov. 1. B. A. Abbott had five baptisms at Harlem Avenue Church in January. Bro. H. Randall Lookabill is preparing for an evangelistic meeting this month at Fulton Avenue Church. The rebuilding of Randall Street Church has been started, the church extension board having granted the loan to save the building, which is about the only thing there so far as a church is concerned, but a great population surrounding it makes it one of the best fields in our city.

The Baptistry of the Baltimore Temple.

I am back from a three weeks' meeting with E. B. Bagby, at Ninth Street Church, Washington, already reported in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. It is always pleasant to be in a work with this excellent minister and energetic people. Brother Bagby's fifteen years' ministry in the capital city has been attended with unusual heavenly favors. His church has over 1,100 members and is still growing.

Baltimore, Md. Peter Ainslie.

Indianapolis Letter.

The Indianapolis Christian Ministers' Association meets at 10:30 a. m. every Monday, except the first in the month, at the Century Club room, in the Denison House. Visiting brethren are always cordially welcomed.——D. R. Lucas reports 40 additions, as the result of a short meeting with home forces at the Seventh church.——At Hillside church O. E. Tomes, the pastor, recently held a ten days' meeting with 20 additions.——F. P. Smith has had an almost continual revival at West Park since Jan. 1, with 56 additions. He condcuted special services during four weeks. Their new building was dedicated March 4, with L. I. Mercer, of Hoopeston, Ill., in charge.——A work which seems to be exerting much influence for good, is the men's meeting, held on Sunday afternoons at the English Opera House, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. Recently the service was in Tomlinson Hall and Senator Beveridge spoke on "Washington," to 3,700 men, while more than 1,500 more could not gain entrance.——Indianapolis bids a hearty welcome to the "Congress of Disciples," which is to convene at the Central Church, April 25-27.——It is not too early to note that the state missionary convention will be held with the church at Lafayette, May 15-17, and it is not too late to take an offering for state missions and swell the growing list of churches contributing to that important work.

F. W. Norton.

Southwest Missouri Notes.

All eyes in these parts are now beginning to turn to our coming district convention at Marionville, May 7-10. A great feast is being prepared by the executive committee.——J. W. Baker, our Jasper county evangelist, has just closed a great meeting at Carl Junction with 69 added and W. C. Willey, of Opolis, Kan., located there to preach three Sundays per month. L. D. Sprague assisted a part of the time in song service. Brother Baker is now at Purcell, where we hope a similar work may be done. With last year's meeting at Woodbine Valley, where in ten days 31 were added; Duenweg, with 32 added in 18 days; Diamond this year, where in three weeks 72 were added, followed by Carl Junction's victory, it looks like we are developing a full-fledged evangelist.——Our First Church, Joplin, not only continues their support of Justin E. Brown in China, but went a hundred over for good measure. Carthage and the other churches in the county also will support their own "living link." Our next forward step in this city is city missions. Easter Sunday is set for the opening of some new points.

Joplin, Mo. W. F. Turner.

EASTER GLORY!

A beautiful exposition of the ministries of the National Benevolent Association of the Christian Church. This service will be sent free to all Bible schools that will present it and send the offering to the National treasury for the care of the hundreds of helpless ones in our Hospitals, Old People's Homes and Orphanages. Jesus said, "Whatsoever ye do unto the least of these, even so ye do unto me." The Benevolent Association was the first of our church societies to adopt Easter as the time for offerings. Each of them has an undivided Day for missions. This Association should have at least one undivided Day for this Gospel of the Helping Hand. Order supplies at once.

903 Aubert Ave., St. Louis.

Nebraska.

N. T. Harmon assisted F. G. Hamm in a meeting at Blair. There were 50 additions, all but four or five being adults. The property there has been much improved during the winter.——J. W. Walker and E. C. Tuckerman held a meeting at Miller and gathered the Disciples together, adding 2 by baptism and 6 that were formerly members elsewhere. This puts Miller in the active list again. Brother Walker will give them part time.——As a result of a union meeting at Edgar 50 have been added to the Christian church. B. H. Coonradt is the pastor. He went into a meeting in the Christian church following.——R. D. McCance held a few weeks' meeting at Fairview church, north of Elm Creek, where J. W. Walker gives part time, having six baptisms and two reclaimed.——B. H. Whiston held a short meeting at Norman, resulting in 14 baptisms and 1 otherwise.——The Hamilton meeting at Hastings resulted in 131 additions to that church. It was a great meeting. H. S. Gilliam had prepared the way and was an untiring factor in the meeting, with his excellent wife.——The Putman-Egbert meeting at Nelson closed with 26 baptisms, 13 statements and 1 reclaimed. This church is seeking to locate a good man as pastor.——Four recent additions to the Clay Center church, where A. G. Smith ministers. Three confessions at Humboldt, Bert Wilson, pastor. One by letter and one from Baptists at North Bend, J. B. White, pastor. Two added at Ashland recently, J. E. Cressmer, minister. Two by letter at First Church, Lincoln. N. S. Haynes is the minister.

We are losing some good men and getting some others who are well commended to us. C. V. Allison, of Cozad, has accepted a call to the work at Mound City, Mo. B. B. Titus, of Lexington, will go to Longmont, Col., about April 1. Stephen J. Epler, a post-graduate student of Cotner, has accepted a call to Brooklyn, Ia. Brother Epler is one of our brightest young men. T. C. McIntire has located at Ansley. J. A. McIntire, his brother, has accepted a call to the Grand Island work. A. O. Adams has resigned at Overton and may move to Bethany for work in Cotner. J. B. White has resigned at North Bend, to take effect April 1. H. J. Young has accepted a call to a California church, so the exchanges have it.

Elder L. J. Correll, one of our veteran preachers, has been called from labor to reward. He fell asleep at Arnold and was buried there, D. A. Youtzy, of Plattsmouth, preaching the sermon.

The district conventions will soon be the regular order. No. 1 begins at Tecumseh the first week in April.

It is with joy that we can report the Harvard church as having definitely taken up a living link missionary for Nebraska, dating his work from Jan. 1. R. F. Whiston has been named as such missionary and has already added a new congregation of 50 members to the list. V. E. Shirley is the pastor at Harvard and has been working at this matter for some time. The state board agrees to keep Brother Whiston in the field for nine months for the sum of $300, payable quarterly. This is the kind of work that will make our centennial at Pittsburg a great one in the truest sense. We can safely now look forward to seeing Nebraska absolutely divorced from any financial help from without, and still doing a greater and greater work.

Another of our larger churches is contemplating an advance in the way of supporting a special missionary in the homeland, though not in Nebraska.

The new church alluded to above is at Mitchell. Brother Whiston has built a good, sound congregation there, and the work looks bright. He will be at Gering when this is read.

Z. O. Doward has moved to Lincoln and will take charge of the East Side church April 1. W. A. Baldwin.

Lincoln, Neb.

Kentucky.

The twenty-eighth annual convention of the Kentucky Young Men's Christian Association was held in Lexington, with a large attendance and a number of splendid addresses.——Barclay Meador has resigned as assistant minister of the Central Church, Lexington, to become assistant to W. F. Richardson, in Kansas City. He has done a splendid work in Lexington, and his going away is universally regretted.——Arrangements are being made for a "home-coming week" for all graduates of the Kentucky Female Orphan School of Louisville, immediately following the commencement exercises the latter part of May.——James Small is announced to assist C. J. Armstrong in a meeting with the Winchester church in May.——P. A. Cave, of Richmond, Va., has accepted a call to the church at Maysville, where he will begin work about April 1. We are glad to welcome him to Kentucky.——The work at Frankfort is prospering under the leadership of C. R. Hudson.——We are glad to report 12 additions at regular services here during the past few weeks. Geo. W. Kemper.

A Word from Massachusetts.

We have been making history in the introduction of the work here. The first preaching service was held in South Framingham on July 30 of last year. We began with only five members at the Hollis Street Church of Christ. There have been six confessions and five baptisms to date, and our membership is now 21. This is not a large showing, but an explanation of the exact situation here would reveal it as an encouraging sign of future prosperity. Our new church building was dedicated in January. This city of 10,000 population is a growing business center, and the board has made no mistake in selecting it as a field for permanent work. I may add that the board thought it wise to permit me to respond to an appeal for help from a good Free Baptist brother in New Hampshire. Commencing Feb. 12 we held evangelistic services for two weeks, resulting in six confessions and a renewal of their church covenant on the part of several. I believe the courtesy extended to these Baptist brethren will not lose its fruitage. H. H. Cushing.

FREE TO THE RUPTURED

in the same simple, easy and certain way that a mason bricks up an opening in a wall. When I say cure, I do not mean simply hold, but a Cure that stays cured and does away with the use of all trusses forever. I have cured thousands upon thousands of ruptures and am curing them every day of 30 and 50 years' standing, and have yet to see the case I could not cure. My 25 years' experience and unexcelled facilities enable me to do more for ruptured people than any other living man can possibly do.

To prove to you and your ruptured friends that my Method is a sure Cure for every kind of rupture, I want you to give it an honest test without one cent expense to yourself. Do not send any money. Simply send me the location and size of your rupture, so I can give you special directions for curing it. Remember, there is no operation, no pain, no danger, no loss of time. This remarkable free offer is the fairest ever made. For quick relief and a Radical Cure, address Dr. W. S. Rice, 95 Main Street, Adams, N. Y.

Scoville at Connersville, Ind.

The meeting at the First Christian Church in this city has continued with tremendous interest from the start. The Anderson people came over on a specially chartered train, conducted by the traveling passenger agent of the Big Four lines. He and his wife were two of the converts at the Anderson meeting. Half of the confessions that night were from Anderson and half of them from Connersville. There have been delegations from Brookville, Laurel and other towns south, and from Rushville and Midland, and smaller crowds from several places on the Chicago, Hamilton and Dayton.

There has been a large number of ministers who have visited the meetings, including Bro. Bruce Brown, of Mansfield, O., who was here three days, and A. L. Crim, of Crawfordsville, the singing evangelist, Frank C. Huston, and Mr. Tapp and also James Small and a great many pastors throughout this portion of the state.

We had 65 added here Sunday—44 at the night service; nearly all confessions. Although this town has but 8,000 inhabitants and the building will accommodate only a little more than half as many as the Anderson church, yet we have had 382 added here in the first 22 days, and we had only 347 at Anderson in the same length of time.

My time here will be limited, but this could be made one of the greatest meetings ever held in the brotherhood. Two different tracts on baptism have been scattered throughout the town, through the mails and other ways, but the mighty work goes on.

Brother Smith returned last Friday, and will go on to New York next Wednesday and start the meeting there. Mr. and Mr. Percy M. Kendall have been with us in this meeting. Mr. Kendall has had charge of the chorus work, and does much outside work for the meeting, and Mrs. Kendall has nobly seconded him in his every effort. They are Christian workers out and out and through and through. It is our intention to let them precede us a week or ten days in each meeting, and thus save much time, and we will be able to hold more meetings each year, and thus do a larger work for the King and kingdom.

No doubt more people could be reached here in one week, or at Anderson, in one week, than we shall be able to reach in New York City in five weeks; but our people have neglected the great cities too long. Our plants in the cities are too small, and do not represent us. With a great church building and a great membership in any city, we could do to-day in the great cities what the sects are not doing. For years I have lived in a city, and I know. The hour has come for men of wealth and power to stand back of the Home Missionary Society and take these great centers for Christ.

I have returned to Anderson each Monday night with 37, 31 and 27 added, and by a unanimous vote they have asked me to come and stay ten days before going to New York. A petition from the board was sent to the New York church, but, like all other churches, they have refused.

In all my experience in evangelism there has been but one church which permitted me to remain in a ripe field when I had made a definite date. That was the Centerville (Ia.) church.

Brother Burkhart, the pastor here, is an indefatigable worker, and not only tireless, but fearless, in his proclamation of the truth. His three years of sowing and erecting this new building had made possible this campaign.

This is the year for evangelism. This is the moment for every church in the brotherhood to make the greatest possible effort. The field is ripe. Let us go in and possess the land. I absolutely believe it is possible for every church in the brotherhood to double its membership this year if the greatest possible effort is made, and every brother and sister is enlisted.

Why not, in asking great things of God, attempt great things for him? "If God is your partner, plan great things for your life."—Charles Reign Scoville.

Another Great Meeting in Oklahoma.

J. D. Lawrence, the living link missionary in Oklahoma, has just closed a most successful meeting at Quinlan, Okla. There were 52 immersions and 43 received otherwise. Many of those making the confession were heads of families, and among them were some of the leading business men of the place. Four good centrally located church lots were donated and the church building is now being erected.

This is the third meeting held by Brother Lawrence since entering upon this work, Dec. 1, as the living link of The Christian-Evangelist. In these meetings he has had 172 additions. His field of labor is Woodward and Beaver counties, the extreme western portion of Oklahoma. His aim is to organize the cause in this new country. Already he has organized three churches in as many months. Nowhere can as large results be accomplished with a small effort as in Oklahoma.—J. M. Monroe, Corresponding Secretary.

The Woodward Victory.

The Spicer-Douthit revival closed at Woodward, Okla., March 1. The meetings continued five weeks. One hundred and eighteen were added to the church by statement, by confession and from the other denominations. The membership of the church was quadrupled during the revival. The forty-four names on the church roll have been increased to one hundred and sixty-two.

E. V. Spicer and E. M. Douthit make a strong team. Brother Douthit's singing drives many truths home that oratory can not. For twenty years he has been one of the most popular song evangelists of the southwest.

Brother Spicer's preaching turned this part of the world upside down. He is a man of wonderful natural ability, added to which is a college training—he is one of McGarvey's old pupils—and a broad experience. He spoke as a master in Israel, as one having authority. Many people say that they learned more about the Bible from hearing him preach a few times than they had learned in their whole life before. He is pronounced by the Woodward people as being the most able speaker who has visited the city. The evangelists did their part well, but there were other factors that helped bring results. First, we had a good church home. Second, we had a large Sunday-school to work on. Hon. Dick T. Morgan is the superintendent of this Sunday-school. Under his efficient management this has become the largest Sunday-school in the county. Third, we had been planning, praying, working, looking, talking for this revival for a long time. Fourth, the meetings were well advertised. We believe in using printer's ink; we believe that modern methods must be used in taking the old story to men or in bringing them to the place where the old story is preached. We used posters, cards, badges, bulletin boards and newspapers in heralding the coming of the evangelists, and in keeping the people in touch with the revival. The result was we had a crowded house every service, often overflow crowds. The Lord has prospered the work at Woodward during the last few months. I came here fresh from college, in July, 1904. I found a struggling, homeless congregation of about 20 members, mostly women—women who were poor in purse, but rich in faith and love for the cause. The Sunday-school met sometimes in the court house, sometimes in the halls; there were about 25 pupils enrolled. Things have changed. We now have the finest and best furnished church building, the largest Sunday-school and the strongest church membership of any church in the whole county.—Ed S. McKinney, Minister.

CHRISTIAN CHURCH AT WOODWARD, OKLA.

Mishawaka (Ind.) Meetings.

We began our preliminary services for the evangelistic campaign Jan. 1. The protracted effort opened Sunday, Jan. 28. During the preliminary effort 8 were added, and in the 26 days of the meeting proper 96 more. Of these, 66 came by primary confession and obedience, 24 from various denominations, also by confession—some had been immersed—and 14 by letter or statement. Total, 104. Eighty-six were immersed. Some special features of the meetings: (1) They were conducted almost entirely by home forces; I did all the preaching and the choir of the church the singing, save upon two occasions, when the chorus choir of the Westminster Presbyterian Church, of South Bend, came over in a body and afforded a delightful illustration of "federation." This may be termed feature No. 2, and includes as well the service of Mr. L. C. Whitcomb, of South Bend, the director of the choir mentioned, who ably conducted the singing for the last two weeks of the meeting. (3) Nearly all the converts were adults, there being but 12 under the age of 18, and in nearly every case where a wife made the good confession the husband came with her—in several instances whole families united in deciding for God and his Christ. Among those baptized were three persons over 60 years of age—two women and one man. (4) Four pronounced infidels gave themselves unreservedly to the Lord and are now among the most enthusiastic of our new children in Christ. (5) Ten denominations were represented among those who decided to become "Christians only," as follows: Methodist Episcopal, 6; United Brethren, 2; Baptist, 3; Presbyterian, 4; Roman Catholic, 3; Dunkard, 1; New Light, 1; Evangelical, 2; Congregational, 1; Friend, 1. Here is a striking example of Christian unity, if you please. These found that they could unite in Christ without sacrificing anything but tradition. There are others very near the kingdom; the Lord will give them to us before long. The future is very bright. The church is greatly strengthened in every way, more especially along spiritual lines. "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."—Edward O. Tilburn, Minister.

Convention Year in Greater San Francisco.

The year 1905 will always be remembered by the churches clustering about the great Bay of San Francisco, and by the whole Pacific coast as well, as "convention year." If I mistake not, that gathering has not only left its mark upon our minds and hearts, but upon our work as well. We no longer toil lonesomely. We feel the heart throb from beyond the mountains; we have been set on fire by the kindling enthusiasm of our whole brotherhood stirring into mighty activities on the eve of our centennial.

The year 1905 was a good year with all our churches. The Berkeley congregation, struggling under the burden of debt incurred in the building of their handsome church, went into the year with splendid determination to succeed, and they succeeded. We have to-day a well-established congregation that will in a few years become one of the strongest in the state. The beloved E. W. Darst, hero of many a victory for the Master in the planting of a city church, has been compelled to give up the Berkeley work. After the necessary rest, we hope to see him once more in the harness, and this time as our city missionary, whose business it will be to superintend and develop our present mission points and plant others in the rapidly growing centers about the Bay of San Francisco. A mission point has already been opened in Loren, in South Berkeley, where Brother Cartwright, of Oregon, has been doing faithful work for some months.

The Oakland church, under the able preaching of Thomas A. Boyer, is being led successfully toward the position we ought to occupy in that city of 100,000 people. Brother Boyer is recognized as one of the most eloquent preachers in a city whose churches have always been blessed with strong pulpiteers. The past year is doubtless the best in the history of our work in Oakland. The congregation now numbers nearly 450, and on Sunday nights the pastor speaks to from 600 to 800 people. During the year the church purchased at a cost of $12,000 the best lot in the city of Oakland for a downtown church, and is making heroic sacrifices to make the payments upon it.

At Richmond, H. J. Loken and the Christian Church continue to grow in the hearts of the people. The Sunday-school is a very large one, considering the church membership, and the future of this work seems assured.

The church at Alameda closed the year 1905 with a sigh. The first six months resulted in 45 baptisms at regular services; congregations were large, and the much needed new building seemed in sight. The long standing debt to the Church Extension Board incurred in 1896 had been paid. The way seemed clear for a positive advance; but in July the pastor was stricken with inflammatory rheumatism and for the better part of four months he was unable to perform his duties. The church during this period enjoyed the ministrations of J. M. Rudy, of Sedalia, Mo., in a season of revival, while such men as A. C. McKeever, A. M. Elston, Hiram Van Kirk, Daniel Stewart, S. C. Garrison and Brother Cartwright filled the pulpit weekly. The people enjoyed this feast of good preaching beyond measure. Without the presence of a resident pastor, forward work was, of course, impossible. Now, the pastor being restored to health, it is a relief to turn with new hope into another year.

In San Francisco we have two strong churches and two flourishing missions. Frank Stewart Ford is in his twelfth year at the First Church. His labor is one of peace and joy and love and hope. Brother Ford is studiously enthusiastic and enthusiastically studious. In being introduced at a little gathering in the city one night recently to say a fw words, he announced: "I didn't come down here just to make a talk; I have something to say." That was entirely characteristic of the man. He has something to say, and he says it, and the work of God grows and prospers under his hand.

At Twenty-fourth and Castro streets, in San Francisco, we have a mission little more than a year old, neatly housed in a chapel owned by the mission, seating about 100 persons, and located on leased land. This mission was organized by P. Brett Morgan and is now shepherded by Otto B. Irelan. Brother Irelan is a young man, who has just consecrated himself to the ministry of Jesus Christ, and already his work is bearing fruit. The church membership doubled in the first four months of his pastorate.

At Tenth avenue, south of Golden Gate Park, our other mission in San Francisco is located. Here we have a church of 50 members, comfortably housed in a well equipped building, costing $6,000. L. E. Scott, late of Colorado and Minnesota, is the pastor. He has a warm place in the hearts of his people.

The West Side Christian Church is presided over by Robert Lord Cave. Brother Cave is a young man, who has recently come to San Francisco. He has behind him a record of 10 or 12 years of successful work in the ministry in the east, and comes in the prime of his young manhood to lift up his voice for God and Jesus Christ in the great city by the Golden Gate. The man who takes up the work laid down by Walter M. White, as does Brother Cave, has no easy task before him; but Brother Cave impresses us all as a man of unflinching courage, as well as one of kindly heart and real devotion. His congregation report themselves as delighted with his preaching and his personality, while they say very enthusiastic things about his wife; hence, the way seems open for him to do a great and laudable work in his new field.

The church at Palo Alto has enjoyed the ministrations of Charles L. Beal for the past two years, and is doing good work. We expect to have a large and influential church in this famous college town.

The hardest thing the churches of California were compelled to suffer in 1905 was the loss of Walter Madison White, for six years pastor of the West Side Christian Church, and for the same length of time a sweet and inspiring influence to all our work in northern California. While Brother White was with the West Side church it grew to be one of our greatest churches and dedicated to the service of God a building costing $45,800, which is one of the most perfectly appointed in San Francisco. Brother White was as much loved outside of our own church as within it. He served for two years as state president of the Interdenominational Sunday-School Association, and was much esteemed by people of all classes in San Francisco. He was a faithful preacher of the Word of God, and a true pastor to his people. His best qualities, however, were his remarkably winning personality and his administrative ability. How much of this he had none knew until the work of entertaining the international convention of 1905 was entered upon. At first we were amazed at the enormity of our task, but Walter M. White was chosen chairman of the committee of arrangements, and soon all felt the touch of a master hand. Order began to come out of chaos; intelligent planning took the place of doubts. The rest is known to the whole world. The few and weak churches about the bay, led by this prince of workers, entertained the great convention in a manner of which we are not ashamed to boast.

Then long-armed Burris A. Jenkins reached out here, and Walter M. White went home, to be the secretary of his alma mater, Kentucky University. We let him go, as we Californians do not wish to be niggardly with our good things. You people of the east have a great man in your midst.

Sure of Its Victims.

Dr. D. M. Bye, of Indianapolis, Ind., the great cancer specialist, who has cured over six thousand cases of cancer within the last 12 years with soothing, balmy oils, says that one time he selected a list of five hundred names of persons who had written to him relative to taking treatment, but who, from some cause, had neglected to do so, and wrote to them several months later inquiring after their condition. To his surprise and grief he learned that nearly twenty per cent had died within five months from the time they had written their letters of inquiry. If left to itself cancer is always sure of its victim. A book on cancer sent free to those interested. Address DR. D. M. BYE CO., Drawer 105, Dept. 411, Indianapolis, Ind.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh.

Here is a Simple, Quick, Effective way and COSTS NOTHING—Send for it and see.

Those who suffer with it know well the miseries of catarrh. There is just one thing to do—have it cured. It can be done. To prove it to you, send your address and the means of a quick and safe cure will be sent to your home free in every way. The idea in giving it to you free is to prove to you that there is a home cure for catarrh, scratchy throat, asthma, stopped-up feeling in the nose and throat, catarrhal headaches, constant spitting, catarrhal deafness, etc., etc., and that the remedy that does it is the invention of Dr. J. W. Blosser, the eminent southern doctor and minister, who has for over 31 years been identified with the cure of catarrh in all its forms.

His discovery is unlike anything you ever had before, as it is not a spray, douche, ointment, atomizer, salve, cream, or any such thing, but a genuine tried-and-true cure that clears out the head, nose, throat and lungs so that you can again breathe the free air and sleep without that choky, spitting feeling that all catarrh sufferers have. It will save the wear-and-tear of internal medicines that only ruin the stomach. It will prevent colds and heal up the mucous membranes so that you will not be constantly blowing your nose and spitting.

If you have never tried Dr. Blosser's discovery and know that you need such a cure, and want to make a trial of it without cost, send your address to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 475 Walton Street, Atlanta, Ga., and a thorough free trial treatment and also an elaborately illustrated booklet, "Plain Facts About Catarrh," will be sent you at once, free, so that you can begin to cure yourself privately at home.

Now write him immediately.

We go to Iowa for our next meeting.—Lawrence Wright.

Silex, March 21.—We have just concluded a 24 days' meeting, held in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, which resulted in an organization of 89 charter members. We go next to Durham to organize another church.—C. O. McFarland and Wife, State Evangelists.

Brookfield, March 21.—A three weeks' meeting, conducted by our pastor, R. E. L. Prunty, has just closed with 18 additions.

St. Joseph, March 24.—Our three weeks' meeting, conducted by home forces, closed with 68 additions.—C. M. Chilton, Minister.

Salisbury, March 24.—There have been 12 additions at Sturgeon recently—7 by baptism and 5 otherwise; also two confessions at Triplett. The work is prospering at both places, at each of which I preach half-time. Sturgeon recently had the largest Bible school for twenty-five years.—W. D. McCulley.

New York.

Buffalo, March 18.—Two additions since last report—1 by confession.—B. S. Ferrall.

North Tonawanda, March 20.—We observed decision day Sunday at the Christian Tabernacle. There were 22 additions.—W. C. Bower.

Ohio.

Cleveland, March 18.—Closed a three weeks' meeting with the West Madison Avenue Church, resulting in 17 additions. Kalamazoo, Mich., next.—J. S. Raum.

Findlay, March 16.—Our meeting at the First Church closed, with 74 accessions—more than 60 by confession.—R. A. Omer.

Marion, March 19.—One confession at the Central Church; good attendance and interest; outlook bright for a successful dedication and a great meeting.—O. D. Maple, Pastor.

Oregon.

LaGrande, March 16.—T. S. Handsaker and wife assisted us in a recent meeting which resulted in 26 additions—13 by confession. All lines strengthened; support for regular work increased by about $350.—O. H. King.

Philippine Islands.

Vigan, Feb. 6.—Baptisms last week: Two at Suyu, 2 at Bucay, 5 at Bangued.—Hermon P. Williams.

Washington.

Ellensburg, March 19.—Twenty-two added in nine days; great crowds; interest intense. Kellems and Shaffer are the evangelists.—C. H. Hilton.

March Offering.

Rochester, Minn.—Far exceeded apportionment. —Rochester Irwin.

Uniontown, Pa.—Offering $350; we may get more. As a living link church we want to share both in the work and in the rejoicing over the glowing reports.—J. Walter Carpenter.

Blackwell Okla.—Exceeded apportionment by $12.—Isom Roberts.

Hamilton, O.—The First Church raised $135, and this will be increased.—Wesley Hatcher.

Carrollton, Ill.—Our little church is awakening. Hitherto it has been an effort to reach our apportionment of $20, but this year we raised $32.50.—Mrs. Thomas Henshaw.

Newman, Ill.—Our apportionment was raised $7. We will double it.—O. L. Lyon.

Jasper, Mo.—We raised our greatest offering, $141.95.—O. W. Jones.

East Liverpool, O.—Raised $130; will make it $150. This will be three times our apportionment. Living link next.—E. P. Wise.

Dexter, Mo.—We raised our apportionment of $30.—R. H. Lampkin.

Cynthiana, Ky.—We become a living link and will in the future support our own representative on the foreign field.—W. E. Ellis.

Marshall, Mo.—Our offering was the largest we have ever taken here. It will run considerably over our apportionment—$200. And with our children's day offering we feel quite sure of making our living link in Saline county this year.—B. T. Wharton.

Independence, Mo.—Our offering for foreign and home missions is $1,200—$600 to each, a gain of $300 over last year.—L. J. Marshall.

Arrest It—$50 Reward.

A small sample bottle of Ec-zine will be sent free to every reader of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who is suffering with any kind of skin disease or eruption—Eczema, Blind or Bleeding Piles, Blood Poison, Fever Sores, Milkleg, Cancer, Rheumatic Pains, or any other Germ or Virous disease or sore of any name or nature.

$50 reward will be paid for any case of Eczema that is not promptly cured with Ec-zine. Ec-zine will heal any sore or cure the worst skin and make it look like velvet. Thousands cured daily. Never mind what you have tried; forget the failures made by other remedies, and send for free sample of Ec-zine which always gives relief and permanent cure. A $1.00 bottle often cures the worst cases. Ec-zine is successfully used in hospitals and by physicians generally. It is not a patent medicine. If your druggist does not have Ec-zine send direct to us. State nature of disease and years' standing. Address THE PHYSICIANS LABORATORIES,
E 806 Boyce Building, Chicago, Ill.

Akron, O.—The First Church contributed $845 for foreign missions. This is an advance over last year. However, George Darsie, the pastor, is hoping the church will reach up to $900.

Jacksonville, Ill.—Offering on Sunday for foreign missions, $548; will make it $600 and continue support of Herbert P. Shaw in China.—R. F. Thrapp.

Johnstown, Pa.—The Second Church, Herbert Steed, pastor, gave $14 to foreign missions last year. This year they have gone over $100.

Cameron, W. Va.—The church and Sunday-school has pledged $300 and the other churches in the county hope to raise the remaining $300, and thus provide salary of Mrs. W. E. Erskine at Akita, Japan.—W. E. Pierce, Minister.

Moundsville, W. Va.—Offering over $62. In all probability Marshall county will be a living link.

Eureka, Ill.—Living link amount is assured. This church gave $3,000 to all missions last year, $500 more than to home expenses.—A. W. Taylor.

Harrodsburg, Ky.—Offering, exclusive of Sunday-school and Endeavor Society, will exceed $600. This church has supported its own missionary on the foreign field for several years.—M. G. Buckner, Pastor.

Wellsville, O.—Offering about $100 in cash and pledges. This is a long step forward.—W. C. Prewitt.

Normal, Ill.—Will reach our apportionment; $121.50 in hand.—R. H. Newton.

Rossville, Ill.—Apportionment, $40; offering, $45.—H. H. Peters.

JESUS AND THE SABBATH.
—Matt. 12:1-14.

Memory verses, 7, 8.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Remember the sabbath day, to keep it holy.—Exod. 20:8.

The two incidents of this lesson probably belong to a period earlier than the Sermon on the Mount. Mark and Luke, both of whom record the events, give them in immediate connection with the story of the paralytic let down through the roof, and the discussion about fasting. In all of these we see the beginnings of the clash between Jesus and the professional religionists of his day, the scribes and Pharisees. He had aroused their suspicion and hostility by claiming authority to forgive sins. He had disregarded the custom of fasting, which even the disciples of John practiced as the Pharisees did. And now he makes a new declaration on the subject of the Sabbath.

All of these incidents illustrate what seemed to his contemporaries the ultra-radicalism of Jesus in dealing with the most firmly established religious beliefs and practices of his time. Naturally it aroused antagonism on the part of those who were conservative by habit and training, who were accustomed to look for religious authority only to the remote past, and whose very living depended upon maintaining unshaken the existing order of things.

When Jesus was criticised for allowing his disciples to pluck ears of corn on the Sabbath, on the ground that this act constituted harvesting on a small scale and was, therefore, a violation of the law against working on the Sabbath, he replied by citing Old Testament examples. His critics were ruled by authority, so his first appeal was to authority. David allowed his necessity to excuse a technical violation of the law, and the priests who offer sacrifices in the temple must perform on the Sabbath acts which would not be permissible on any other ground. For example, a priest could lawfully kill an animal for sacrifice, while a person could not kill a beast for food. But, says Jesus, if the law is capable of exceptions in the interest of sacrifice, much more must it be capable of exceptions in the interest of real human needs, for one of the old prophets, speaking in the name of Jehovah, said (Hosea 6:6), "I desire mercy rather than sacrifice."

This argument from precedent and authority was absolutely unanswerable when addressed to the devotees of precedent and authority. But it did not go quite to the bottom of the subject. His opponents silenced by the appeal to their own prophets, he could add the word which was, after all, of more importance: "The Son of man is lord of the sabbath." Christ came in the interest of men. Whatever his work for their sakes requires, that he has full authority to do. No institution, however sound, no observance, however ancient, can be allowed to stand in the way of man's good. Mark quotes him as saying in this connection, by way of further explanation, "The sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath."

The supreme value of man was fundamental to the teaching of Jesus. Others were willing to sacrifice man to religion. Jesus' position was that religion was for man's sake and that religion justified itself as it benefited man. "How much, then, is a man of more value than a sheep," he said, in the next recorded incident, when again accused of profaning the Sabbath by a work of mercy. Its effect upon the welfare of men is the test of the propriety of any course of action.

THE MORNING OF THE RESURRECTION.—John 20:1-18.

Easter sentiments: His life is ours, John 11:25, 26; a home preparing, John 14:1-4; his resurrection our hope, 1 Cor. 15:12-22; we shall not rise as we fall, 1 Cor. 15:37-44; falling asleep in Christ is to awaken in glory, 1 Thes. 4:13-18; the Christian's confidence, 2 Tim. 4:6-8; it is better beyond, Rev. 7:13-17.

We make our cemeteries places of arborescent beauty and florists do what they can to bandage the wounds of death with foliage and make fragrant the parterres and picturesque the approaches, but they would still be places of horror had not the Risen One said: "I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold, I am alive forever more and have the keys of death and the grave!"

That open grave is the center of the world's dominant and only altruistic religious system. From its riven masonry has been built the temple of our faith. Those shattered rocks are become the tombstones of the Christian's hopes. From it proceeds a power that is conclusive proof that its whilom Tenant is nowhere a captive, but must have risen from its depths to a throne of might omnipotent and love divine.

All haggard, weak and broken was Jesus when they placed him in Joseph's tomb, but soon as he emerged he was so ruddy and strong that Mary thought he was the gardener. This is typical of all who now go down into their graves trusting in him. There they leave their spectacles and crutches, lint and bandages and all symbols and realities of weakness and mortality and come forth radiant and strong and fair—immortal.

In other fields we still hold it true that "as a man soweth so shall he also reap." But since earth's first Easter morn this is no longer true of "God's half acre." O blest cemetry fields, ye are thick sown with seeds of immortality! "It is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption: it is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness; it is raised in power: it is sown a natural body: it is raised a spiritual body."

If Jesus was a pretender, those apostles had no possible motive in asserting his resurrection and the divinity it proved, for all their hopes in him hinged on his Messiahship. All other incentives but truth would have broken down under the terrible persecutions they endured because of their testimony to their seeing him alive after his burial. Nothing else but a tomb opened by power they knew divine can account for the marvelous change in the apostles. Peter denied him, all forsook him. Yet soon after the resurrection they could say, "Think ye we should obey men rather than God," and walked to martyrdom as to banquets happy in the thought that soon they would be with the Victor over death and the grave in the home beyond.

None dispute that the tomb was empty that morning, but around the method of its despoliation debate has raged for centuries. That his friends bribed Roman guards to imperil their lives for a peasant's ransom is hardly more satisfactory than the theory that one who was crucified and whose heart was pierced by a Roman spear revived and came forth quietly escaping the sentry and out into obscurity. As well say that while ordinarily stones do not migrate to upper levels, yet in one geological era stones did walk up the summits of the Rockies as to say at any time man was ever resuscitated from such crucifixion as Jesus endured. Angels have given the only rational explanation—sound the musical message the earth around—"He is not here, but is risen as he said."

EATEN OUT OF HOUSE AND HOME.

How a Confirmed Dsypeptic Developed an Appetite Like a Corn-husker's and Cleaned Out Everything in Sight.

The wife of a leading druggist of Des Moines tells how her brother was changed from a dyspeptic without appetite to a prodigious eater.

"My brother, who is a lawyer in Chicago, came to visit me and I hardly knew him on his arrival he was so thin and run down. I had not seen him for years and was much alarmed at his appearance. He told me not to worry as he had been in this condition for years as a result of chronic dyspepsia. I asked him what he had done for it, and he said he had done everything—taken every remedy he had ever heard of and consulted doctors without number, none of them helped him. I asked him if he ever took Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and he said he hadn't and what was more he wouldn't. He had sworn off taking medicine of any kind.

"I had my husband bring home a box from the store and I actually made him take one or two of the tablets after he had eaten. They made him feel so much better that he offered no further objection. He had not taken the one box before he was greatly improved and three or four boxes cured him of dyspepsia and gave him a wonderful appetite. He came near eating us out of house and home. My, but it did me good to see him eat. He gained fifteen pounds before he returned home, and he writes me that he has not been troubled with dyspesia since."

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets actually do the work assigned to them. They relieve weak and overburdened stomachs of their work of digestive action. Their component parts are identical with those of the digestive fluids and secretions of the stomach and they simply take up the grind and carry on the work just the same as a good, strong, healthy stomach would do it.

On this account Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are perfectly natural in their action and effects. They do not cause any unnatural or violent disturbance in the stomach or bowels. They themselves digest the food and supply the system with all the nourishment contained in what is eaten and carry out Nature's plans for the sustenance and maintenance of the body.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, by thus relieving the stomach of its work, enable it to recuperate and regain its normal health and strength. Nature repairs the worn and wasted tissues just as she heals and knits the bone of a broken limb, which is of course not used during the process of repair.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are for sale by all druggists at 50 cents a box. One box will frequently effect a perfect cure.

OUR PLEDGE, AND HOW TO KEEP IT.

—Matt. 28:20; Eccl. 5:1-7; Ps. 51:6.

| S. Topic. | |

Without pledges and their sacredness universal anarchy would prevail at once. Business, society, statecraft, friendships, love, marriage, home and all our worthy institutions are founded upon them and held together by them. Let us examine ourselves lest our objection is based upon the content of the pledge rather than upon the principle of pledging.

Admittedly, faithful observance of our pledge has no provisions for slothfulness; it requires we be diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. The flesh will war upon this discipline and the spirit of communities where our lot may be cast may militate against it, but over all opposition, carnal and psychological we can triumph, for He is our helper—"Lo, I am with you even unto the end of the world."

Our pledge contains no new vows. All we find therein is involved in our self-consecration upon becoming Christians. Our pledge is like the proverbial string about our finger to remind us of some commission. We must perform the duties enumerated in the pledge, not because they are there but because they are essential to our growth in grace and acceptance with the Father and would be even if we had no pledge.

The pledge does not instruct us in righteousness but is constantly suggestive of it. It is a voice pleading with us to do right and it is a record of what noble men and women in their best moments have said is right. When we fall below its standard we are indulging in what they believe to be sins of omission. When we zealously go beyond mere conformity to its requirements, we are abounding in righteousness.

That evil one who told Eve that she would not surely die if she partook of the forbidden fruit, still malignant and more insidious, tells us it is not necessary for us to read our Bible, and pray every day and wait constantly upon all the ordinances of the Lord's house. But the more he tries to deceive, the closer we will hold to the spirit of our pledge and the next historian of the conflict between man and satan will write of a Paradise Regained instead of Paradise Lost.

Many are sighing for the culture and power to be derived from the college curriculum. A higher culture and nobler power are the reward of those who will read the Bible and pray every day, attend all the Lord's day and midweek services of their church and amid all the circumstances of life do in every particular what they believe Jesus would approve. The pledge is not a mill stone to weight down into servitude but rather a lode stone drawing us up into a higher and freer life.

One of the surprising "adaptations of conscience" to the caprice of our youth is the facility with which an enthusiastic Endeavorer, who has been urging loyalty to "the endeavor idea" and to the pledge that says "I will attend all the Sunday and midweek services of my own church," will go directly from that meeting and spend the remainder of the evening at a social gathering amid gayety and religious indifference utterly regardless of his solemn obligation to attend the Lord's day evening service at his church and help in its soul saving endeavors.

You Will Prosper in the Southwest

If you purchase a farm in the Southwest now while the land is cheap, you will soon see grow up around you a community of prosperous, energetic men, who like yourself, have seen the possibilities of the Southwestern farmer, and have taken advantage of them. This very condition, which is rapidly forming all over the Southwest, makes the value of land increase rapidly, to the certain profit of those who own it.

There are more and better opportunities for making money—for home building, in the Southwest—along the line of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas R'y today, than anywhere else. You have only to get on the ground to prove this. If you are in any way interested in the Southwest, write today for a copy of my new paper "The Coming Country."

Go Southwest Now

Take advantage of the exceptionally low rates, March 6th and 20th, and go and see the country for yourself. On above dates most lines will sell both one-way and round trip tickets at exceptionally low rates. If your nearest railroad agent cannot give you the rates, write me for particulars.

What Our History and Training Have Fitted Us For.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

I wish to express my most hearty approval of the splendid work now being done by The Christian-Evangelist.

Your attitude toward the great federation movement is to be truly commended by all lovers of truth and loyal disciples of the Master. It is clear we have reached an important point in our history. The very thing for which we have worked and prayed is now coming. At such a time we must prove ourselves worthy of the great work committed to us. This can be done only if we are willing to enter most heartily into this great movement and direct its forces. Our history and training have especially fitted us for this work. May we enter upon it in the spirit of him whom we serve.

May God's blessing rest upon you in your great work. Jos. Keevil.

More Light and Less Heat.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

I have followed the discussion of the federation proposition with great interest.

Entirely aside from my views on the subject at issue I wish to express my appreciation of your kindly spirit and scholarly fairness exhibited throughout the discussion. You have shown how a Christian gentleman can differ from a brother in personal views of a live topic, and yet respect the other's integrity and honesty, and usefulness to the great cause we represent. This is the spirit that we, as a people, need. One may win his argument yet lose his friend. You have well sustained your argument and have, besides, won many friends who can not but mark the vast difference in courtesy and in argument exhibited between The Christian-Evangelist and "The Christian Standard," and commend that of the former.

And you do well to refuse further to discuss the question with a publication which descends to personal abuse in lieu of, or even to sustain, an argument. Common courtesy forbids that method. We need both sides of the argument presented (there are two sides to this question) but personal vituperation on the part of either side is to be deplored by all friends of fairness.

We shall hope that more of light and somewhat less of heat may come from future consideration of the question of federation. I like the spirit of The Christian-Evangelist. C. O. Reynard.

Sound or Unsound?

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

Whosoever reads "The Plea of the Disciples of Christ," by W. T. Moore, will find a book as sound as if it had been written by Campbell, Scott, Ben Franklin or John Smith, and yet its author sees nothing to alarm us in all this ado about church federation. I have met a few brothers in my ministry whose noses and cheeks were painted from strong drink, who were very sound on the Gospel, and enjoyed my preaching as long as I paid respects to certain error; but the moment I looked after the whisky drug stores and saloons, I was unsound—they wanted a Gospel preacher!

I saw one aged "saint" stand out in the rain refusing to enter the church till the Sunday-school and the organ playing ended (the organ not yet being used in the church service), and in less than a week I saw the same brother coming out of a saloon wiping his mouth. It was the same for whose benefit I proposed to take the organ out of the Bible school and put it in the saloon, and see if it would run him out of that.

When in war times good old Ben Franklin was holding meetings for us in Kentucky and tidings would come that John Morgan and his men were about to dash in on us and probably make a nolens volens horse swap with us, the old preacher would smile and say: "Now, don't be afraid, let the meeting go right along and if Morgan comes to interfere with our meeting I'll arrest him."

So I will go right along preaching the same Gospel I heard from the lips of the aforementioned great leaders, and the first man who proposes to surrender one of the cardinal principles of our plea, I'll move that he be arrested.

I saw that B. B. Tyler had endorsed Brother Willett's book on the union movement a few years ago. Next there was a great cry about the unsoundness of the book. I bought it and read it through carefully, twice, and I never saw one thing to make a fuss about. Nearly every critic was after something Brother Willett meant; a few of the severest reviewers finally admitted that they had never read the book. I thought: Who that has denounced the book knows more of what is sound among us than B. B. Tyler? Shall we let our religious neighbors conclude that the warring factions among us are about to line up for a war as fierce as that at Gettysburg? S. W. Crutcher.

A Reply.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

In The Christian-Evangelist of Jan. 18, 1906, page 90, the Editor writes as follows:

"We can hardly understand how Baptists, who are staunch defenders of liberty" (thank you, brother,) "and of the independence of the local church" (thanks, again,) "should not be willing to allow each congregation to decide such questions" (as open or close communion,) "for itself."

Reply. They have, long, long ago, done that very thing, according to their understanding of the New Testament Scriptures; and all our local churches adhere to, and practice, the very same communion as handed down from the days of the apostles to the present time; and that makes it "close" to outsiders, everywhere, who do not hold fast to the form or "pattern of sound words," as enjoined by Paul, the apostle, in his second letter to Timothy, first chapter, thirteenth verse.

Hence, none of "the tides of modern thought" (to quote the Editor, further,) such as we find in socialism, rationalism, evolutionism, higher-churchism, Fosterism, etc., etc., have ever "swept through" our "protected nook to molest the ideas of a former time," (to quote the good brother still further) and hence again, we feel secure, so far as these 'isms" are concerned, and we sincerely hope they will stay "over the border," indefinitely.

And now we will answer that Texas brother, T. D. Secrest, at Marfa, who, in The Christian-Evangelist of Feb. 8, asks us, "Why do not Baptists commune with those people, who, though having been regularly baptized, or immersed, have left our churches and joined others, not of our "faith and practice," although they are Christians still? Why, he asks, do we not commune with them?

Answer. Simply, because, in leaving us, they voluntarily cut themselves off from the regular churches of Christ, and have united with those whom we consider "out of order"; for they hold not to the same "form, or pattern, of sound words," as above stated, in our reply to Brother Garrison.

This includes all who are Pedo-Baptists, Free-will Baptists, Campbellite-Baptists, or Disciples, to the end of the chapter of loose-communionists.

CROFTS & REED, Cabinet Dept. DD, CHICAGO, ILL.

Please do not be offended at our plainness of speech, brethren; we mean no offense, nor do we desire to "hurt any one's feelings," and should our Brother Garrison, or Brother Secrest, both come down upon us now—well, our back is strong and broad, and we shall try to stand firm, under their united fire.

And yet, this writer will declare here, that no one would be more delighted than he, if all immersionists in all the earth, were one, and in the same fold; thus, in some measure, bringing to pass the fulfillment of our Lord's prayer in John, 17th chapter, "That they may be made perfect in one." Amen. W. B. Harrell.

Dunn, N. C.

[No, Brother Harrell, we like you too well, and believe too thoroughly in your honesty and sincerity, to be offended by the candid expression of your convictions. Your reply is perfectly satisfactory when one looks at the subject from your point of view. We have a few comments to make from a slightly different view-point.

1. We do not exactly see how you can say or infer that all Baptist churches are agreed upon what you regard as the proper view of the communion question since we know that many Baptist churches hold a different view and have a different practice. We hope, our good brother, you do not exclude your northern brethren from Baptist fellowship.

2. By "tides of modern thought" we, of course, had no reference to the issues and heresies you mention, but that deepening and widening knowledge of God's will which has put an end to the conflict which once raged so fiercely between Calvinism and Arminianism, and which now embraces what is true in both these systems of thought, in a synthesis that is truer than either one alone. It is this same widening of thought and of fellowship "with the process of the suns," that is modifying the old-time view of the communion question.

3. Your reply to Brother Secrest, as to why you could not admit to the communion table baptized members of other churches, as for instance, Disciples, even those who had been baptized by Baptists, is clear as crystal to any one who is able to accept two things which your reply assumes: (1) Baptist churches are the only "regular churches of Christ" in existence; (2) Only those who are members of "regular churches of Christ," have a right to sit at the Lord's table. Now we are prepared to admit that Baptist churches are churches of Christ, with varying degrees of regularity; but we believe there are others quite as regular, and some of them, in some things, perhaps a little more regular. But there are some churches of Christ, not so regular, which contain members whose Christian character can not be doubted. Why should they be excluded from the Lord's table, seeing that they belong to the Lord? Besides, is it not a little dangerous business for us to undertake to decide who is and who is not entitled to the Lord's supper? We prefer to say: "Let a man examine himself and so let him eat and drink," etc.

4. Finally, we are delighted to know that you would love to see all immersionists "in the same fold." We have long desired to see this. Will you not tell us how you think this union can be effected?—Editor.]

BROWN.

Mrs. Lizzie Harrod Brown, wife of W. E. Brown, died at her home in St. Augustine, Ill., on Christmas day. She was the daughter of A. H. and Ailcy Harrod. She leaves a husband, Elmer Brown, and three children, Mrs. Blonde Tanney, Mrs. Birdie Blevins, and son Harvey, two grandchildren, Hazel and Julian; her aged father, stepmother, five brothers and two sisters, Lauson, Nathan, Halleck, Sharron, Lee, Silvia and Estie, besides three aunts, Mrs. Nancy Babbitt, Miss Lavinia Cox and Mrs. Sarah Harrod, and many relatives and friends. The church has lost one of its charter members, she having been converted and buried with her Lord in baptism by Elder Eli Fisher in 1865. She always lived a devoted Christian life and was a loving daughter, wife and mother. She was an active member of the C. W. B. M., and was ever ready to assist in charitable work. She was in her 54th year at the time of her death. Lavinia Cox.

St. Augustine, Ill.

BONNETT.

Bertha Swift Bonnett, wife of M. G. Bonnett, was the daughter of Clevears W. and Martha D. Swift, and was born in Wilson county, Tenn., Feb. 13, 1834. She removed with her parents while an infant, in 1835, to Weakley county, Tenn., where she grew to womanhood. In 1870 the family removed to Christian county, Mo., to which place she followed in 1871. She was married to M. G. Bonnett in 1876, and died at her home near Billings, Mo., Feb. 10, 1906. Our sister united with the Christian Church at an early age, and lived and died in the triumphs of the faith that lifts the soul above the sordid things of earth. Hers was not the life of the merely nominal church member, for her faith was so strong and deep laid that it enabled her to live above the temptations at which weaker mortals falter and fall. Left at an early age by the death of her mother, the oldest of seven children, she learned early in life what privation and care mean to the human mind and soul. Those trials and duties forced upon her at the age when most girls think most of parties, picnics and beaux, were assumed with dignity and fortitude, and no doubt helped to fit her for the useful life she was to lead, as teacher, which was her chosen profession, and in which she was excelled by none of the time, for "we are made perfect through suffering." The care of her younger brothers and sisters, though no doubt arduous for one so young, was a pleasure rather than a task, and if her charges never reached the high ideal she set for them it was no fault of hers. She bore the acute pain and suffering of the last five months of her life with the heroism of the Christian soldier that she was. The three sisters and three brothers, with the husband, were constantly at her bedside many days before the end, which came peacefully on the 10th of this February. The funeral services were conducted at the family residence by Elder W. B. Moore, and interment was as above. The faith that bore her up under the terrible suffering now consoles us who mourn. Mother went hence in 1857; father in 1876, and the oldest of the seven, whom mother left nearly 50 years ago, has answered the summons that comes to all in the end. "We are seven," but one has gone on before.

Galena, Mo. C. B. Swift.

COLLINS.

Jemima Brown Collins, born March 11, 1822, near Columbus, O.; married in 1841; died at Platte City, Mo., Feb. 7, 1906, where she had lived since 1842. Seven children survive her. She was led to confess her faith in Christ under the preaching of Moses E. Lard, and had led a beautiful Christian life. Harry E. Tucker.

HARRIS.

Mrs. Cornelia Amanda Harris, widow of the late Geo. H. Harris, of Belleplaine, Minn., died at the home of her son-in-law, James Cragun, of Jordan, Minn., Jan. 21, 1906, with heart trouble. She was born at Dover, N. Y., Aug. 11, 1830, was married in Milwaukee, in May, 1847, and emigrated to Belleplaine in 1854, where she has continuously resided. Six children were born: Geo. A. Harris, of Mankato, Mrs. Chas. Beer, of Redwood Falls, Mrs. James Cragun, who died five years ago; Mrs. Cottier, of Bloomfield, Neb.; Mrs. Ellen Chadderdon, of Windom, and Norman Harris, of Skogmo, N. D. She also leaves 17 grandchildren, 5 great-grandchildren and one sister, Mrs. Esther Woodruff, of Tomah, Wis. She was a woman of excellent Christian character, and her loss will be deeply felt by all who knew her. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, for they rest from their labors and their works do follow them." The funeral took place from the Presbyterian Church and the interment was in Spirit Hill Cemetery. Rev. F. Kline, pastor of the Grand Avenue Christian Church, of Minneapolis, conducted the service.

LAUGHLIN.

Mary Laughlin, born in Knox county, Ohio, in 1833; married William J. Laughlin; laid to rest on Feb. 17, at Ashland, Neb. "Aunt Polly," as she was called, presented to the world the loving spirit of the Master, and in all my ministry I have never known any one who impressed me more than this truly Christian woman. She lived to see her whole family members of the church and leaves a devoted husband and three children.

A. W. Henry.

LOVE.

Nancy Harriet Love, at her home in Linden, Ind., Feb. 2, aged 72 years. She had been a member of the Christian Church for 60 years. She was a faithful mother, and is survived by six children. Wm. Pearson.

RICHARDS.

William Richards, at Fort Madison, Ia. He was born Feb. 20, 1818, at Hamilton, O., and served for many years as deacon in the Lost Creek Christian Church. Flora E. Jackson.

SMITH.

Eva Ellen, infant daughter of William and Cory Smith, of Fredericktown, Mo. S. P. Gross.

TRACY.

Charles Edwin Tracy, at Homer, Ill., Jan 8, of consumption, at the age of 31 years and 6 months. He left an aged father, three brothers and one sister. J. A. Lytle.

The Armor of God.

Eph. 6:14-17.

You are longing to enter the conflict,
  To battle for truth and the right,
To conquer all doubt and all evil
  And put every error to flight;
But if you would follow the Savior,
  Would walk in the path that He trod,
O, think, e'er you enter the battle,
  Have you put on the armor of God?

The helmet of God is Salvation,
  Are you wearing it into the fray?
Are you seeking to help and to strengthen
  Each sinner you meet in the way?
Do you honor the good in your brother?
  Let him falter and fail as he will?
Ah, that glorious helmet, Salvation,
  Comes not to destroy but fulfill!

Your shield is the faith that He gives you;
  Are you lifting it high in the fight?
Shield of faith, your own honest conviction,
  Whatever another deems right.
And though it may seem but a target
  For the weapons your enemies wield
That soul shall not fall in the battle,
  Whoever is true to his shield.

Your weapon? The sword of the Spirit,
  Word of God that shall gleam through the night.
Do you honor the power you are wielding?
  Do you walk in its marvelous light?
Has it cut from your life every evil?
  Has it conquered and humbled your pride?
Not alone its commands but its Spirit
  In you must be flesh and abide.

The breastplate to wear in the battle
  Is the righteousness Christ can impart;
Put it on, and whate'er may assail you
  No weapon shall enter your heart.
Be girded with truth and be faithful,
  True to God and the Savior who died;
True to all who have wandered and fallen,
  You shall conquer whatever betide.

The Gospel of Peace is your footgear.
  Peace in warfare? That peace of the heart
That loves to find good in another,
  And yearneth the best to impart;
That peace that is free from all malice,
  That longs for all warfare to cease.
Ah, the way will be rough for the Christian
  Not shod with the Gospel of Peace!

You must stand for the right like a soldier,
  You must ever be faithful and true,
You must honor the truth that is steadfast,
  And the faith God has given to you.
You must go with Him through the dark valley,
  Through the rough, stony paths that He trod;
But, O, ere you enter the conflict,
  Be clothed with the armor of God!

The Bronze Vase.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

[Mrs. Revore, mother of the twins, Raymund and Rhoda, when dying tells them that there is a secret which may or may not have great influence upon their later lives. The secret is in a letter which is in a tin box in the bank of the town. The box is to be opened and the letter read only if either of the twins makes the other very unhappy. The mother dies, and Raymund and Rhoda are left to the mercy of strangers, their mother's half brother in St. Louis having failed to answer repeated letters from Mrs. Revore. The new minister, Brother Bellfield, takes the children into his already overflowing home. Rhoda has a visit from a mysterious man named Boggs, who claims to have been sent by Mrs. Revore's half brother to find out whether the children know anything of a bronze vase. After much delay it is decided to send Rhoda to an orphan home, and Raymund to Mr. Omer's farm.]

CHAPTER XI.

When Rhoda and Raymund left the little square porch of Miss Glory Aggency, with its under trellis work of blue painted laths, they were unhappier than they had been since their mother's death. They looked across the picket fence at their old home, the one-story cottage, with its round dormer window over the porchless front door. The round dormer window had always reminded them of an eye. It had watched their home-coming in schooldays; it had seen them at play on holidays; it had often shown their mother's face as they came through the iron gate. Now, the same glass eye was watching them sadly passing down the village street with the heavy consciousness of hearts that soon must be separated. They met some of their old schoolmates who had not known exactly how to greet them since they had become orphans. There was no display of youthful friendliness now. The twins were too miserable, and the others too much awed by changed conditions.

"It is only three days," gasped Rhoda. "Then Mrs. Omer will take me to the orphan home, and Mr. Omer will take you out to his farm. Oh, Raymund!"

"Well," said the boy, vainly striving to speak cheerfully, "we can't stay at Brother Bellfield's."

"No," said Rhoda, "I talked to Miss Glory after we left the room. Brother Bellfield is so poor! And the church here never pays the salary till long after it is due; and you do know, Raymund, that his children are not much help in the work. Miss Glory actually said that we are more help to him than his three boys. Of course, I explained that they can't work, but she didn't seem to believe it. And, at last, she said again that she didn't understand children, and I just spoke right out, and I said, 'Maybe you don't understand children, Miss Glory, but we understand you, and we know how good you are, and we love you, both of us do!'"

"What did she say?" Raymund inquired.

"She didn't say anything. She just began to cry. I was sorry I made her feel bad. But, after all, I don't seem very sorry. Looks like to me that everybody in the world ought to be feeling sorry this evening!"

They had almost come in sight of the minister's house, when Raymund suddenly stopped short.

"You have a plan!" Rhoda flashed, prophetically.

"Yes, I have," said Raymund, whose face had grown excited. "Oh, Rhoda! It is such a plan! You know Wizzen?"

"Yes, I do!" cried Rhoda, catching his eagerness.

"We will go to him this very evening—just you and I—right after supper, before it is real dark—"

"Won't they miss us?"

"Why, of course not; there are too many there for any two people to be missed just a little while. If we can run away from Jack. That will be the trouble."

"Take Jack with us," said Rhoda. "He wouldn't ever tell. But what is it?"

"We will go to Wizzen—yes, Jack can come—he's a first-rate fellow, although he doesn't ever want you along, Rhoda; I don't like that about him."

"I am in the way," Rhoda apologized.

"And we will ask Wizzen to have his wagon ready to-morrow night: and to-morrow night we will run away!"

"Oh, Raymund!"

"We will go out into the world," cried Raymund, "and we will seek our fortunes."

"Oh, Raymund!" cried Rhoda, as before. "But will Wizzen go?"

"Of course he will go. Now, don't say a word to anybody. I'll talk to Jack."

As soon as the children came up to the wide porch that circled about the building, they were met by Brother Bellfield, who wore his accustomed jaded air. "I'm glad you have come, Rhoda," he said, as Raymund hurried in search of Jack Bellfield. "My poor sister" (he referred to the invalid) "is in a perfect fever for somebody—it doesn't matter who. The poor dear has been lying on her bed the entire day, reading the magazines and papers, and she has laid out at least a dozen articles that she says are too good to be lost; and she is charged with important news—really charged, Rhoda," he added, with a rueful smile. "But I must get my sermon ready."

"I will go and listen to her," said Rhoda. "But, oh, Brother Bellfield, I am to be sent to an orphan home without Raymund!"

"Yes, dear child," said the minister; "Mrs. Omer stopped here on her way home. She did not get out of the buggy. She told us. I reckon it's the best thing that can be done. Maybe we will make a raise somehow, and if we do, we'll send for you. And Raymund will soon be a big, strong boy, and then he will take care of you, and you two will live together."

The minister had not suggested any immediate escape from the serious difficulty of the situation; he had not said anything in regard to Raymund that Rhoda had not already thought out. And yet, his manner seemed to impart a hopefulness and helpfulness to every word. It was very strange, but Rhoda felt suddenly as if everything were different. After all, if they ran away with Wizzen—she suddenly felt that the minister ought to be taken into their confidence; but if he were, it would end the project. That made her experience a regrettable sensation of guilt. Was it very wrong to want to run away and live with Raymund?

Jasper came to the door, twirling his cane. "Father," he said, "aunt Patsy has saved up a stack of articles this high"—measuring with the tip of his cane from the floor. "She wanted to read them to me, but I must go down town and look about for some sort of work. I am thinking of real estate. I told Morton to go and listen to her; but he is so droopy and mopey that he said it wouldn't be any use; he couldn't hear a word. And my wife has those three children to look after. Can't you go up? Aunt Patsy says the pieces are too important to be passed over."

Brother Bellfield looked helplessly about him, then remembered Rhoda. "Rhoda is going," he said, and snatching up his Bible, he disappeared. When Rhoda had heard all the articles saved up by the invalid, it was supper-time. After supper, as by a sort of accident, she found herself with Raymund and Jack in the front yard.

"Now's the time," said Jack, who had entered heartily into the project. "We'll go to Wizzen's at once." He felt that Rhoda's presence was indispensable to the success of the enterprise, but he showed his partiality for Raymund by walking with that youth, and letting Rhoda trail along after them rather lonesomely. However, the importance of the plan was too vital to allow room for many irrelevant sensations. None of them had ever before honored Wizzen by a visit, but everybody knew where the workman lived, because Crawley was too small to allow of a mystery in the way of habitation. Back of the main town was a steep street that most people preferred to avoid even though their doing so caused them to drive several blocks out of their way. On this street, without any yard to lend a softness to its aspect, was a one-room cottage, one edge resting upon the ground, and the other standing airily upon piles, on account of the abrupt steep. Back of the house, a wagon was to be seen, and tied to its wheels were two dispirited, bony and apparently feeble horses. "Look!" said Jack, pointing them out, as his handsome face beamed, and his black curly hair, so like his brother Morton's, quivered with interest. "There are your steeds. If you run away with those horses, you'll have to put 'em in the wagon and do the pulling!"

"Oh, they are strong!" said Rhoda. "Wizzen goes to Kansas City with them, hauling old iron."

"Well," said Jack, "they don't look gamy, but maybe their strength is in their bones. There seems to be plenty of bone. Go on and knock, Ray."

The cottage had a peculiarly disreputable appearance. Thanks to the elevation caused by the piles, one could see—indeed, could not avoid seeing—everything under the house; and everything that had been used and worn out for the past 10 or 20 years, seemed to be there—old boots, broken crockery, ashes, rags, tin cans, etc. A short ladder led up to the blackened door. The entire building was blackened with the dust, smoke and grime of countless years. One window only was to be seen from the street. One of the upper panes had been broken out; the place was stuffed with a pillow, not so black as the house, but giving fair promise of at last rivaling the cracked walls.

Raymund climbed up the ladder and knocked.

Pearl's Hero.

BY JOSIE BALLOU SHERMAN.

Such a storm as it was!

The snow fell in a feathery avalanche, and as the wind took it here and there 'twas tossed about in beds of downy whiteness on every side.

"I telephoned two hours ago and still he is not in sight. I'm fearful he can not reach here through this blinding storm."

"Oh, George, if he does not come, what will we do?"

The speaker, a woman, turned anxiously from the window to the door of the sick room, where lay her little daughter, tossing to and fro, burning with fever and crying with pain.

The mother changed the cloth of cold on the head and endeavored to soothe the little sufferer by saying, "The doctor will soon come dear, and then you'll be better."

She went again to the window and in the gathering dusk of the evening saw a team plunging their way through the drifted snow and blinding storm. On it came, slow but sure. It was he for whom they waited.

Mr. Warner hurried out to take the doctor's team and he at once came into the house. Wrapped in his fur from head to foot, with only his nose and eyes visible, he looked the mythical Santa Claus.

Dr. Emerson was a man whose face attracted and held one's gaze. It was not a beautiful face. No face is called beautiful after fifty years of helping bear others' burdens has left its imprint. Beauty pleases, tenderness charms.

There was a high bred grace and kindliness about this face far better than beauty, which lent a charm to the soft blue eyes which looked into the faces of father and mother as he took their hands.

He hastened to the sick room and spoke to the little girl, but she knew him not.

His worst fears were realized. The disease had made rapid progress, and he saw at once it must be a fight for the life of the little one lying there so helpless before him.

Once before—seven years it had been—he had seen this child as helpless as now, when he had ushered it into the world and given it into the arms of the labor-spent mother.

Little Pearl turned her eyes at the sound of the doctor's voice, but no smile of welcome recognition crossed her face.

The doctor was her best and closest friend. He had nursed her through the ills of babyhood and was a constant friend to the family in time of trouble. She had been taught never to fear him; that he would not hurt her intentionally; that his medicine would always help.

She had no fear when he roused her. She knew him for a moment only. He gently took her wrist and without any hesitation she took the mixture he prepared for her.

The mother, relaxed from the strain of anxious waiting and watching, sank into a chair and, burying her head in her arms on the table, shook with sobs.

The distressed husband and father tried to soothe her. With one hand on her soft brown hair, he stood with eyes riveted on their darling child. Dr. Emerson gave him a look of pity and said huskily, "George, I'll save her if I can."

Seating himself by the couch of the little sufferer, he took out his watch and placed it open on the table. He prepared his medicines. Placing his fingers on the throbbing wrist, he leaned forward earnestly, his eyes intently fixed on the sick child's face.

The light fell full on the little head, with its damp touseled yellow curls, its bright, red cheeks and wide open eyes.

At short intervals a moan escaped the lips of the little sufferer, accompanied by a fitful toss of the sunny head. This was the only sound heard in the room besides the mother's stifled sobs.

Every fifteen minutes the spoon was emptied between the cherry lips of little Pearl.

One hour went by. Another followed. The moans became less frequent. Still two more hours passed and yet the doctor stayed at his post. The doses of medicine became less frequent. When the light of the early dawn peeped in the eastern window, Dr. Emerson still sat with his eyes riveted on the little face, but the child slept.

Her cheeks had lost their purple hue, and the wrist he still held was moist and cool. The pulse gave forth a regular rythmic beat.

As the doctor arose from his vigil, the father noticed him take his handkerchief and wipe the tears away—tears of joy, because the crisis had passed in safety to his little friend.

Exhausted mentally and physically, the doctor hurried forth to his home. Plunging through snow drifts, as high as the horses' heads, and battling with the elements, he arrived at his office only to go forth again to others claiming his skill and watchcare.

The Warners fully appreciated their physician. There was no tendency on their part to depreciate his skill. No time was ever spent in sarcastic flings at his Christlike and magnificent calling. They followed his directions explicitly, gave every dose of medicine and awaited results with patience.

The little girl improved under his constant watchcare.

One day he came and said good-bye. Pearl was sorrowful at the thought of not seeing her doctor each day.

"Doctor," said Mrs. Warner, "you have our untold gratitude for your unceasing care. It seems absurd to measure the cost of such service by a few paltry dollars."

Mr. Warner stepped forward and handed the doctor a bill for which he thanked him. As he put the money in his pocketbook he said, in a confidential way, "I'll tell you, if all the laity showed the appreciation for a physician's service that you have always shown me, and would pay me when my work is done, the practice of medicine would be much more satisfactory and less burdensome. As it is, to come into homes like yours, is like finding an oasis in the desert."

The hug and kiss of Pearl at parting did much more to pay the doctor for his service than the dollars and cents which he received from her father's hand.

The happiness of life is made up of minute fractions—the little soon forgotten kiss, a look, an unspoken compliment, and a hundred other little acts of self-abnegation in the discharge of the duty that lies nearest.

When the spring came, the Warners made a special trip to town to say good-bye to Dr. Emerson, ere they left for the seashore, where they were to stay several weeks.

Breezy Beach was a pretty place. The summer cottages nestled closely together in a sociable way. The residential homes swung out in three directions, backed by magnificent trees, undulating farms, and near the horizon a stately row of the everlasting hills. All this was faced by the sea.

The cool breeze, the sunshine on the sparkling water, the fishermen's boats idly drifting, and children playing in the clean white sand, their voices sounding with merry notes of glee, all together had its effect on the minds and hearts of its residents. For surely there is a something in the calm of nature round about us that quells our petty trials and doubts and makes us live nobler and better lives.

One bright sunny day in June Mr. and Mrs. Warner, with Pearl and several little playmates, were walking on the beach, watching the bathers and the many fine equipages which went dashing along the macadamized driveway.

The children dropped close to the roadside to build in the clean white sand. The parents, with others, were watching a boat far out at sea and almost forgot the little ones.

Suddenly a coachman who was driving four mettlesome steeds seemed to have more than he could do to manage them. He pulled vigorously on the lines, but all to no purpose. Voices arose, "Clear the way!" For now they were running at a very rapid rate. A little child was slowly toddling along right in the driveway, directly in front of the oncoming horses, having wandered away from the unobservant eyes of a nursery maid.

Pearl Warner saw the approaching teams and started for the child, for its baby feet could not have carried it out of harm's way in time and its infancy prevented any sense of danger.

When the voice and rumble and rush reached Mr. Warner's ears, with quick strides he started straight for the two children, whose imminent peril now seemed certain.

Quick though he was it seemed as if he would not be in time. With cries of horror the startled mothers and friends saw the horses coming so rapidly that it seemed both man and children must be trampled underfoot.

And so they would have been, had Mr. Warner endeavored to catch the children and return; but with great precision of judgment he caught both chilren in his strong arms, ran across the hard beaten track to the other side and fell flat, but with both the baby and Pearl safe and unhurt.

The laughing baby was returned to its mother's arms. It seemed to think all the excitement was created for its amusement. The lady was profuse in her thanks to Mr. Warner and kissed Pearl very tenderly and said to her: "I shall not forget, my

Nothing but expressions of delight were ever heard concerning The Christian-Evangelist's special to San Francisco last August. Maybe we can render our friends greater service in connection with the Buffalo convention. Write for our prospectus before engaging transportation.

A fourfold equipment for efficient service for man and Master—Helps to Faith, $1.00; The Holy Spirit, $1.00; The Victory of Faith (Powell), $1.00; The Christian-Evangelist, $1.50; all till May 1, free to our preachers for $3.25. Hundreds of orders should be the response to this remarkable overture.

dear, your effort to save my baby at the risk of your own little life."

Many pressed around Mr. Warner offering congratulations and words of praise for his agility and good judgment. But to all these attentions he was dumb. He looked into their faces with frank gladness and utter unconsciousness of self.

"I am so thankful I stood close enough to reach them. You would have done the same, and you and you," said he, pointing to one and another as they stood about him.

A responsive chord in the hearts of the people at Breezy Beach, vibrated, when Mr. Warner's heroic act came to their notice. It was the topic of conversation at table, in the parlor of the hotel and when they gathered on the verandas in the evening. One could overhear words about "the hero fund" and "the club meets to-night," and "he is worthy of it." These sentences were hardly understood by the newcomers and it was very discomfiting to Mr. Warner, who realized it referred in some way to his simple act of kindness.

There was an organization of these warm hearted people known as "The Emergency Club." It was sustained by yearly dues and its object was to save life on land or sea. It had a special fund set aside, known as the hero fund, the payment of which was made to any one doing a heroic act in order to save life.

Two hundred dollars was the amount of this fund. Several times in the history of this club had this been paid to savers of life.

Mr. Warner was cordially invited to attend this club meeting, which he did, and when the wish of the society was made known to him he pleaded most earnestly that they hold it for one more worthy. Seeing his efforts useless, he asked that the honor be conferred on his little daughter, as her intentions were to save the baby at the risk of her own life.

This they did, and Pearl Warner became a beneficiary of the "hero fund."

She was very much impressed with the gift, not because of its money value, for she had all a little girl wanted and needed, but the meaning of it all, a life saver.

The thoughts ran through her mind like shadows cast by flying clouds over a June sky, one hardly leaving ere another would come, as to what she would do with her hero fund. Many air castles were built, but all the time the words a life saver stayed uppermost in her mind.

Several days passed, when Mr. Warner finally asked, "What has my little daughter deceived to do with her hero fund? Give it to the Orphans' Home?

Pearl shook her head.

"Bank it?" questioned her father.

"No, no," said Pearl. "If I may whisper it, I'll tell you."

Pearl placed her arms about her papa's neck and as the rosy lips touched his ear in their swift movements, Mamma Warner, who was looking on, could tell by the expression of her husband's face that the message was one prompted by love and met with his approval.

He kissed her tenderly as she finished and said: "I am proud of my little girl. You have my consent. Go talk to mamma about it." And they did talk and plan in the privacy of their room.

"Now, papa," said Pearl the next morning, "here is my letter. Do you want to read it? I want you to, before I seal it tight."

He took the letter and this is what it said:

"My Dear Dr. Emerson: I tried to be a life saver, but was not quick enough, so papa saved me and the baby, too, in his big strong arms.

"The people wanted papa to take the 'hero fund,' but he would not do it, so they gave it to me. Now, my dear doctor friend, you have been a really, truly life saver, 'cause you saved me more than once, and you just go on saving people when you are so tired and sleepy, and I love you so that I want to give you my 'hero fund.'

"If you love me, don't say no, for I'm the happiest little girl at Breezy Beach.

"I am your loving friend. Pearl."

Mr. and Mrs. Warner enclosed a more lengthy explanation of this somewhat unique letter and enclosed it with the necessary papers, and sent it to Dr. Emerson. By return mail Pearl received a reply and could hardly wait to hear the following letter which her papa read aloud:

"My Dear Little Friend, Pearl: I take off my hat to you. Your strange, yet sweet letter, I must say, made your old doctor friend rejoice that he had so lived as to merit the feeling you express for him. I assure you it warms the center of my heart. Knowing your parents as I do, it will be a pleasure to accept the gift of your 'hero fund.'

"And may I pass it on? With your consent it shall be enlarged and many little girls and boys who are less fortunate than you, and who come under my care almost daily, shall receive care, attention and blessings from your hero fund.

"As I go forth to relieve suffering humanity, be it calm or storm, or when called to a night patrol in my life saving service, the sweet, holy sentiments expressed in your letter will be a little isle of sunshine in my life to which memory will again and again return.

"I beg to be remembered to your dear father and mother. I am, most affectionately, 'Your doctor friend,' Emerson."

And thus the doctor, "with light in his looks," entered the chambers of sickness. Noiselessly moved about the assiduous, careful attendants, moistening the feverish lips and the aching brow, and in silence closing the sightless eyes of the dead, and concealing their faces, where on their pallets they lay, like drifts of snow by the roadside. Many a languid head upturned as he entered, turned on its pillow of pain, for his presence fell on their hearts like a ray of the sun on the walls of a prison.

Japan Appeals to Generous America

OVER A MILLION IN THE NORTHERN PROVINCES, FACING STARVATION, CRY FOR HELP = WILL YOU HELP THEM?

The Impending Death-Roll

AN OLDER SISTER

A TERRIBLE famine is sweeping over the northeastern provinces of Japan, leaving heartrending suffering in its track. Unless rescue speedily reaches the stricken victims, conservative estimates fix the impending roll-call of Death at a figure exceeding the entire loss on Manchurian battlefields, counting the wounded and missing as dead.

As much land was tilled as in former years. The same care was lavished upon it, but when harvest time came, the rice crops (the staple food of the people) were a total failure, as a result of too little sunshine and too much rain.

The Japanese are an industrious, proud, and unusually brave people, and their Government shrank from exposing their pitiable plight to the world; they so lately filling the role of conqueror before onlooking nations, were unwilling to turn suppliant. But when poverty became destitution; when tens of thousands in those provinces of the North supported life by the grass and roots of the field, and a million of their own people stood in imminent peril of starvation, the officials admitted that quick and abundant aid from without would be thankfully welcomed. The reports from Japan, which describe a large part of the population in the famine provinces as "reduced to subsistence on roots of trees, leaves, bark and acorns," add that "over half a million are facing extreme conditions and must succumb unless help is speedily given."

"Hunger Bread" in Japan

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has just received from the Rev. Mr. Loomis, representative in Japan of the American Bible Society, the first samples of Japanese "hunger bread" received in America. If it were but possible to put fragments of these specimens of the food to which human beings are reduced, upon the tables of the great-hearted American people, not one more word of appeal would be needed from pulpit or press, to bring into the Relief Treasury, money in superabundance from Maine to California. The most forlorn tramp by the wayside would turn in nauseated disgust from this baked mixture, formed sometimes of acorns, sometimes of a shrub root called tara, again of small berries much like acorns, or dried radish and burdock leaves—all boiled, dried and pounded, then mixed with a very little powdered rice, and made into cakes or stewed. It is indeed revolting—in some localities the whole population is sick.

Can we sleep on peaceful pillows,
  When the light of day has fled.
While across Pacific's billows
  Tens of thousands starve for bread?
Pitying hearts that throb with sorrow
  By your deeds ye shall be known.
Give to-day, and ere to-morrow,
  'Twill be carved on God's white throne.

The President Appeals

So ominous is the outlook, that President Roosevelt has been moved to address an appeal to the American people in behalf of the suffering nation, in which he says:

"The famine situation in northern Japan is proving much more serious than at first supposed, and thousands of persons are on the verge of starvation. It is a calamity such as may occasionally befall any nation. Nations, like men, should stand ever ready to aid each other in distress, and I appeal to the American people to help from their abundance their suffering fellow-men of the great and friendly nation of Japan."

He hath made you but the stewards
  Of the wealth you now possess;
Share it with your needy brothers;
  It will help you in distress.

A Missionary Story

Mrs. Gurney Binford, a devoted missionary of the Friends' persuasion, relates in simple language a tragedy more thrilling than any of fiction or drama, which has just taken place before her eyes, but of which she learned too late to be of service. In a district near her there lived an honest, industrious farmer, who, with his family, were brought to the last extremity. Everything had gone to procure the pittance which would keep them together one more day, and at last the father said: "We have never begged—we cannot now. We must die of starvation here, there is no hope for us." So he traveled wearily up the hill, his wife and two children by his side, and together they flung themselves from a cliff, at the base of which their dead bodies were afterwards discovered. Mrs. Binford adds: "There are so many, many suicides. The real Japanese war is only just beginning; there are so many widows and orphans, so many maimed and disabled soldiers who are fighting the grim enemy, Starvation. Yes, the war is only beginning."

Happy Japanese Children Before the Famine Came

If We Hesitate, They Are Lost

There are those to whom the miseries of the world
Are misery, and will not let them rest.

A JAPANESE MOTHER

Thank God that this is true! Already the big American heart has guided the willing hand to the purse-strings, and contributions have begun to pour in from every quarter, sent us by many who never rest when the "miseries of the world" are brought before them. We have no fear but that the help so desperately needed will come, in Scripture measure—"pressed down and running over," but it is difficult for us to grasp the urgent need of quick action. We must stem the tide with an almost feverish haste, or thousands—yes, tens of thousands — will be swept away by the overwhelming flood ere we can stretch a hand to save them. Think, think of mothers bound to the little ones they bore, by cords of love just as strong and undying as yours, who, to-day, this moment, heedless of the clutching grip of hunger tearing at their own vitals, are hopelessly and helplessly watching the bright, beautiful hopes of their poor, narrow lives, starve to death before their haggard eyes. "That love has a broken wing which cannot fly across the ocean." Send yours forth upon strong pinions to enfold the shrunken baby form over which some other mother yonder is bending with breaking heart!

Help Them Ere They Die

We urge upon each and every reader of THE CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST to join the life-saving crew, and to throw out to these starving people the life-line before it is too late. Pray that God's people everywhere may realize the importance and urgency of the case, and may willingly and cheerfully give, even as God has prospered them. Young People's Societies, Epworth Leagues, Christian Endeavorers, work earnestly, for the night of death threatens to enshroud a nation. You can give the clouds a silver lining, and you will do it. This is the King's business. It requires haste. Every day's delay may prove fatal. Let us, then, be up and doing. He that sitteth in the heavens looks down and watches us.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

Volume XLIII. No. 14. $1.50 a Year.

ST. LOUIS, APRIL 5, 1906.

The Simultaneous Bible School Campaign for all Churches of Christ in America during the month of April, 1906, ought to enlist every lover of the truth in enthusiastic endeavor to promote the great ends of New Testament Christianity. Ignorance of God's Word is at the root of every wrong, and all social, moral and religious advancement depends upon the Scriptures. There is no limit except that set by our own indifference to the growth of our Bible schools, in both numbers and efficiency; and their permanent growth in numbers depends upon the increase in the thoroughness and interest of their teaching. Increase of attendance that does not carry with it improved teaching will not only fail to be lasting, but, even if enduring, would be of little value. The Bible school does not exist simply for itself, but in order to teach the divine Word, and if, on examination, those who have been attending are found to be ignorant of the truth, it has proved a failure. The pioneers of our movement were famous both for their familiarity with the Scriptures and their zeal in teaching them. If their children fail of these two things, no matter how loyally they may have held fast to all other distinctions of their fathers, and no matter how many additional graces they may have added, our Centennial will be but a vain show. But if we abound in these, then all else that is good must follow. Teach the Bible, and it will constrain young men to enter the Gospel ministry; teach the Bible, and it will impel older men to bequeath their fortunes for the endowment of Christian colleges; teach the Bible, and therein will be found incentives to and examples of systematic Christian liberality; teach the Bible, and its author's great world-wide purpose of evangelization will lay hold of the hearts of those instructed; teach the Bible, and the sin of sectarianism will die of starvation; teach the Bible, and its heart-throb in the Savior's last great prayer will find response in every breast until all shall be one and the world shall believe.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

Read Brother Russell's plan for strengthening our weak churches in California. Doubtless by centennial year many of these mission churches will be mighty fortresses of our God and the great truths he committed to the apostolic churches. We dedicate this page as a scroll on which our various state secretaries are privileged to record all triumphs of the primitive Gospel in their respective states. The faith once for all delivered unto the saints should make this department of thrilling interest through reports of debts paid, new houses dedicated, trophies won from denominationalism, sectarianism and the world, Bible study inculcated, and the life of Christ more and more perfectly expressed in the lives of ever increasing thousands of disciples of Jesus.

The Work in California.

D. A. RUSSELL, SECRETARY.

Following out the plan of the Centennial movement the State Board is planning an evangelistic campaign among the weak churches this spring. There are about twenty small congregations unable to support a regular evangelist. Some of these have had no revival for three or four years, and are hungry. A number of successful pastors have agreed to hold a missionary meeting at one of these needy points. A nice feature of this work is, these men go out, just as the first disciples did, with no promise of remuneration save that which comes from helping the Savior at a point where his children are not able to do the work alone.

Another important step is an effort upon the part of the churches of Greater San Francisco to secure E. W. Darst for the work of city evangelist. There are one million five hundred thousand people in California, and one-third of them live in the Bay Cities. A great opportunity is here offered for missionary work; and if E. W. Darst takes hold of it success is assured, for he is invincible.

The Centennial movement is timely, and can not fail to result in great good. Our churches and State Board are in hearty accord with it and are already in line to assume their share of responsibility. California is so far from the center of our religious population that there is always danger of getting out of touch with the larger movements of the church; and this would certainly occur if it were not for some strong qualities in our ministers. These men may not be quite as tall, on an average, or as broad, as those of some of the older states of the east; but for length and breadth, for pluck, for downright heroism, for men of hearts and parts, they may be depended upon to a man. Why, there are men here preaching for $30 a month, and no complaint, who have written the secretary to call upon them for whatever may be needed to carry on the Centennial propaganda. Heroism?—yes, and more.

Centennial Helpers.

The people here are much pleased with The Christian-Evangelist. In fact, how could it be otherwise?—O. L. Lyon (Minister), Newman, Ill.

I read The Christian-Evangelist each week at the home of one of our ministers. I would not be without this privilege for a great deal.—James Small.

Our son has journeyed a long way from home. We want The Christian-Evangelist to follow him to Maynard, Mass.—W. S. Berkey, Mount Ayr, Iowa.

I trust you may be spared many years to carry on the Lord's work. I would not like to give up my Christian-Evangelist as it is.—A. W. Campbell, Taiala, I. T.

Enclosed find check for $1.50, for The Christian-Evangelist for current year. Would not do without it for three times price asked.—L. E. Boyer, Enid, Okla.

Enclosed find $1.50 for renewal to The Christian-Evangelist. It failed to come last week. I feel the loss so much I renewed.—Mrs. John Wright, Shelbyville, Ill.

Credit my subscription account with $5 for The Christian-Evangelist, which I can not do without. May you more than realize the 100,000.—F. M. Brasier, Alton, Ill.

I especially enjoy the Editor's Easy Chair. He dedicated our church here more than sixteen years ago, and we have a warm place in our hearts for him.—Laura Blaker, Pleasanton, Kan.

I am heartily in sympathy with you. My best wishes are for your success, and wherever I go I will encourage the brethren to work for The Christian-Evangelist.—J. J. Judy, Emden, Ill.

We have now sent you twenty-five names and expect to continue to push The Christian-Evangelist, for it is without doubt the greatest religious periodical. Yours for 100,000.—C. W. Van Dolah, Hutchinson, Kan.

The spirit of The Christian-Evangelist well interprets the feeling of the times and leads us toward that day prayed for by the Savior when all Christians should be one.—G. H. Clark, Rensselaer, Ind.

You have been so kind to me I want to do something for the Centennial of 1909, and know of nothing better than to boost The Christian-Evangelist toward the 100,000 mark. I will be one to furnish you 500 new subscribers by 1909.—E. E. Violett, Shelbyville, Tenn.

The Christian-Evangelist has been my favorite paper since my first acquaintance with it in 1895. I was then a student in Milligan College. It is an ideal paper. May it long continue to bless and uplift mankind.—Robert Raney, Eaton College, North Carolina.

I have been a close reader of The Christian-Evangelist for twenty-five years. If I only had some way to convey to my brethren the joys and comfort I have enjoyed through its gracious ministry, I would have no trouble in placing it in every home.—A. H. Noell, Asherville, Kan.

My age and poor health deprive me of doing much active work for The Christian-Evangelist, but I can pray that 100,000 homes may come under its Christlike influence. In the Editor's Easy Chair I find so many friends. I find myself responding with all my heart to their utterances therein contained. May the hand that wields the pen in promoting Christian love and Christian unity be spared for many, many years to come.—Mrs. M. C. Houston, Morganfield, Ky.

I am with you heart and soul for the plea advocating church federation. I never stop when my Christian-Evangelist comes until I read it all. I have read it for nearly thirty years and can not do without it. I expect to take it as long as I live, but that may not be long, as I am 74 years old.—John Fisher, Mount Hope, Washington.

We can not afford to do without The Christian-Evangelist. It strengthens and encourages to be strong and to build on a firm foundation. It breathes the spirit of the Master. I took the "Pioneer," published at Chillicothe, when a mere boy, and followed it through all changes until it has become the improved Christian-Evangelist—and still improves.—F. M. Stewart, Sewal, Iowa.

I am an old farmer and do but little correspondence, but I think I can get ten or more subscribers to The Christian-Evangelist. The editorial "Is a Revival Coming?" is, I think, as close to putting a true light on the lives of church members as anything I ever read. Some of our ministers are at fault for a great deal of the worldly-mindedness of the church members, and for the people's failure to read religious literature.—P. T. Soper, Kearney, Mo.

Go Up Head!

I have not read The Christian-Evangelist as long as some others, but now I have dropped all other church papers. To me it seems to have reached the high-water mark on many lines, viz.: It is a religious paper; it is fair-minded and sweet; it has struck the keynote on the subject of the Holy Spirit; it has approached "church federation" from the only point possible, that is to say, meet together, learn, love, absorb, and in this way mountains will be removed. Any other position is murderous to our plea for union. If it were lawful the Campbells would come down from heaven and join in this noble work. Be patient, we are Disciples.—J. T. Taylor.

Hadley and Standard Oil.

Any man who can break through the hermetically sealed secrecy of the Standard Oil policy deserves congratulation on the accomplishment of a difficult feat, whether anything comes of it or not. Attorney-General Hadley, of Missouri, has done that, and it seems more than likely that something will come of it. He has, in the first place, compelled the officials and agents of that company to go on the witness stand and testify. It is probable that he could get Mr. Rockefeller himself on the stand if he insisted on it, and if Mr. Rockefeller would emerge from his retreat in New Jersey long enough to have a summons served on him. But most of the desired information has already been obtained, and forcing the head of the trust to testify would be rather a spectacular than a substantial part of the proceedings. The most interesting fact which Mr. Hadley has brought out is that the Standard Oil Company actually owns a controlling interest in the so-called "independent" companies which are supposed to be its competitors in Missouri. The Waters-Pierce Oil Company and the Republic Oil Company are controlled by and for the Standard Oil Company, daily reports of their operations and condition are forwarded to the Standard Oil headquarters in New York, and from that center their policy is directed. Mr. Hadley believes that, on the basis of the facts which he has established, he can prove that the Standard Oil Company and its officials are guilty of a combination in restraint of trade, for which the minimum punishment would be a heavy fine and prohibition of further business in the state, and the maximum, the confiscation of all of the property of the company within the state.

The President's Talk on Labor.

When the American Federation of Labor, represented by its president, Mr. Gompers, and the members of the executive council, presented to President Roosevelt a memorial concerning labor legislation now pending, it drew forth one of the most admirable responses ever made by a President to a visiting delegation. The spirit of his remarks was more notable than the substance of them. He touched on the anti-injunction law, pointing out the necessity of injunctions as a part of the legal machinery and stating that the government had, during his term of office, used injunctions against combinations of capital a score of times and not once against combinations of labor, though it would be ready enough to do so if occasion arose. He approved the exclusion of Chinese laborers. He took a strong stand against the enactment of an eight-hour law for the Panama Canal work, on the ground that the conditions there are wholly different from the conditions here. The admirable thing about it all was that the President said what he had to say with absolutely no concern for its probable effect on the "labor vote." It takes a brave man to resist that sort of pressure, and a wise one to do it tactfully. To be sure, a President in his second term can afford to be somewhat independent, but Mr. Roosevelt was the same in his first term. He is in sympathy with the laboring man, but he has the courage to oppose squarely what he considers unwise legislation which is proposed in the ostensible interest of American labor.

Judge Humphrey and the Packers.

The decision of Judge J. Otis Humphrey, of the United States district court, in the case against the meat packers is a great disappointment to the government and a hindrance to the prosecution of the offenders against the anti-trust law. This is not to say that the decision is not good law. Very likely it is, and if so the government will simply have to adopt other tactics in its war upon the beef trust. The substance of the decision is that the sixteen packers who were indicted on evidence secured by Commissioner Garfield in his investigation, are released from the indictment on the ground that they were compelled to testify against themselves in the investigation, but that the five packing houses which were indicted at the same time must stand under the indictment and come to trial. The individuals are released; the corporations are held. The fifth amendment to the Constitution guarantees to any accused person the right to withhold testimony which would incriminate himself. The judge holds that this right is operative whether the witness claims it or not, so that if the testimony is actually given, even without protest, an indictment can not be based upon it. The evidence given by the packers in Commissioner Garfield's investigation, held under authority of an act of Congress authorizing the Bureau of Corporations to compel testimony, was clearly not voluntary testimony. The individuals who gave evidence leading to their own indictment are, therefore, released. The corporations, on the other hand, can claim no such exemption. As was held in the recent decision of the supreme court, a corporation can not plead the fifth amendment as a ground for refusing to give testimony which would incriminate it, and therefore it can not be released from an indictment based on evidence so obtained. And yet it is highly important that, in some way, the guilty individuals be brought to trial. Anti-trust operations can never be wholly successful until it can be made personally dangerous to violate the laws and until criminal suits can be sustained against such eminent and respectable lawbreakers. As Attorney-General Moody said: "If wrong has been committed, the government is seeking the punishment of the men who committed the wrong, the living, breathing human beings."

A Democratic Candidate.

"Harper's Weekly" recently nominated President Woodrow Wilson, of Princeton University, as Democratic candidate for the presidency in 1908. "Harper's Weekly" is not precisely equivalent to a Democratic convention, but its editor is entitled to great respect as a political prognosticator. The week before the last election he came nearer than any one else to guessing Roosevelt's electoral vote, missing it only by his failure to put Missouri in the Republican column. But whether the mention of President Wilson is a prediction or only a suggestion, we are not entirely sure. At any rate it is interesting and unique. College presidents are not usually chosen for high political office. To be sure, President Low, of Columbia University, became mayor of New York. But President Wilson was a professor of politics before he became the executive head of his university, and there is no question but that he is deeply versed in the theory and history of statesmanship. In commenting on this suggestion, the Louisville "Courier-Journal," one of the few party papers which are never afraid to make fun of their own party, makes merry on this wise:

> "We must ask two questions: First, is there a Democratic party in the sense of an organized body of loyal and sentient beings, existing and thinking alike, and feeling alike, in every part of the Union, capable of getting together in national convention, and of framing a platform and selecting a ticket which will appeal to the intelligence or awaken the enthusiasm of the masses of the people? Second, is Mr. Woodrow Wilson, of New Jersey, a Democrat? What of Democracy? Go ask Mr. Bryan. Go ask Judge Parker. If you be not satisfied with the opposing answers they shall give you, go ask Mr. William Randolph Hearst. This is not hyperbole. It is the simple truth. The moment a man begins to talk sense to a considerable body of Democrats two-thirds of them begin to suspect him. Even though in the end, through the very exigencies he has foreseen and pointed out, they are compelled to follow his lead, one-third of them will vote the other way, whilst the remaining third will continue to discredit him."

Mr. Watterson is a trifle too generous to his party in his declaration that "the general superscription, Democracy, stands for all the discontents as well as all the vagaries of the time." Many, perhaps, but not all. If all the Adullamites are gathered into that one party, then the decay of the others will be swift and sure, for no party can exist without a considerable body of critics and agitators whom the vulgar call malcontents.

At last the end has come. Dowie, self-styled "Elijah," has, by a bloodless revolution, been stripped of his property and shorn of all his power in Zion City. Overseer Voliva has brought this about, and Mrs. Dowie is said to have endorsed the plan.

Christian Union: A Historical Study.

III. The Græco-Roman Period.

There is little in this period that bears upon the subject of our study, except in a negative way, and it may be dismissed very briefly. The tendencies toward doctrinal refinement and concentration of ecclesiastical authority reached their culmination in this age of the church. The union which existed was not so much the result of unity as of ecclesiastical despotism. The authoritative doctrinal creed, which men must hold under pain of excommunication from the church and from heaven, and the decisions of the papal authority in the form of decrees and anathemas, were now relied upon to prevent heresies and schisms. It was all very simple. As long as the Church had one supreme earthly head, whose decision on every question of difference was final, submission to that supreme authority was the sole condition of union. It was as simple as the union of the Apostolic Age, but the difference was the pope had usurped the place of Jesus Christ, and differences of opinion had been made uniform by authority, instead of being left free to work themselves out in liberty under the law of love.

The first great division in the Church occurred in this period, namely, that between the Eastern and Western, or Greek and Roman Catholic Churches, as they are now known. Differences in doctrine, and rivalry between the sees of Rome and Constantinople, had existed for a long time, but these reached their culmination in the middle of the eleventh century, when the pope of Rome and the patriarch of Constantinople issued bulls excommunicating each other! The line of cleavage was then clearly drawn and remains until this day. Each of these ecclesiastics assumed that he had the authority to excommunicate the other, and their assumptions were about equally well-grounded. The theory of union by authority vested in an earthly head, and uniformity of doctrine by an authoritative creed, had failed, even in an age when religious liberty and the sacred rights of conscience did not receive the emphasis which they have in our day. How idle, then, is the dream of certain advocates of union who hope to see it realized by submission to ecclesiastical authority, or by conformity to a certain theory of Episcopal ordination! Not less vain is the hope of others that some formulation of doctrines may be made that will serve as a basis of union, on which all believers may unite. History has repeated, over and over, the apostolic statement: "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ."

Superstition and gross ignorance of the Scriptures prevailed largely in this period. Legalism had so infected the Church that it became a burden to conscience as was manifested in frequent self-imposed austerities in the way of penance. "In the devotional system of the middle ages the celestial hierarchy of angels had an important place. Apparitions of angels were believed to be not infrequent. They were protectors against the demoniacal spirits with which the air was peopled. 'The swarming, busy, indefatigable malignant spirits' claimed the world of man as their own. They assumed grotesque and repulsive forms. Satan was figured as having horns, a tail, and the cloven foot. Connected with this ever-present superstition, the torment of the young and the old, was the belief in magic spells and the efficacy of talismans. The potent reliance of the timid, tempted, and persecuted soul was in the help and intercession of the saints. These multiplied in number as time advanced. Every church, every village, had its tutelary spirits. The miracles which they were believed to have wrought were numberless."*

These things are pertinent here only as showing the baneful results which followed a false theory of unity, which relied on external authority more than on faith, and enlightenment through the knowledge of the Scriptures, and on personal love for and devotion to Christ. But let no one make the mistake of supposing that there was no true faith in Christ, and no sincere piety and devotion, even in that age of superstition and authority. Even some of the popes, and many of the bishops, gave wise Christian instruction and admonition to the Church. The Ten Commandments, the Lord's prayer, and the Apostles' Creed were at least made familiar to the people. Some of the purest and noblest examples of a serene faith and deep devotion to God, existed in that period of the Church. Not a few enlightened minds taught of God, protested against the evils of the times. The Church of God was not extinct in the world. The gates of hades had not prevailed against it. It was a corrupt Church, indeed, and an apostate Church, but it was the only Church God had in the world to bear witness to his name and to promulgate his Gospel. If it had been wholly dead, and wholly corrupt, entirely destitute of truth and spiritual life, there could not have issued from it a reformation to bless the world. That reformation we are now to study more particularly to see what lessons it can teach us on the subject of Christian union.

Theory vs. Practice; Or, How a Co-operationist Opposes Federation.

I very much regret this discussion. As I see it, it promises no good, but much evil. As it relates to ourselves, I am sure this is true. The people are in no mood for it, and if necessary they will express themselves in a way which will not be misunderstood. And our leading papers and men ought not to evoke this necessity. They can prevent it, and they should do it. Instead of thrusting this bone of contention into our midst, let them rather follow after the things which make for peace. Let them heed the Master's words: "It must needs be that offenses come; but woe to that man by whom the offense cometh."

It is a peculiarly unfortunate time for such a discussion. Our eyes and hearts are just turning toward the great centennial, only three years away, when we hope to see our numbers doubled and all our enterprises, missionary, educational, benevolent, etc., quickened into a new and larger life. Let this discussion be pressed and all these hopes will be blasted. But if every energy is exerted to arouse our people in the interests of these aims, God will bless us as we have never yet been blessed, and the second century will see an invincible host, filled with enthusiasm, pleading for the restoration of primitive Christianity.

I am no alarmist, but if I mistake not, an undue pressure of this question now will hurt us worse than the organ and society questions combined, and hence I plead that it be discontinued.

But, if possible, the larger outlook is even worse. The work of the Campbells and their co-laborers, the most remarkable chapter in the history of the religious world for a hundred years, if not for nineteen hundred, was born in a protest against denominationalism, and it has grown into its present splendid proportions by loyalty to this protest. If this position was right then it is right now; therefore, any movement looking to the perpetuation of denominationalism is wrong; and since federation, to many of us, looks in that direction, it must be condemned.

I do not wonder that these denominations favor federation. They have read the handwriting on the wall, and they see their doom. Our plea has commended itself to many men wherever made, both in these churches and in the world, and as a result, a mighty tide of indignation is rising which, if not speedily stayed, threatens to sweep denominationalism out of existence. Division is being recognized as the sin of the age, and is condemned alike by reason and revelation. And these men, only men at the best, reared in an atmosphere of division and taught from childhood that divisions were of God, naturally hail as a friend in need the federation movement. And why should they not? It not only recognizes their right to live, but it stereotypes their peculiarities and forces us from the impregnable stronghold which has given us every victory in our splendid history. But why we should favor I can not see. It gives us nothing good which we do not already possess, and it shackles us with chains and weights which must soon convert us into a "disappearing brotherhood."

But I am reminded that federation is "a practical manifestation of the degree of unity which already exists." But it is not needed for such a "manifestation." The union of work in the Y. M. C. A., the Y. P. S. C. E., in temperance and benevolent enterprises and in union revivalistic meetings, is a sufficient "manifestation" of this "unity" and possesses all the virtues of federation, without its vices. At this writing about 30 of the churches of this city (Dallas, Tex.,) are co-operating in a union meeting, and we have all the co-operation possible in the present divided condition of Christendom, and yet we are not federated.

M. M. Davis.

We are responsible for the title of Brother Davis' article. We asked him to answer two questions for our symposium. He preferred writing the protest above against any kind of federation and even the discussion of the subject. Hence, we give his article a separate place and offer a few comments on the same:

1. If it were only the kind of discussion which has been carried on in some of our journals, that Brother Davis regrets, he would find large company. Nearly the whole brotherhood regrets it. But he seems to regret that the subject of federation has come up for discussion at all, and calls it a "bone of contention" which has been "thrust" upon us. Nothing could be more timely than the calm and dispassionate consideration of this proposition looking at least to a partial union of the Christian forces of this country, while we are preparing to celebrate the centennial of our Christian union movement.

2. Alas, that a proposition of this pacific and fraternal character loking to the fulfilment of our Lord's prayer for the unity of his followers, should be regarded as a "bone of contention" which we should refuse to even consider! Indeed, Brother Davis thinks that if we would ignore this action of our brethren seeking a closer unity, and betake ourselves to building up our own interests, the Lord would pour out an abundant blessing upon us! What the Lord wants, then, is not the union of all his people in loving co-operation, but just to see our own general interests thrive and prosper! Now, we believe in a most energetic prosecution of all the lines of our work and particularly that part of it which has to do with the unification of a divided church; but to become so absorbed in building up a big church or party of our own as to disregard the very end we started out to accomplish, is the last course we would recommend in order to receive God's blessing.

---

3. Brother Davis' idea of federation as a trick for "the perpetuation of denominationalism" by the denominations who "read the handwriting on the wall," and adopt this method to save themselves from being engulfed in the incoming tide of Christian union, is wholly unworthy of him. It is an idea suited to a narrow provincialist who has not read modern Christian literature nor mingled with the great interdenominational movements of our time. How utterly preposterous it seems to those who attended the Inter-Church Conference in New York, and heard the earnest prayers and eloquent appeals which eminent leaders in all the religious organizations made for the realization of Christ's prayer for unity! If they see "the handwriting on the wall" of denominationalism, ought we not to rejoice in that fact, and be on hand to interpret the meaning of the writing?

4. And yet, after all this deprecating the evils of federation as a means of hindering Christian union, Brother Davis is at present engaged in that very thing! He is "co-operating" with the churches of Dallas in a "union meeting," but of course that is not local federation! We suppose the preachers met together, first of all, and agreed to co-operate, and had an understanding about when and where they would meet and what they would undertake to accomplish. That was the "basis" of their local co-operation. And Brother Davis actually "recognized" these denominations as "Christian bodies," and is meeting and worshiping with them just as if they were Christians trying to convert souls, instead of seeking merely to perpetuate their denominationalism! And yet he exhorts his brethren not even to discuss so wicked a thing as federation! If that is not equal to the conscientious brother who objected to his son's having a "fiddle," but was reconciled on learning it was only a violin, we are willing to discount our knowledge of logic. Is it not probable that these churches in Dallas see "the handwriting on the wall," and have gotten Brother Davis into this co-operation to save themselves from being swallowed up by the Christian church? And even Brother Davis plays into their hand!! Alas! Alas!

Notes and Comments.

We have said often that our position in pleading for Christian union on the simple basis of faith in and allegiance to Jesus Christ, is so manifestly Scriptural and reasonable that the only way to oppose it was to misrepresent it, and alas! many have resorted to that method of opposition. These opponents were not willing to take the statement of the advocates of such plea as the true explanation of its meaning, but would inject their own meaning in to it, and oppose that meaning. Precisely that is the method of the opponents of church federation. No man among us has dared to oppose the method of co-operation submitted by the New York Conference as its friends interpret it. They inject meanings into it which all its friends repudiate, and then oppose their own meanings!

A friend writes: "A great many people are scared at the word federation." No doubt, but it would be the same with any other new word, brought into religious use, and given a Christian content. The word is a small matter. It is the thing that is vastly important, namely: Combining the Christian forces of America so as to strike some effective blows against the forces of evil. The method of doing that has been called federation, adapting a term used in governmental affairs to a religious use. To argue that it has the same precise significance in its religious use that it has in its political use, is precisely as if one should object to the word union, as we use it in speaking of the union of Christians, because the same word in its political use has a meaning that does not apply to Christianity. The word federation may or may not be the best word to indicate the kind of co-operation proposed; if not, let a better name be suggested. That is a very minor matter. It is used to signify an orderly co-operation of Christian bodies in such a way as to make manifest to the world that in some respects at least they are one, and have common aims. If one does not object to the thing let him suggest a better name for it and we will all adopt it.

A correspondent of "The Interior," of Chicago, advocates allowing children who have been baptized in infancy to "be baptized once more as adults, when they confess Jesus as their personal Savior." The writer says: "Baptism in the case of adults stands for cleansing following upon repentance and the exercise of saving faith. It can not mean that in the case of a child. To me child baptism is something quite different from adult baptism. In the former there is no volition of the subject. The act involved is the act of the parents; it is their service of consecration of their offspring to the Lord." He argues, therefore, that even the consecrated children of the church have the privilege of making their confession and sealing it in baptism, as do outsiders making the same confession at the same time. To them, then, it will represent the washing of regeneration; the baptism of infancy can not represent that. Where," he asks, "is the flaw in this reasoning?" It is gratifying to notice this evidence that pedobaptists are coming to a clearer apprehension of the meaning and place of baptism. The flaw in this writer's reasoning is in assuming that the New Testament authorizes infant baptism and in proposing to "rebaptize" those who were "consecrated" in infancy, instead of substituting believers' baptism for a practice that has no Scriptural support and that stands in the way of personal obedience to the Lord in baptism.

Here's another confession from a Presbyterian. What other religious body will confess its sins? Shall we allow Presbyterians to excel us all in the merit of frankness?

> "One great fault of our denomination is, and has been, that we are not as elastic as we should be. We want all to think in respect to our doctrines and polity exactly the same. This has led to dissensions and divisions; and it is time, high time, that we are wiser, and on things not essential allow differences of view."

We do not always agree with Brother Lipscomb, of the "Gospel Advocate," but his remarks, in reply to a brother who had written to him concerning the distinctive use of the name "Christian," as applied to our churches, are so true and appropriate that we give a liberal quotation:

> "All my life I have been telling Baptists, Methodists and Presbyterians, when they would charge us with appropriating the name 'Christian' to ourselves, that I was persuading them to take the same name and share it with us. Then when they have nicknamed us 'Campbellites,' I have always told them I call them the name they choose; I do not nickname them. In this I do as I would be done by. If they choose to be called by the name God gives his children, I will not object, but will urge them to act worthy of that name by obeying all of his laws and keeping his ordinances. Oh, yes, I let other people select their own names, and ask them to let me do the same! And I always rejoice at all truth that others hold. One truth, if it is an active one, leads to other truth, as one error leads to others. There is danger of becoming sectarian in opposing other sects."

Brother Lipscomb is also right in saying that the convention at St. Louis did not adopt the name "Christian Church" to the exclusion of other names. A committee reported the name "Church of Christ"—not Christian Church—as our official name, but this was voted down by a large majority as tending to exclude other Scriptural names. We desire to emphasize strongly the concluding remark of Brother Lipscomb, namely: "There is danger of becoming sectarian in opposing other sects." This is one of the very things we have been emphasizing for many years. While opposing sectism we must not become sectarian.

Editor's Easy Chair.

There is something very inspiring about the mountains—God's monuments commemorating the mighty upheavals of the dim and distant past. For weeks we had been living at the base of one of the New Mexico ranges of mountains and in full view of two or three others, watching them with admiration as their white summits glistened in the morning sun or glowed at evening time with his parting rays, and when storms swept over them, and when the lights and shadows would play upon them. But we longed to go right up into them and upon them. The day came—an ideal day for a trip to the mountains. The early morning clouds were sent scampering away by the rising sun, leaving a sky of regular "Yale blue," as one of the young men called it. There were six of us loaded up in a farm wagon, including the driver, and two were women, and two were Indianapolis gentlemen, one a young lawyer and the other a college president. There was, of course, an abundance of provisions, for it was to be a picnic in the mountains. The road followed the arroyo for a few miles, as it is dry at this season, and then wound around a mountain side until we reached the summit of the range which we followed along a good mountain road for a few miles. Now, the tall, graceful pines stood in their primitive beauty, and through the open spaces, looking back westward, and southwestward, we could see the Santa Fe and Rio Grande valleys spread out in quiet beauty far beneath us, while beyond these, forty or fifty miles away, the Jemez and the Sandias ranges lifted their snowy peaks proudly and grandly against the sky. What scenes for a painter! We tried our kodak, but no photographs could do justice to the splendid blending of colors that entered into the majestic pictures which Nature framed before us. To stand upon these serene heights, inhale the pure air, and take in with the eye the immense distances that stretch away to the far horizon, and to know that all this is but a small part of God's handiwork and that you are his child, far more precious in his sight than all material grandeur, is to feel the sublimity of being and the dignity of human life.

Further on our mountain road turned down a mountain defile so steep that the ladies felt it would rest them to walk awhile! But we soon reached a clear mountain stream, the head waters of the Arroyo Hondo, where there were a sawmill and a few log cabins for the workmen. This was our destination. Here we unhitched our team, fed them, and on the sunny mountain side we improvised a table and seats out of some boards, and spread a banquet that would have been appetizing to one accustomed to eat at the king's table. If any of our Easy Chair readers have not experienced the pleasure of eating a dinner in the mountains, with a mountain appetite, and in the midst of mountain scenery, they have something to look forward to. Dinner dispatched, we wandered down a deep gorge through which flowed a mountain stream that in the uncounted millenniums of the past has worn its way through the granite walls of the canyon. The scenery was wild and picturesque, and it was with difficulty that we could pick our way over the huge boulders, and across fallen timbers, following the little rollicking stream down to where Nature had apparently determined to stop its downward course by closing in its massive granite walls across its path. But the stream had won its way, and worn a deep, smooth passage through the hard stone and fell in a miniature Niagara below. At this point four of our party turned back to get the team and begin the homeward journey. But learning that this stream intercepted the mountain road three or four miles further on, Brother Morgan, the Indianapolis lawyer, and the Easy Chair resolved to explore the gorge until it debouched into a small valley where the wagon would intercept us. It was an experience to be remembered. Leaping from rock to rock, clambering over fallen timber, crossing the stream here and there on ice beneath which the stream was flowing and having it break under our weight, stopping occasionally to catch our breath and admire the wildness of the scenery, we reached in safety the point of intersection, and had time for a fifteen minutes' rest on the sunny side of an embankment before our wagon came along. Following the Arroyo Hondo we returned by a new way to the valley, three miles south of Sunny Side ranch, where we struck the old Santa Fe trail, traveled by the stage when St. Louis was an Indian trading post and Kansas City was not yet, and were soon at home again, weary, but delighted with the experiences of the day.

These lines are penned in the midst of preparation for the return trip. Our six weeks' stay in New Mexico has greatly increased our appreciation of this territory as an integral part of the American Union. Irrigation is the key that is to unlock its treasures of soil, now lying idle, and make its valleys and plains bloom like a garden. It is rich in climate, scenery, mineral and coal deposits, and has a soil unsurpassed in fertility, only waiting for capital and enterprise to store its now wasted water in reservoirs, and send it forth in life-giving currents to make the desert places glad. If our vote could determine it, New Mexico, when ready, should enter the Union a state by itself. It needs no additional territory to make it worthy of a place in the great sisterhood of states. And Santa Fe should remain its capital. Santa Fe! whose history reaches back into the cloudland of myth and mystery. Before the Pilgrim Fathers landed at Plymouth Rock, or the Cavaliers at Jamestown; before Boston, Philadelphia, New York, Chicago, or St. Louis were even dreamed of, this little quiet city, nestling here in the mountains on the banks of the Santa Fe river, had begun its historic career! We can not doubt that with this history as a heritage, and with its superb climate and magnificent scenery, its environment by mountain ranges rich in coal and minerals, and furnishing water, when stored, for the wide fertile valley in which it is located, Santa Fe is yet to become the beautiful and prosperous capital city of a growing and imperial commonwealth, whose historic past will be eclipsed by its brilliant future.

But what of the Santa Fe of to-day? What has it now to interest the tourist and temporary sojourner? There is San Miguel Church, built in 1540, the capitol, the penitentiary, the United States Indian School, St. Katherine Indian School, the federal building, deaf and dumb asylum, the Presbyterian Mission School, Old Fort Marcy, the old plaza, the Governor's Palace, an adobe structure built in 1598, and continuously occupied for over 300 years, monuments to Kit Carson and to the brave men who fell in battle with the savages, and in defense of the Union. There is Mexican life as one sees it in Mexico, with all its quaint and antique flavor. And then there is Max Frost, editor of "The New Mexican," a splendid embodiment of the indomitable energy and pluck of New Mexico, whom neither loss of sight nor partial paralysis, now chiefly cured, can prevent from being a leading spirit in molding the character of the new state that is to be. He believes in single statehood and has faith in the future of New Mexico. In its surroundings, too, Santa Fe is fortunate. In easy reach are the pueblos, and the cliff-dwellings, the latter bringing us back to a remote civilization that antedates that of the Indians. And then there is the inexhaustible glory of the mountains all about it, those on the east forming a part of the Pecos Forest Reservation. And there is Sunmount, a Tent City, less than two miles out, where victims of the white plague dwell in canvas and find health, and beyond that, a few hundred yards, is Nagel's "Sunny Side Ranch," which has been the headquarters of the Easy Chair for the past few weeks. And now we go hence. But the junior member of the family remains until he fully regains his health, which he has already begun to do. We leave reluctantly, but, like Cataline, we may return again.

* * * We had a safe and pleasant journey home. And this last paragraph is written in our own Easy Chair at our old familiar desk. It was a helpful change in many ways, in spite of the fact that the war in the rear made rather strenuous demands upon us. Now that we are back on the scene of action and are conducting a peaceable campaign of education, there is reason to hope for an early and successful termination of the conflict, which, when looked back upon from the clearer light of the future, will be seen to have been a Comedy of Errors. There is no reason in the world why all those who prefer light to darkness and truth to error may not see eye to eye upon this question before our Buffalo convention. We make bold to ask the co-operation of our religious press in disseminating light instead of darkness on this subject.

If All Christians Were Christians[*]

By George L. Bush

Underlying all of the many holy ministries of the church, and touching most vitally on every interest, is the Christianization of the church. The arts and inventions of modern times removed every barrier to the progress of Jesus save the indifference of the church.

The present population of the world is estimated at 1,600,000,000 souls. Of these less than 600,000,000 are classed as Christian. That all of these 600,000,000 church members are not Christians in the full Scriptural meaning of the term is manifest in the unsaved condition of the other 1,000,000,000 souls. Many of these are like the foolish virgins, their names appear on the church register and they are counted in the annual report, but they carry no oil and give no light. These are Cretan Christians of whom Paul wrote to Titus, "They profess that they know God; but by their works they deny him." We have some of the Ephesian type, "holding a form of godliness, but having denied the power thereof." There are others like those of whom he sadly wrote to the Philippians, "For many walk of whom I told you often and tell you now even weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ: whose end is perdition, whose god is their appetite, and whose glory is their shame, who mind earthly things." The writer of Hebrews describes another class with whom we are also painfully familiar. "When by reason of the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need again that some one teach you the rudiments of the first principles of the oracles of God;. and are become such as have need of milk and not solid food. But solid food is for full grown men, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern good and evil." There is no desire to "leave the word of the beginning of Christ and press on unto perfection."

Some of these congregations ask and receive little beyond Philip and the eunuch, Cornelius, the jailer, and baptism for the remission of sins. There is often a failure to discern betwixt the disputers of this world and the true "embassador of Christ," between "doubtful disputations" and "the preaching of the cross." Some have joined the church without being united to Christ; they are sound in their peculiar creed, and loyal to certain traditions, but are unchristian in spirit and disloyal in daily life.

Many congregations are in the sad state of the church at Sardis, of which our Lord said, "I know thy works that thou hast a name that thou livest, and thou art dead." They are dead to all of the activities of the church and live only in its statistics.

The demand of the hour is the conversion of these churches and members to Christ, filling them with his spirit, imbuing them with his passion, and sending them forth upon their divinely given mission. But how can this be done?

1. By converting the church to the work of missions. If all Christians were live missionary Christians, the world's evangelization would be speedily and easily accomplished. The church has been in possession of the great commission for nineteen centuries, but has not been possessed by it since the first century. The real mission of the church has been understood by men here and there through the ages, but has never been fully grasped by the whole church. It is as important to convert a church member to missions as it is to convert a sinner to Christ. "Our own people need to be re-evangelized. The great commission has been emasculated in many pulpits. The "go" has been eliminated from the marching orders of our Lord. The conditions of salvation from past sins are clearly stated, but the duty of observing all things that Jesus has commanded is sadly neglected. "Beginning at Jerusalem" has been revised to read remaining in Jerusalem. Under such conditions many of the converts are stillborn. The birth of a Christian should be like that of a quail; he comes from the shell on the go and keeps going. Anti-ism is the palsy of the religious world to-day and many churches are paralytics. Christ alone can heal these lame churches and they must be brought to him. In the cure of these churches the palsied minister must first be healed. When the preacher gets right on missions, the members will not long remain wrong. The people should have live missionary pastors and evangelists to teach and to lead them. The large number of preachers that have been converted from the error of their way by our missionary conventions would justify their continuance if no other conversions were reported. If all of our modern Jonahs could be swallowed by such a whale as this great convention, the world's Ninevehs would soon be brought to repentance.

George L. Bush.

One of the chief duties of the ministry of to-day is "the education of the church in the very principle of missions." The church of God exists not so much "as a rallying but as a radiating center." Missions is not optional in the curriculum of the Disciples of Christ, it is not a post graduate luxury, but constitutes the "primary work of the church, the work for which the church was commissioned by our Lord." Every page of the New Testament glows with missionary purpose and plan, or the recital of missionary achievement. All of the prayers breathe the missionary spirit; saving faith is missionary faith; "repentance and remission of sins" were to be preached in his name "unto all the nations"; while both the Lord's supper and baptism have a deep missionary significance. Of the former Paul says: "For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye proclaim the Lord's death till he come." Every time baptism is administered, we likewise declare the Lord's burial and resurrection. "Christianity requires perpetual propagation to attest its genuineness," and to assure its continuance. If all who disbelieve are to be condemned, and all who do not repent are to perish, what hope of salvation can be found for those who refuse to "go. . . .and make disciples of all the nations"? The work of restoration is certainly very incomplete and far from satisfactory that saves men from past transgressions, and leaves them to backslide through lack of service. Our Savior made provision for the salvation of the church, in carrying out his program for the evangelization of the world. A church that is neither a goer nor sender will soon be a blank and a memory. There may be sufficient grounds for various views as to what was the "unpardonable sin" in the days of Jesus, but to-day I have no hesitancy in defining it as incurable anti-ism. The secret of the marvelous growth of the primitive church is found in its missionary activity. Every disciple was an enthusiastic missionary. The elders were teachers and the deacons became evangelists. Stephen was city evangelist in Jerusalem among the foreign populations. Phliip was a general evangelist in Judea and Samaria. There were missions in the homes of such choice spirits as Mary in Jerusalem and of Aquila and Priscilla in Rome. Their homes were Christian homes. From such homes the eloquent Apollos learned the way of the Lord more perfectly and Mark and Timothy went forth as missionaries. Young men who were called to preach the Gospel were not hindered by their families from entering the ministry of the church.

These early churches were great churches because they were on fire with missionary zeal. Jerusalem, Antioch, Corinth, Ephesus and Rome were great centers of extensive missionary operations. Paul immortalized

[*] An address, slightly abbreviated, delivered at the San Francisco convention.

Thessalonica in these words: "Ye became an ensample to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia, for from you hath sounded forth the word of the Lord, not only in Macedonia and Achaia but in every place your faith to Godward is gone forth." These were not barreled-up churches and they were not served by buttoned-up preachers. They believed in expansion, and not centralization or crystallization. The Gospel light was not put under "the one great church" bushel, with the big pastor to hold down the lid, but was made to shine "in every place" from these churches as radiating centers. The Gospel was preached in seventeen languages in the city of Jerusalem and through all Judea and Samaria. This was apostolic city evangelization and home missions, and furnished a shining example for churches that seek greatness to-day.

The zeal and liberality of these early churches stand in striking contrast to the indifference and miserly gifts of many who claim to be apostolic now. Of the church in Jerusalem we read, "Not one of them"—in a membership running up into the thousands—"said that aught of the things he possessed was his own"

Divine ownership and human stewardship were plainly taught and universally recognized. Some sold their lands and others their goods and put the proceeds into the mission fund. This was the first "annuity money." Barnabas sold his island plantation, gave the money to the church and gave himself to be a missionary. This was the first "Named Memorial Fund" and he was the first living link member. Of the churches in Macedonia Paul said: "For according to their power, I bear witness, yea and beyond their power, they gave of their own accord beseeching us with much entreaty in regard of this grace and the fellowship in the ministering to the saints: and this, not as we had hoped, but first they gave their own selves to the Lord, and to us by the will of God."

If all Christians would thus consecrate themselves and their money to the Lord the problems that worry our mission boards would be solved. Our secretaries would not be compelled to beseech and plead with the churches for means to sustain the work we are now doing; but like Moses when building the tabernacle in the wilderness, they would be embarrassed with a surplus. Bushnell has well said that "the great problem is the Christianizing of the money power of the world." The church has the means but it is not consecrated to Christ. A recent writer has truly said that the real "yellow peril" is not in the success of the Japanese arms, but in the hoarding and wrong use of gold. There is urgent need of plain teaching on the money question. Our Lord's most severe denunciations were directed against unfaithful stewards. The first miracle in the early church was the healing of a man lame in his feet and the first case of discipline was the removal of one who was dishonest in his gifts to the church.

For those who will not make him "Lord of all," Christ will not be "Lord at all." When all Christians come to observe the same clear rules of honest dealing in their church contributions that they do in paying their taxes and store accounts, there will be no lack of funds in the Lord's treasury. Late in life Dr. A. J. Gordon said, "I am tempted never to beg a cent for God again, but rather to spend my energy in getting Christians spiritualized, assured that they will then be liberalized."

When all carnal Christians became spiritual Christians all of the appointed days for missions, education and benevolence will be joyfully observed by all of our churches, and there will be thousands of living link churches and tens of thousands of living link members.

Religious Teaching at State Universities

By A. C. GRAY

In THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of November 2, W. J. Lhamon gave, under the caption, "A Notable Conference," a very interesting account of the conference on "Religious Education in State Universities and Colleges," which was held at the installation of Dr. James as president of the University of Illinois. The University of Michigan was represented in this conference by Prof. Francis W. Kelsey, head of the Latin department and an elder in the Presbyterian church in Ann Arbor.

After returning home, Professor Kelsey called together the pastors of the various churches in Ann Arbor, professors, and others interested in the religious education of students. President Angell presided and at the close of the conference appointed the ministers a committee to report the meeting to their various denominational papers. Professor Kelsey gave a very interesting account of the conference held at the University of Illinois, which was followed by a discussion, participated in by representatives of the Methodist, Baptist, Congregational, Episcopalian, Presbyterian, and Christian Churches, and by professors in the University of Michigan. Professor Kelsey took the ground that the isolation of theological schools had proved injurious to the seminaries, as well as to the general spirit of education. The separation of religion from general education is an unnatural one. An education is not complete, he maintained, which does not include them both. In view of the fact that state universities are prohibited by law from distinctly religious instruction, he urged affiliation for denominational schools with state universities as is in vogue in the University of Toronto and, in a less degree, in the University of North Dakota. This would tend to give a religious influence to the tone of state universities and would raise academic standing in theological schools.

President Angell said that the greatest obstacle to having theological colleges in close proximity to state universities was that they were already located with their expensive plants elsewhere. Our own brother, W. M. Forrest, maintained that, even if it were possible to have theological colleges thus affiliated it would not touch the great problem of the religious instruction of the vast majority of students who intend to enter other professions than the ministry. The writer knows, by actual experience, how true this has proved in the university where such affiliation has been given the longest and completest trial. He, as an undergraduate, substituted Bibical Greek in Knox College for third year classical Greek in the University of Toronto, getting university credit for it. Three such substitutions were allowed in a four years' course, but students substituting invariably chose the ministry as a life work. The religious affiliated colleges did not influence perceptibly the masses of students. In many state universities, as in the University of Michigan, courses of instruction are given in Semitics and Hellenistic Greek, which are theological in character. It is popular Bible instruction of lay students which is the crying need, such instruction as will prevent such a blunder as was made in a senior class in the study of Browning's "Saul" in the University of Michigan recently, when a student, on being asked by the professor whether David the minstrel and David the giant-killer were the same person, answered, after apparently much hard thinking, that she did not think they were.

At present, many indications point to a very strong desire on the part of the authorities of state universities to have students in attendance brought under religious influence. The University of Michigan affords every facility to the pastors of churches in Ann Arbor to come into contact with students. In the official registration, in addition to the name and address, students are asked to fill out the following blanks: "If a church member, what church?" "If not a church member, what church do you attend?" "If you attend no church, please underline the word, No." This registration is accessible to the ministers of the city and is very much more complete than those of the Y. M. C. A. and of the churches. In view of the attitude of state universities to religious instruction, it seems ill-advised to speak of them as "godless." Professor Kelsey maintained that faculties of state institutions "are not anti-Christian or even non-Christian, but that they are made up of almost wholly of men who have Christian faith. Their danger is that by preoccupation and stress of work they become religiously atrophied." And this may be equally said of students, not only in state universities, but in other colleges, who are pursuing secular studies.

It was a peculiar satisfaction to hear President Angell at such a representative gathering state that the Disciples were foremost in the United States in attempting to solve the problem of imparting instruction in the Bible to students in state universities. He referred, of course, to the excellent work carried on by the Christian Woman's Board of Missions in their Bible chairs at state institutions.

Work For a United Church To Do

By Frank Mason North

The recent Interchurch Conference on federation rendered a most important service to the evangelical churches of this country by affording them a common view point. Its platform was a fine adjuster of perspectives. There was throughout the six days of the Carnegie Hall meetings a growing consciousness of the church's integrity, of the essential oneness of believers. But equally was felt the deepening of conviction concerning the true range of the church's activity. "What to do," was the characteristic note rather than "What to believe." For though the conference justly gave utterance to its fidelity to the one central fact of faith, Jesus Christ, the divine Revealer of God and Redeemer of men, its confession was made as a basis for its service. It is not strange, therefore, that as a result of the conference, the leaders of the churches in widely separated communities are not only asserting the principles expressed in the conference, but are seeking the practical methods by which the larger Christian service may be given to the needy and expectant world.

None realize the significance of these results more than the careful students of civic life. These find three areas of service practically unoccupied by the churches. They are so conditional that neither the individual church nor a single denomination can adequately cultivate them. The spasmodic attempts made in severalty have issued chiefly in discouragement and defeat. It is not a merely academic question, but one burdened with a great hope when oft repulsed, but undaunted workers in our great cities ask, "Is it not altogether possible for the federated church to occupy these fields?"

The first area is that of poor relief. Dr. Washington Gladden, in a few words at the first morning session of the conference, more than intimated that the churches of a city have no right to surrender their privilege of caring for the poor. Organized charity is inevitable and the community as such should bear the burden of a pauperism which far too often is the result of conditions which itself imposes. A scientific charity is required, but an irreligious or non-religious charity is a misnomer. The federated churches in any city, or in any district of a city, in proper co-ordination with the public authorities and special societies, should afford the truest agencies for ministration to the poor. The strength of churches among communities of destitution is that they "care for" the poor and are houses of help for all people; and, conceding all that may be claimed for organized charity, the salvation of such communities is that there are Christian churches which accept the duty and understand the art of ministration. A united church should be able so to order its work, so to establish its relations to its community, that its humaneness may be felt even before its Christianity is accepted.

The second area is created by foreign immigration. The present practice is to leave the vast body of immigrants who settle in sections of our cities to the educative influences of an un-American and, most generally, a debased environment of secular agencies, civic and political, and, so far as the children are concerned, to the public school. It is only recently that any worthy attempt has been made to understand the people who from half a hundred different nations or communities enter the teeming life of our American cities. They begin in ignorance, easily and often inevitably absorb false ideas of law and privilege, receive no adequate idea of the meaning of the church or of America's interpretation of the Gospel, and end in indifference, in prejudice and sometimes in hatred. Whose is the fault? What serious organized effort has the Christian church in any American city ever made to forestall this prejudice, or to offset the influence of this environment? What real ground have these people for banking upon Christian friendliness? What means have they of knowing that the church has a heart and a message? What if our young people's societies, which in many places are utterly ineffective by reason of lack of incentive and occupation, should intelligently study the origins of these people, realize their splendid ancestry, their romantic history, their fine essential quality, befriend them in their homes, not by patronage, but by service; teach their young people the real meaning of our institutions and our faith, learn from them the meaning of that strange, fascinating life in the lands from which they come across the sea, and make with them common cause in all things that bear on the common life of sympathy and of mutual service; might not some of the grave questions which vex our statesmen and bewilder our churchmen be put in the way of a speedy and satisfying answer? Now this is a field not for a sect or for a single church, but for the united church. It is a ministry of the highest order. It demands statesmanship and consecration. The cities will never understand the Gospel until the church is ready to give it such practical intrepretation as this care of the stranger will involve.

And there is a third area. The child life of our cities is becoming pagan while the church looks on. The unique plea of Dr. G. U. Wenner, of New York, that the authorities should give the children of our churches release from the public schools, without detriment, on Wednesday afternoons, that they may receive religious instruction in their own churches, is undoubtedly to have a wide consideration, and is worthy of it. This, however, does not make provision for the religious education of the multitudes of children who are not allied to any church. The centers of influence do not touch them religiously. From the majority of homes religion is an outcast. Tens of thousands of children never cross the Sunday-school's threshold. The direct teaching of even the essentials of the Christian faith is largely excluded from our public schools. The simple fact remains that in unreckoned numbers the children of our cities are coming up into maturity with scant appreciation of morals and no spiritual motive or sanction for conduct.

Has the church—the united church—here no function? This is no matter for sectarian zeal. Individual parishes overlapping upon the same field will duplicate service for the few while the many are left untouched. But if, by strong interdenominational purpose and combined resources, a well-ordered system of centers for recreation and study were devised—centers where the art of play might be taught and the law of kindness illustrated, where the conventions of ecclesiasticism might be omitted and the essence of the gospel retained, where the good things might be put up as attractively as are the bad, and the truths that are not now even suspected might be the current coin of the realm—if, in a word, methods which from the social and philanthropic impulse are being employed with growing power by those to whom Christ is not the center and source of life, why may not a united church, by skill of invention and concentration of its combined forces, greatly succeed? May not a federated church get into the child heart of a dense community and become the creator of its ideals and its guide?

Naturally many will say, these are dreams. These are three areas of service, but it is not the church's business. But it is the King's business! What does he say?

BACK TO NATURE

Natural Food for the Old Dame's Use.

"For 8 months Grape-Nuts was my almost sole food," writes a New York City woman.

"I had become a complete wreck, so to speak, had no appetite or relish for any kind of food, lost flesh, dreaded the simplest daily tasks and was dragging out a most wretched existence.

"The Grape-Nuts food took hold of me at once, renewing all the vigor of my nature, and my work became a pleasure to me instead of a hardship. This was 4 years ago, and this happy condition has remained, except when, at times, I have left off Grape-Nuts. Whenever I did so, Nature speedily brought me back to the health-giving diet—back to Grape-Nuts and the joy of renewed health." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

FEDERATION — A Symposium

Some Questions on Federation.

The following letter was sent out by the Editors to a number of brethren, and we continue in this issue the publication of their replies.

In view of the discussion which has been in progress among us for some time on the question of the federation of the churches, The Christian-Evangelist desires to publish a symposium on the subject, for the benefit of its readers, and with the purpose of molding public sentiment rightly on this important issue which now confronts us. Will you kindly, therefore, favor us with brief answers to the following questions which seem to us to embrace the points in discussion:

1. Defining church federation as an agreed-upon method of co-operation in those things which the co-operating churches hold in common, and in which each co-operating Christian body has full freedom to be true to its convictions of truth and duty, are we not, as advocates of Christian union, logically committed to the federation movement as the next practicable step in the direction of the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for the unity of his disciples, and as a practical manifestation of the degree of unity which already exists?

2. Do you approve of the Basis of Federation submitted to the evangelical churches of America for their approval, by the late Inter-Church Conference in New York City, as presenting a practicable plan for such co-operation?

By J. C. Mason.

Replying to question 1, I unhesitatingly say that as I see it, our very plea commits to this movement for a closer relation to all Christian workers. I can not see how one acquainted with "our position" can think otherwise, if he approves the plea of the restoration of the New Testament church. I have watched the controversy carefully anent church federation, and believe that the opposition to it is based upon ignorance of the above definition, in that all are to have "full freedom to be true to convictions of truth and duty." I note that the writers do not seem to see that point in their efforts to condemn "federation."

There is another class. I was present at the Omaha convention when the opposition arose and thought then, and have seen no reason to change my mind since then, that it was the most glaring and cheapest piece of demagoguery that I ever witnessed in a convention called Christian.

2. I do, but strictly within the above definition. Where no one is called upon to sacrifice conscientious convictions of truth and duty, we ought to be the first, the most earnest, advocates of such federation.

By W. C. Bower.

1. I approve of the federation of churches, as defined in the first proposition, as a movement toward the union of the people of God. As Disciples of Christ, whose appeal to the world for the last century has been for the reunion of the church, it seems to me that we stand logically committed to this movement as a means toward that end, and as a step in that direction. Of all the people of God, none should hail with greater joy such a movement, or be more willing to unite in it, than the Disciples of Christ.

Most certainly I do not believe that the federation of the churches is the final thing to be desired. Our plea will be satisfied with nothing short of vital and organic union. Nor do I believe that this tendency, so graciously manifesting itself throughout the religious world, will be satisfied with anything short of its consummation in the organic union of the churches. But that federation is a movement in that direction, and a means toward that end, can scarcely be questioned. The most immediate way toward unity is through intimate fellowship and, above all, through co-operation in the work which is common to all. Logic and controversy alone will not nearly so quickly break down the prejudices and divisive tendencies. The federation movement emphasizes the things that are held in common, while minimizing the things that divide, which are, after all, inconsiderable when measured by the things we hold in common.

Occupying our position as pleading for the simple teachings and practices of the New Testament and the apostolic church, we have absolutely nothing to lose, and everything to gain, by uniting in such a movement. Of all religious bodies, our people have the least to fear from entering into such a relation. We have no written creed or complex ecclesiastical organization to be imperiled. The degree of the strength of our plea to solve this problem is the degree of the guarantee of our safety in entering this federation movement.

Should the Disciples withhold from this movement, it would seem to nullify, in the eyes of our religious neighbors, the force of our plea for unity. Clearly there are two elements in the problem of Christian union: the first, the desire for union; the second, the discovery of the proper and effective method. With the first of these elements we are in perfect accord. To create the spirit of unity has been the effort of the Disciples for nearly a century. Shall we not rejoice that this spirit, from whatever means, is now possessing the hearts of the greater part of the Lord's people? The first end, for which we have so earnestly prayed and labored, is being rapidly achieved, no matter by what agencies. With regard to the second element, even if all of our religious neighbors do not yet see eye to eye with us as to the method, ought we not, uniting ourselves with these seekers after unity, to lift our voice in favor of what seems to us to be the only true and final solution to the question which, let us gladly confess, no longer burdens us alone, as it did at the beginning and the middle of the present century? By refusing to identify ourselves with a movement manifestly seeking in an earnest spirit the solution of this question, we would utterly qualify, if not destroy, our plea for unity upon the New Testament basis.

It must also be remembered that in the great fundamentals there already exists a large degree of unity which, under the present conditions, does not appear to the non-Christian world. That which most appeals to the world is the divided condition of the church. Manifestly this does not truly represent the actual degree of unity already attained. Federation would give a large degree of evidence to this untiy.

These great movements toward union seem to me to be the evident signs of the working of the Spirit of the Lord in the hearts of his people. May we not trust to the leading of the same divine Spirit to guide his people into the right solution of the problems which will arise in the course of the attempt to arrive at the will of the Master in regard to the unity of his church?

2. I approve of the basis of federation submitted by the Inter-Church Conference as a practicable plan for co-operation.

By G. A. Peckham.

1. With our constant profession of an earnest desire for the union of all Christians we are logically committed to church federation as defined by you. If we refuse to take part in such federation, we have no right to complain when others charge us with a lack of sincerity in our pleadings for unity.

2. I approve of the basis of federation submitted, because it grants perfect freedom of conscience to all who are working for the kingdom of Christ. If we are to insist upon agreement at every point before we can federate upon the great truths of the Gospel, then federation, to say nothing of unity, is an impossibility.

The proposed federation is a step in the right direction because it is an effort "to bring the Christian bodies of America into united service for Christ and the world." The purpose of the movement is "to promote the application of the law of Christ in every relation of human life," and so make him Lord over all. Divided Christendom in our country is to make an honest attempt to co-operate in doing the work of the Master. The various bodies represented are to meet as "the churches of Christ in America," leaving all party names behind. The effect of all this will be to call the attention away from what is of minor importance and fix it upon Jesus and his gracious purpose of salvation. When this is done, a long step has been taken toward answering our Savior's prayer for the unity of his church; for history confirms the statement that all divisions in the body of Christ have sprung up because men have lost sight of the real spirit of God's revelation, having their vision obscured by matters of comparatively little consequence.

There were Christians in Corinth who could overlook the vital truth in the preaching of their inspired teachers and so, noting unimportant differences, divide themselves up into wrangling sects. A little party under the lead of Peter imagined that it was more important to escape defilement as Jews from eating with Gentiles than to preserve the unity of the church, and as a result Paul found there two bodies of Christians who thought that they could not federate.

There seems to be much misapprehension in certain quarters on the subject of federation. It is thought by some to be a violation of New Testament teaching and a sinful recognition of party names.

All opposition thus far appearing against the federation rests upon the quiet assumption that ours are the only Christian congregations and all others must be put into another class. Therefore, we can not enter a federation with them to do the Master's work, although they desire it simply as "churches of Christ," not as Presbyterians, Lutherans or Baptists. Surely they do not baptize in these names, relying upon them for salvation, but in the name of Jesus as the only name given among men whereby we must be saved. Do they not use them much as we use Disciples spelled with a big D to distinguish ourselves from Christ's other disciples? They do not ask us to take on any of these names, so we need have no trouble on that score. Nor do they ask us to give up a single thing that the Scriptures require. The one thing that they do ask, however, is that we co-operate with them in giving visible unity to Christ's kingdom on earth and in advancing his cause among men.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

We leave Cadiz and Seville with a new idea of the Spanish people. We stood by the tomb of Columbus in the great cathedral at Seville, to which the ashes of the discoverer were removed after the Cuban war from their resting place in Havana, 1899, and gazed with wonder upon the masterpieces of their great artist Murillo and reveled in the beauties of their Moorish architecture. We studied the people on the streets and in the shops, parks and market places and were admitted to some of their richest and most beautiful homes with gracious and elegant courtesy, and we come away with a cordial appreciation of their genius and their possibilities. As the gorgeous sunset gilded the white towers and roofs of the city and tinted and glorified the soft fleecy clouds in the sky above Cadiz, and deepened the blue of the sea, the whole scene looked to us like one of the marvelous pictures of the "Painter of Conceptions." The sunny land was left behind and we steamed away toward the Pillars of Hercules. In the early morning—

> "In the dimmest northeast distance
> Dawned Gibraltar, grand and gray."

Here is a simple rock, like a lion couchant, rising out of the sea, about two miles north and south and two-thirds of a mile east and west, and would give one a seven-mile walk to go around it. It looks peaceful enough. It is familiar to every one in the announcements of the Prudential Insurance Company. It has three summits, the highest, Europa Point, 1,430 feet, overlooks two continents and two seas. It has a story going back to Phenicians and Romans, Goths and Vandals and Moors. It suffered 14 sieges before Spain took it in 1309 and in 1704 in three days Spain lost to the English what she had taken three centuries to gain. In 1779 Spain and France entered upon a three years' siege to get this rock, but failed, and the British flag still flies over the greatest fortification on the globe. The Portals of the Ancient World—one views this and its opposite point with a sort of awe. As in the Homeric era, the Pillars of Hercules form the gateway of a world of wonder, only for us within, and not without, these portals, the world of wonder lies, the Atlantic and the Mediterranean have changed places. To the Greek on the bosom of the wide-winding river Oceanus lay the Islands of the Blest, where "the life of mortals is most easy," and "there is neither snow nor winter, nor much rain, but ocean is ever sending the breezes of Zephyrus to refresh man," but we look eastward to storied cities and venerable ruins, to a region forever sacred in history "where dead but sceptered sovereigns rule our spirits from their urns." We see the Pharos of Tarifa, the pirates' nest of other times, and wonder what congress may be doing with the tariff laws. We behold the great hills of the African coast and think of Augustine, and a great story of a dead civilization, and another of great wrongs.

The rock has been compared to a lion asleep, with his head turned toward Africa, "as if with a dreamy and steadfast attention," and again, "with head turned toward Spain, as if in defiance of his former master, every feature having the character of leonine majesty and power!" A dog will answer as well, or you may fancy Grover Cleveland lying on his back. We see ships here from every quarter — warships and merchantmen; and people that are a mixture of every race and clime. Tommy Atkins reigns everywhere, but there are tall, stately, slow-pacing Moors, white-turbaned Turks, thick-lipped and woolly-headed Africans, quick-eyed, gesticulating Greeks, gabardined Jews, Spanish smugglers and sailors, "rock scorpions," and back of all the beetling, lowering, giant rock which commands everything. Said an English sailor to me, as I stood viewing it for the first time: "Hit don't look like nawthin'; but my! the stuff hits got hin hit!" One certainly sees at first very little indication of a fortress. The galleries which are tunneled in tiers along the north front of the rock are from two to three miles in extent. At one extremity they widen out into a spacious crypt known as the Hall of St. George, where Nelson was feasted.

The rock is honeycombed with tunnels, from whose portals gunners may pour deadly fire while completely protected. Two 100-ton guns will throw a ball eight miles, that is, across the strait and two miles beyond into Africa. The Windsor Gallery is half a mile long. Visitors are shown only the lower or union gallery, which pierces the rock about 600 feet above the sea, where the guns are out of date, but one gets an excellent view of the fortifications. These galleries are about 8 feet by 8, and every little way is a space for a cannon and an opening looking down upon the sea. The chief batteries are away up on the height. Between 6,000 and 7,000 men are kept here and everywhere martial law prevails. Our kodak fiends were not allowed much liberty. The rock is provisioned for a seven years' siege. From every point are splendid views. To the north the mountains of Ronda, east the Sierra of the Snows that looks down on Granada; at your feet, town and bay, batteries with tiny ordnance and the harbor with its plaything ships, and farther on, Ceuta, the African Pillar of Hercules.

Curious how some of our intelligent Americans fit themselves for an experience like this cruise. One after several days out of New York discovered that he was going to Jerusalem! I showed one of the ladies a 5 peseto piece and remarked: "Here are the Pillars of Hercules." "What are they?" she innocently asked. I explained and said: "We have them in our dollar sign." "And why should they take them from us?" was the next question. Another in the same company said to me: "What kind of carriage do they use in this country—a caleche?" "Oh," said the first lady, "a calabash is a vegetable!" But she would talk.

England captured this rock—1704, a sort of diversion on the part of their fleet of 45 battleships, when 150 men were stationed here to man 100 guns. George I. was ready to give it up, and all England looked upon it as "a barren rock, an insignificant fort and a useless charge." Even now it is questioned whether or not the thing is a good investment. They say while it could withstand a terrific and prolonged siege, it is valueless as a naval base. Ships could not coal or undergo repairs, nor could men or provisions be landed under fire from the Spanish lines. They declare it

"COFFEE JAGS"

The Doctor Named Them Correctly.

Some one said "Coffee never hurts anyone." Enquire of your friends and note their experiences.

A Phila. woman says:

"During the last 2 or 3 years I became subject to what the doctor called 'coffee jags' and felt like I have heard men say they feel who have drank too much rum. It nauseated me, and I felt as though there was nothing but coffee flowing through my veins.

"Coffee agreed well enough for a time, but for a number of years I have known that it was doing me great harm, but, like the rum toper, I thought I could not get along without it. It made me nervous, disordered my digestion, destroyed my sleep and brought on frequent and very distressing headaches.

"When I got what the doctor called a 'coffee jag' on, I would give up drinking it for a few days till my stomach regained a little strength, but I was always fretful and worried and nervous till I was able to resume the use of the drug.

"About a year ago I was persuaded to try Postum, but as I got it in restaurants it was nothing but a sloppy mess, sometimes cold, and always weak, and of course I didn't like it. Finally I prepared some myself, at home, following the directions carefully, and found it delicious. I persevered in its use, quitting the old coffee entirely, and feeling better and better each day, till I found at last, to my great joy, that my ailments had all disappeared and my longing for coffee had come to an end.

"I have heretofore suffered intensely from utter exhaustion, besides the other ailments and troubles, but this summer, using Postum, I have felt fine." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

Restaurant cooks rarely prepare Postum Coffee properly. They do not let it boil long enough.

costs too much, $250,000,000 having been spent on the defenses and $1,000,000 a year in time of peace being necessary to keep it up, and $20,000,000 required to build the new harbor; but Burke declared, "Gibraltar made England invaluable to its friends and dreadful to its enemies," and the average son of John Bull believes it. Some one asked a German ambassador whether, in his opinion, Von Moltke could take the fortress. The cynical reply was, Von Moltke would not consider it worth taking.

A sandy strip separates the rock from the Spanish lines at Linea, which is called "the neutral ground." Beyond is Algeciras, where the Moroccan conference is now in session, and still farther away to the east is Trafalgar, where Nelson won the victory which cost him his life, Oct. 21, 1805. Linea, the Spanish town of 30,000, is a dirty, uninteresting place. A traveler went into one of their schools and found the teacher and his class of 40 boys all smoking cigarettes. But Gibraltar seems little better. The people are largely Spanish, but one sees every nation under heaven represented, and bad smells, filth, ignorance and poverty are here also, while millions go for guns and men to shoot them. Four religious bodies are at work. Catholic is the prevailing faith. There is an English "cathedral" for the garrison; a Wesleyan mission, which has about 50 communicants; a Free church of Scotland, with 60 members, mainly from the Scotch regiments; but altogether there is a woeful lack of religious work and a great call for "the March offering." The apes from Africa among the rocks are said to be very intelligent creatures. The natives say they can speak, but hide the fact lest they should be made to work. They are respected, like the storks in Holland or the pigeons in Venice. Some one suggests they would afford a fine field for Positivist missionaries!

The market here is a study. One sees Barbary Moors, with snow-white turbans selling chickens and baskets, and Arabs with bare legs and yellow slippers disposing of their wares, and Spanish dealers displaying oranges, lemons and other fruits. They will give you fine, sweet oranges for a cent apiece and a curious native basket to carry them in. Fans and postal cards are on every hand, and all of our party have the postal craze. It is interesting to see a tall clerical-looking man, whose record is 666 churches dedicated and 666 church debts paid, climbing these galleries and talking Spanish familiarly with these Dons, and hobnobbing with Moors and Arabs; and another younger university pastor, in Spanish shoes and with red guide book, getting everywhere, taking in everything, questioning everybody; and brimming over with enthusiasm as he is having the time of his life; and still another preacher with white hear and beard, looking down on the Orient from the Rockies, and greeted at every turn as "Father," his beard a source of never-ending interest to the natives, and the admiring exclamation, "He so very old!" from the boys on the street. We are all taking in the scenes and the sun of this southern clime and find constant surprises and sources of instruction and amusement. Hester chats with priests and people and has already a dozen lectures shaping themselves; and the Lexington teacher is gathering matter for the instruction of half a dozen generations of blue grass beauties, while Haddock swims familiarly and complacently in every sea. We spent Washington's birthday at Gibraltar, saw the Kilpatrick and McClellan here on the way to Manila and felt at home.

The "Whys" of Its Success

The Independence Boulevard Christian Bible school of Kansas City, Mo., is the school that gave $1,240 to missions last June. This is the school in which 225 young people have made the good confession during the last year. This is the school that had the high average attendance of 729 during the winter months of this year. This is the school that is working for an average attendance of 1,000.

Two years ago, that is, January, 1904, this school had an average attendance of 285; an average collection of $6.57. During the month of January, 1906, the average attendance was 729; the average collection, $25.74.

The Sunday-school management has learned the lesson which many of our schools have still to learn—that is, they have kept pace with the progress of the times. The failure of much Christian zeal and religious effort is because of conservatism. Often, if we do not follow the exact line of our ancestors in methods of religious work, we are branded "heretic," and even in this day there is still a strong desire to hold to "the good old ways." This school is not found behind the spirit of the times.

One year ago last September the building of the Sixth and Prospect Christian Church was burned. Their new church home on Independence boulevard had not yet been finished, thus the Bible school of this church was compelled to seek temporary quarters. Through the courtesy of the Independence Avenue Methodist Church they occupied that building from September until January, being compelled to meet in the afternoon (which is a very unpopular hour for Bible schools in Kansas City). During all of these months the activities of the church were necessarily dissipated, and yet through this great trial the school rose from an average attendance of 262 to 468.

If this article is to prove valuable to the reader, some of the "Whys" that have brought about such success must needs be outlined. After we have studied the work of the school, it seems to us that first of all in importance stand the clean-cut business methods of this school.

The entire work of the school is outlined by the executive committee, this executive committee being composed of the superintendent and his three assistant superintendents. These four people often differ widely, but after the pros and cons of the question have been thoroughly discussed they come before the teachers with a unanimous recommendation, and coming before their large force of teachers in this way stamps the entire school with that "pull all together spirit."

Second, but of equal importance, is the high standard of character of the teaching force. It is clearly understood that no one committed to the things of this world will be called to teach in this school. It has come to be considered an honor to be an officer or teacher in the school. Out of a force of almost 100 teachers and officers there is never an absentee unless that person be out of town or too sick to come. Every teacher is required to care for his own absentees, and to call on new pupils the week they are placed in his class.

Following closely in importance is the fact that the social side of the school is well taken care of. Banquets are held for the teachers and officers. At these banquets the best and most helpful speakers are used; if need be, men of prominence in Bible school work are called from outside of the city. The teachers entertain their own pupils in their own homes. The different departments of the school are entertained in the church building as often as the management of the school deems best. No amount of work is considered too great, no reasonable expenditure of money considered too much, to the end that these entertainments be made "worth the while." To know and care for the one who sits next to you during class session, in short, to be made to "feel at home," has much to do with the splendid average attendance of this school. This side of the Bible school work is often neglected.

"Be ye therefore perfect" is the high standard of activity raised by our Master. Perfect standards as regards lesson study, regular attendance, etc., are constantly held before the pupils of this school. The rally cry of "Come every Sunday, rain or shine," has become so much a part of the life of the boys and girls, young men and young women, that the larger proportion of them feel it to be a disgrace to remain at home when it is possible to come.

It is the policy of the school that the name of a pupil shall never be removed from the roll as long as there is any possibility of bringing that pupil back as a regular attendant. To this end, no stone is left unturned by teachers, by officers, or by pastor's assistant.

The young men's department of this school has been recently organized. The present enrollment of this department is 125. During the first sixty days the attendance of this department increased from 16 to 55. This department is well organized. It meets in two divisions on Sunday morning, being taught by two splendid, active business men. This department has its regular monthly meetings, sometimes of a literary nature, sometimes purely social.

The pastor of this school is George Hamilton Combs; the pastor's assistant is Miss Eva Lemert. So thoroughly has the importance of the work of this school been recognized by the pastor, and by the official board of the church, that they have directed Miss Lemert to give all of her time to the work of the school during the last two years. The superintendent of the school is Mr. Herman F. Branstetter, a man who gives his whole heart to the work, and even though he is one of the busiest business men in Kansas City, because of his great love for the work, has given much of his time and talent to the development of what has come to be the largest Bible school in Kansas City. The superintendent of the primary department is Mrs. A. A. Buxton, a woman of national reputation among primary workers, a woman so well qualified for this particular line of activity that she is already known to a large number of our readers. The assistant superintendents are Mr. R. B. Jones and Mr. J. W. Harvey, also busy men, who take time to work in the school. To these two men of unusual sweetness of spirit and of high spiritual life belongs not a little of the success of the school.

So many are the good things to tell about this school, so full of sunshine and sweetness is its atmosphere, so wonderfully has God blessed it in additions to the church, and everything that speaks for its spiritual welfare, that it would, indeed, be a delight to more fully outline its methods and work. It is often said that a large school can not be a spiritual school, and yet we are wont to believe that a school will always be as large as it is good.

In speaking with the management of this school we learned that when the school was small it was almost impossible to find competent teachers, but now that the school is large and prosperous it is not only easier to find teachers, but the quality of the teaching force is superior to what it used to be. As Bible school workers, we have yet to learn not a few lessons on this line.

Our Budget

—The Missouri Lectureship!

—Home Missions must now come to the front.

—The evangelization of America is a magnificent enterprise in which we must bear our full share.

—Contributors to the discussion of federation must be patient. We will use the contributions as fast as we can, but it would require a paper double our present size to accommodate all who wish to be heard.

—More than a page of editorial matter has been crowded out this week, along with many contributed articles. We have received several inquiries for the New York Basis of Federation. This is a healthy sign. It shows that there is a desire to get back to the original subject. We will try to find room to reprint it.

—Our readers seem to be as much in the "mood" for Christian union as they ever were, and while uniting with us in pushing home missions to the front, have an eye to that wider co-operation and unification of Christian forces, to promote which gives us our only excuse for being, as a religious movement.

—You will not fail to see the red subscription blank in this issue; we urge every friend of this restoration movement to make the use of it intended. If each of these is returned to us with at least one new reader our endeavor for a constituency of 100,000 is practically won, and its significance will be such a victory for the cause of apostolic Christianity as will bring great joy to every true soldier of the cross. We call on our friends to return these blanks with the names of new readers of The Christian-Evangelist.

—W. W. Dowling leaves St. Louis tonight for a brief holiday.

—R. L. McHatton is holding a meeting for B. C. Stephens and the church at Williams, Cal.

—L. T. Faulders has just entered upon the pastorate at Wellington, Kan., having removed from Arcola, Ill.

—W. E. Harlan will remain at Rushville, Ill., in answer to a unanimous call from his members to do this.

—James N. Crutcher has resumed work with the church at Chillicothe, Mo., after a rest on a farm near Belton. He will probably continue at Chillicothe, as it now seems unnecessary that he seek a change of climate.

—Dr. Herbert L. Willett has just given a week of lectures on the Bondurant Foundation at Normal, Ill.

—The church at Hamilton, O., Wesley Hatcher, minister, will raise $300 this year for foreign missions. This is a very decided advance.

—L. E. Christian reports that another unity conference will soon take place between some of the Scandinavian preachers in the northwest.

—A new work has just been organized at Graham, near Maitland, Mo. A good house has been secured in which to hold the services this year.

—There is now a membership of over two hundred in our church at Mobile, Ala., where Claude E. Hill is in a meeting, following the Chapman meeting.

—J. Murray Taylor made a stop at Saginaw, Mich., on his way to begin a meeting at Louisville, Ky., and reports progress along all lines in our church there.

—W. D. Cunningham, of Tokio, Japan, has just baptized an officer of the emperer's bodyguard. Brother Cunningham is doing famine relief work.

—C. E. Benlehr, missionary of the foreign society at Damoh, India, reports very successful work. There were twenty-seven boys and young men recently baptized in one day.

—W. T. Brooks and his brother have just concluded a fine meeting at Bloomington, Ind., with 579 additions. We hope to publish fuller particulars of this meeting.

—See the program of the Kansas Ministerial Institute which meets at Emporia, April 10-12. The Kansas brethren hope to reach the high-water mark in their institute work this year.

—S. G. Fisher, who is the pastor of our new church in Detroit, some account of which appears on another page, is a young man of about 30 years of age, who came from Adel, Ia.

—Mrs. J. G. Creason writes that her husband is still quite sick with typhoid fever, and has been in bed now 47 days. The church employed a trained nurse, who is still with him.

—The present building at Independence, Kan., is inadequate for the needs of the congregation, and efforts are being made to secure a larger and more modern plant.

—The foreign society received another gift on the annuity plan from a friend in Nebraska. This is his fifth gift on this plan. The number of the last bond issue is 266.

IN THE INTERESTS OF HOME MISSIONS.—A WORD TO THE MINISTERS.

Dear Brethren: As is well known the campaign for the Home Missionary offering is limited to four weeks, or at most, six weeks. We are daily in receipt of letters from preachers throughout the country asking to be excused from duty at rallies, to have dates changed and have engagements postponed on account of the Congress of the Disciples, the Missouri Lectureship, the Illinois Ministerial Alliance, the district and county conventions in Indiana, Kentucky and Missouri. Sunday-school rallies in several states which contemplate special sermons throughout the month of April, special Easter services with offerings for the National Benevolent Association, commencement addresses, and so on, to a discouraging extent. In view of these facts we feel like calling upon our loyal ministers everywhere to redouble their energies this year to enable us to secure not only a good offering, but the largest offering that we have ever yet received. Our campaign will amount to little more than an occasional fusillade if our ministers will allow everything to sidetrack home missions. We do not wish to be understood as complaining or finding fault, we are only stating conditions. We are in hearty sympathy with all these other movements which engage the attention of our preachers and people. It is unfortunate that so many varied interests crowd together upon our attention at the same time. The facts present the strongest reason why emphasis, sharp and strong, though all too brief, should be laid upon the necessities of the home mission field this year.

The work moves along encouragingly. The gain this year from October 1 to March 1, was $12,000 over the receipts of last year in the same period. Interest seems to be widespread among the preachers and churches. The correspondence in the office was never more encouraging. The whole brotherhood seems thrilled with a determination to do tremendous things this year. We bespeak the prayers and the help of every loyal Disciple in bringing our offering up to the $200,000 this year. Scores of fields are anxiously awaiting the outcome of the May offering. We are looking forward to the Centennial with the battle cry upon our lips, "Millions for Missions." We must begin this year with the $200,000 if we are to have our plans realized by 1909. Let us join hands and hearts for a great offering May 6.

George B. Ranshaw, Field Secretary.

once for copies of their new leaflets, "Information and Inspiration"; "$200,000; How to Obtain It"; "Why the Hens Don't Lay," and others.

—C. V. Allison has just closed a year's work at Cozad, Neb., during which time there were fourteen accessions, $675 were raised for missions, and $130 spent on improvements. He has just entered upon work at Mound City, Mo.

—C. A. Lowe reports that all the congregations in St. Joseph, Mo., are growing. We now have six congregations all housed and under ministerial leadership. The Frederick Avenue tabernacle has just been dedicated by C. M. Chilton.

—The members of the First Church, Joliet, Ill., had a surprise party on their minister, Benjamin N. Mitchell, and his wife, a few evenings since. The church here is in a prosperous condition and its outlook is very encouraging.

—"Thoroughly Furnished" was the title of an address before the Business Men's Bible class of the North Park Church, Indianapolis, where Austin Hunter ministers, just delivered by the Hon. Hugh Miller, lieutenant-governor of Indiana.

—J. V. Updike, we regret to learn, is suffering from nervous prostration at his home in Salina, O., and this fact releases his singer, James E. Hawes, of Ada, O., for meetings until such time as Brother Updike is again able for service.

—The congregation at Warsaw, Ind., where M. G. Long is minister, is now free from debt. For seventeen years the church has carried a burden incurred by building. The free-will offering just taken will more than meet the mortgage and some other old debts.

—Joseph Armistead has been preaching a series of sermons on the characteristics of the early church. The foreign society offering of his church at Norwood, Ohio, amounted to $236, which was a splendid contribution for a comparatively small and new church.

—A. W. Pasley has been appointed evangelist of the Christian churches in Boone county, Mo., and will visit the membership of the different churches to create an interest in the convention which is to be held at Red Top, Hallsville, in August.

—The church at Morganfield, Ky., will become a living link in the Foreign Society, supporting Mrs. Maude Madden, of Sendai, Japan. Bro. T. T. Roberts writes that there is a membership of 224 and nearly all are giving to missions and rejoicing in the opportunity.

—We are glad to learn that a debt of nearly $1,000, which has been crippling the work of the brethren at Lind, Wash., has been raised through the earnest efforts put forth by Brother Harris, of Ritzville. There is general rejoicing over the burning of the notes held against the church.

—What a splendid thing it would be if 6,000 ministers of Christ should see to it that the 11,000 churches respond to the call, May 6, for the greatest offering for home missions we have ever made! Two hundred thousand dollars is a trifle from as large a membership as ours.

—The congregation at Harrodsburg, Ky., has agreed to become a living link in home missions. This was the result of a visit from John A. Stevens and wife, who are visiting among the churches in Kentucky in the interest of home missions in preparation for the May offering.

—We begin this week the publication of the first of a series of articles on "Work for a United Church To Do" These will show some of the steps that can be taken when the churches are federated in the working out of problems that are beyond the reach of individual denominations.

—In consequence of the very bad weather during March many churches are somewhat late in sending their offerings for foreign missions. There should be a widespread advance in this matter during the month of April. Let every church come forward at once with its due proportion.

—Baxter Waters desires to turn the attention of members of Christian churches toward Duluth, Minn., which is a rapidly growing city, with fine opportunities for work. Especially are there good openings for teachers. Applications should be made to Supt. R. E. Denfeld.

—O. A. Bartholomew preached his anniversary sermon—the eighteenth anniversary of his arrival in St. Louis—in S. B. Moore's pulpit in the Hammett Place Church on Lord's day. W. H. Pinkerton, of Paducah, Ky., will occupy this pulpit on Easter Sunday morning.

—F. A. Mayhall, of St. Louis, has just returned from his old home in New London, Mo., where he delivered a lecture in the Christian church on the Bible. The brethren speak very highly of his effort, and express the wish that the lecture could be delivered in all of our churches throughout the state.

—"I have read with very much pleasure 'The Plea of the Disciples of Christ.' It is the most clear and helpful work I have ever read on our plea. It has set my mind at rest, for I was wondering if my place is in the brotherhood, from the many things I have heard and read of late."—Edward Owers.

—The effect of more frequent preaching on an offering is seen in the case of the church at Greenfield, Mo., where but $11 were given in 1904, with quarter-time preaching, and $30 when there were preaching services every Sunday in 1906; and this is just a small church. Samuel I. Smith is the pastor.

—J. E. Rains, of Downs, Kan., has been called as successor of D. B. Titus, in the pastorate at Lexington, Neb., and will begin his work April 15. Brother Titus, who entered upon the pastorate at Longmont, Col., April 1, asks the sixty-two other applicants to kindly take this notice as an answer to their applications.

—We are sorry to learn that J. T. Boone, pastor of the Christian church at Jacksonville, Fla., has been seriously ill with typhoid fever. Though he is almost well now, he is still too weak to attend church. His illness occurred during the state convention, and in the midst of a meeting conducted by S. M. Martin.

—We are asked by the secretaries of the American Christian Missionary Society to announce that the "American Home Missionary" for March and April will be unusually attractive and helpful. Extra editions of both issues will be published for the use of ministers who are preparing for the May offering. Copies may be had in any quantity.

—E. S. Muckley, pastor of the First Christian Church, Portland, Ore., writes: "Brother Garrison's address on federation at the Des Moines congress, which I have just read, is by far the best and safest thing I have seen on the subject." The Christian Publishing Company will supply this address at 15 cents per copy, or 60 cents per dozen.

—Remember that the Bible school campaign is intended to get more churches and scholars interested in aggressive work, to bring the Sunday-school membership to equal the church membership, to have each preacher talk on Sunday-school work during April, to insure a better class of teaching in our schools, and to prepare the way through our Sunday-schools for a great ingathering.

—The home missionary rally of the churches in St. Louis will be held at the Compton Heights Christian Church on April 16, when it is hoped a very large number of the members of our churches in the city and vicinity will be present. Among the speakers will be W. H. Pinkerton, of Paducah, Ky. Brother Pinkerton is well known for his platform ability and we can promise those who come to hear him a treat.

—The Christian Endeavorers at Plainville, Kan., are doing some practical work, having provided ten dozen chairs and song books for the new church, toward which they have paid $50, and pledged $100 more. They are now considering the question of providing a new organ.

—The work at the Magnolia Avenue Christian Church, Los Angeles, under Jesse P. McKnight, is going forward. We note that the men's league at that church is succeeding well. The Sunday-school has increased in attendance, and with 234 members an offering of $10.65 has been reported, which is far in advance of the average Sunday-school collection for such a number of attendants.

—"La Via de Paz," the little newspaper published by our mission at Monterey, Mexico, says: "Every one is pleased with the new hymnal, Gloria in Excelsis. It was used for the first time last Sunday. The Christian Endeavor meeting ran half an hour over time and then was reluctantly adjourned, each was so anxious to sing just one more of the good old songs that we used to sing at home."

—Prof. Frank H. Marshall and wife, of Texas Christian University, have just been appointed missionaries to Christiania, Norway, by the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, and will go to their new field about September next. He will devote himself chiefly to preparing young Norwegians for evangelistic service. This is one of the most important steps recently taken by the foreign society

—A "stop-the-press!" message from E. B. Redd, of the Masonic Home, St. Louis, announces the advent of another son in his home. Brother Redd writes: "I have not had much chance to interview him yet, but he is favorable to The Christian-Evangelist—if not in favor of federation." There are a great many people who are like this child—they cry without having yet learned what federation is.

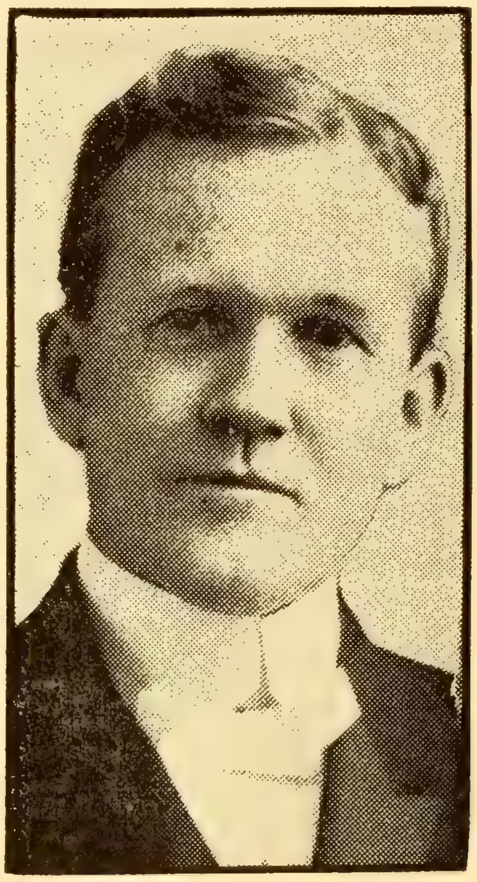
—There are hundreds of our churches which could easily support a man upon the home field which have not manifested a very commendable interest in the work at home. It takes but $300 to keep a man on the home field, and every man on the home field is a worker in the interest of foreign missions, church extension, benevolence, and every other feature of our co-operative work, so that it is easily seen that home missions lie at the base of everything.

—Our last letter from Brother Power was written from Jerusalem, under date of March 16. He says: "We are all well. Tyler, Carpenter, Medbury and the rest are full to overflowing. Saw Lockhart and another brother from Des Moines here, who are traveling independently. Shall spend two weeks in England, returning about May 5." We can promise our readers some very interesting letters of travel from Brother Power.

—An officers' and teachers' union of the Christian Bible schools of St. Louis, has just been organized, with J. A. Gardner, chairman, and J. E. Winterton, secretary. The executive board, consisting of the superintendents of all the schools, had a meeting in the assembly room of the Christian Publishing Company on Tuesday, when details were perfected for the first regular meeting, which is set for the evening of Tuesday, April 17, at the Compton Heights Christian Church.

—We regret that the banquet of the St. Louis chapters of the Business Men's Association occurred at too late an hour for us to publish any report in this issue. It was a most delightful occasion, a promise of closer fellowship and better work in the future. Mr. J. W. Henry, who has been appointed to the secretaryship, was introduced and Dr. E. L. Powell, Mr. G. S. Johns, managing editor of "The Post-Dispatch," R. H. Stockton and J. H. Garrison were the speakers, with Mr. Breckenridge Jones as the competent toastmaster.

—J. H. Mohorter has resigned the pastorate of the Central Christian Church, Pueblo, Col., to become secretary of the National Benevolent Association. Brother Mohorter has done a fine work in the Colorado city, and it is with the greatest regret that the church there has released him. We bespeak for him the cordial co-operation of the churches everywhere as he takes up the work of so sacred a cause as that of the orphans and old people. He may be expected to be located in St. Louis not later than May 1. George L. Snively has been giving a great deal of his time since his resignation of the secretaryship to the work of the Benevolent Association until his successor could be definitely chosen to take up the active work of the office.



—Bro. W. F. Richardson, pastor of the First Christian Church, Kansas City, who went with a committee of the C. W. B. M., at the request of that organization, to Jamaica to look into the condition of our missions there, will not return until about the middle of April. In his absence, Bro. Barclay Meador, who has been called to be assistant pastor to Brother Richardson, has been looking after the pastoral work of the church with great satisfaction, while Bro. George W. Muckley has been filling the pulpit.

—Will J. Slater, who ministers to a little congregation of 48 members at Stilwell, in the Cherokee Nation, in the eastern part of the Indian Territory, writes us that they have no church building yet, but he believes they will have one in the near future. The town numbers 1,200 and is growing rapidly. Our brethren support their minister for full time, and give liberally to all missionary enterprises. Brother Slater says there is a fine opening for a good tailor, a good jeweler, or a general merchant, who is a member of the Christian Church.

—We learn that D. W. Moore has resigned the pastorate of the South Street Christian Church, Springfield, Mo. This is one of our best churches in the state and Brother Moore is one of our most beloved pastors. Last year the receipts were over $5,600, and the amount given to missions $1,016. There were 71 additions to the church, while the pastor had 50 additions in outside meetings. During his eight years' pastorate of this church 714 have been added. All departments of the work were at high-water mark during the year just closed. Brother Moore is ready to consider work in another field and should find it at once.

—R. E. McKnight has resurrected the work at Bakersfield, Cal., where he took charge Dec. 1. The brethren had ceased to meet, but there was a little Sunday-school. An Endeavor was organized and now numbers 40; the prayer-meeting was started, and the Sunday-school has more than trebled in numbers, while the attendance at the preaching services is now the largest in the city. There have been 19 additions. Appreciation of the minister and his family has been shown in many ways, among others by the raising of his salary.

—The following changes, or additions, have been made in the program of the Disciples' Congress, which meets at Indianapolis April 25-27: E. M. Todd will conduct the Bible study on Wednesday morning; Hill M. Bell will be the chairman on Wednesday evening; E. P. Wiles will conduct the Bible study on Thursday. On Thursday evening A. B. Philputt will be the chairman, and addresses will be given by Scott Butler, A. R. Benton and C. B. Coleman on the subject, "The Educational Expression of a Religious Movement." We shall publish a full program later.

—The foreign missionary offering of the church at South Bend, Ind., will be nearly $200. This church pays half the salary of R. R. Eldred, at Bolengi Africa, among its other work. P. J. Rice has just celebrated his sixth anniversary as its minister. He took occasion to talk about some of the duties of his office, and hoped that he might have the same liberty to preach and teach what he conceived to be the truth, and to follow the vision that he had always enjoyed. The daily papers speak very highly of his work in South Bend. The church membership is now 763.

—Morton H. Wood, who has been engaged in evangelistic work in the state of Washington for the past two years, will enter the evangelistic field in the south, and will be open for engagements with any of the churches during the months of April, May and June. His home will be Pryor Creek, Indian Territory. He has arranged to have associated with him as singer and co-worker, Thomas Elmore Lucey, who has been working under the direction of the Chicago Lyceum Bureau. Brother Wood refers brethren to whom he is not known to the state board of east Washington.

—A post card informs us of the safe arrival of T. J. Arnold and family in California. Brother Anrold, who has been one of our valued workers in China, recently broke down in health, and has come for a year's rest and recuperation. He will spend part of this, at least, in southern California. He is one of the band of missionary workers who were trained under Dr. W. T. Moore, in London, and with whom the Assistant Editor of this paper was associated in slum work in that great city. W. R. Hunt is now the sole representative in China, two of the number—"Ted" Hearnden and Bert Saw—having given their lives on that field.

—In a recent letter from Evangelist Herbert Yeuell he was about starting to New Hampshire to arrange for the meeting to be held in June in one of the principal cities of the state. The preliminary arrangements, such as procuring material for a tabernacle, and doing some necessary advertising, will require an immediate outlay of money. We must remind our friends once more that this home missionary enterprise requires immediate assistance from those who would like to have our cause represented in this New England state. A few hundred dollars are needed at once to make the necessary preparations for a successful meeting. May we not hope to hear at once from the friends of this enterprise with such donations as they may feel able to make in its behalf?

—It comes to us from different quarters that certain of our beloved brethren, whose newspaper is not large enough to contain all they wish to say by way of warning, have issued circular letters which they are scattering broadcast to warn the brethren against efforts that are being made in "certain quarters" to subvert the minds of the faithful and lead them astray! Such zeal for righteousness has not been excelled since the days when the Judaizers went out from Jerusalem in the track of Paul, and warned his converts not to be seduced by that great apostle of liberty into disobedience of the law. We are trusting to the good, hard sense of those who receive this circular to feel about it, as did "an old retired farmer" who reads only the paper which sends out the circular, who said, "Do they think we do not understand this thing? Of course they understand it. It is a mistake to go on the supposition, nowadays, that people can be deceived by a little cheap claptrap put out for the purpose of enlarging the subscription list!"

The Missouri Lectureship.

It is well worth a journey to Canton to enjoy the view from the college where the Missouri lectureship will hold its sessions April 9-11. Standing on the steps of the beautiful building, one sees the "Father of Waters," and beyond the rich farming country in Illinois, dotted with thriving villages. The people of Canton are very hospitable, and complete free entertainment will be given to all who attend. This will be, perhaps, the best lectureship ever held in the state. Prof. Shailer Mathews, of Chicago, who will give two of the chief addresses, is a distinguished Bible scholar, and editor of a widely circulated magazine. George A. Campbell, of Austin, Ill., is one of the bright men of our brotherhood. He is to give two popular addresses. Quite a number of Missouri's best men, including the worthy Editor of The Christian-Evangelist, will also have place on the program. No preacher within reasonable distance can afford to miss this intellectual and spiritual feast. Books are very valuable, but we need, also, the penetrating and illuminating power of the voice from incarnated truth to fix this thoroughly in the mind and heart.

Levi Marshall.

Missouri Lectureship Program.

The lectureship convenes at Canton, April 9-11. Professor Shailer Mathews, of Chicago University, will give us, on Monday night, "The Method of Jesus," and the next morning "The Message of Jesus." Informal discussion will follow. George A. Campbell, of Chicago, will give us "The Common Man's Religion," and will be reviewed by H. A. Denton, while his "Fiction and Character" will be reviewed by A. W. Kokendoffer. Professor R. G. Sears will give us "The Geographic and Historic Setting of the Old Testament." The review will be by Dr. W. T. Moore. Professor C. M. Sharpe will give us "New Testament Criticism and the Historic Christ," which will be reviewed by Dr. Albert Buxton. M. A. Hart's lecture will be on "The Training of the Child in the Bible School," and his reviewer will be C. H. Winders. The closing lecture will be by J. H. Garrison on "The Present Phase of the Christian Union Problem."

Dr. Albert Buxton, dean of the Bible College, Christian University, and pastor of the church, authorizes us to say that "entertainment for supper, lodging and breakfast is offered free to all." Professor Ben Cleaver is chairman of the entertainment committee and all names should be sent to him.

Does This Mean Your Church?

Heavy Loss During March

The weather was very unfavorable during the whole month of March. In consequence we have suffered the worst loss for foreign missions in our history. There has been a loss of 193 contributing churches. And the loss from the churches as churches amounted to $4,278. The aggregate loss on all receipts amounted to $2,783. We gained $2,850 from annuities. We believe the churches will more than recover the loss during April. If not, our work for the year is seriously threatened.

We give the friends of world-wide missions the facts that they may act accordingly. May God overrule seeming defeat to the furtherance of his cause.

Please send promptly to

F. M. Rains, Sec.,
Box 884, Cincinnati, O.

[Surely the brethren are not going to permit bad weather to defeat our purpose to make the March offering for 1906 the largest in our history. We urge the churches that have not attended to this duty to do so at once. One neglected duty blocks the way for attending to all others. —Editor.]

Central Illinois Ministerial Institute.

The institute meets with the Champaign church April 10 and 11. Our people herewith extend a cordial invitation to all who can find it possible to attend this good meeting, both preachers and members of our churches. The program promises to be of unusual helpfulness; great emphasis is being laid upon the evangelistic phase of our work, and church problems are to be dealt with. Stephen E. Fisher, Pastor.

Warning.

I have been informed that some one is soliciting money from Disciples to build a church at Lancaster, Ohio. The church here, which is a mission of the O. C. M. S., is not going to build at present, and has not authorized any one to solicit building funds.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Minnesota.

The Minnesota Ministerial Institute convened at Portland Avenue Church, Minneapolis. This was the first meeting in several years. Most of the pastors of the state were present and took part. This is hereafter to be an annual affair. S. J. Corey and Dr. Drummond conducted a rally the last day.——E. O. Orr, of Mankato, will soon remove to Fargo, N. D., and enter business. He will serve the church at that place. Brother Orr has held two pastorates in this state, and we are sorry he is leaving us, yet glad to know that he will be near enough to drop in on us occasionally.——W. S. Cash is leaving Cleveland. We understand he will leave the ministry and take up farming in Canada. We are sorry to hear this. Brother Cash is well equipped and such men as he are needed in the ministry.——Brother Ainsworth, of South Dakota, has returned to the state and taken up work at Truman and Louisville.——The state has gained another good man in J. H. Bicknell, who has taken up the work at the Central Church, St. Paul. Brother Bicknell will become our corresponding secretary. The knowledge of the state gained while he was state evangelist especially fits him for this place. The Central Church and state are fortunate in securing the services of this consecrated man.——In January I held a three weeks' meeting at Garden City, B. V. Black, pastor. Everything was in readiness for the evangelist. There were 32 additions—26 by baptism. With such a pastor and church to work with success was assured from the beginning. The Garden City church is well established and one of the best in the state. We followed this with a two weeks' meeting at Ceresco, eight miles in the country. We organized a church with 20 members (12 by baptism, 8 by statement); they will co-operate with Willow Creek. They are able to pay $600 to the right man.——I am in a meeting here at Pleasant Grove, one of the oldest churches in the state. This is our first week; attendance large and interest good; 1 added.——Three or four good men are needed in this state. We want men with clean records. The work has suffered too long from unworthy preachers. Men coming up here must be well recommended.—C. R. Neel, State Evangelist.

North Carolina.

Our corresponding secretary for North Carolina, J. B. Jones, writes encouragingly of the prospects for the work in the old north state this year. He says, "We have planned to do the largest work in our history this year. There are a large number of ripe fields in the state, and we hope to establish quite a number of new churches this year. We have secured W. G. Walker, of Lexington, Ky., to become state evangelist. Brother Walker has been a success both as pastor and evangelist. He has held some fine meetings." Brother Walker has already held a meeting at Macclesfield in Edgecombe county. He reports that they had good interest, and hope to report a church building. Macclesfield is midway between Tarboro and Farmville, the two terminal points of the East Carolina Railroad. It has 400 or 500 inhabitants, three saloons and no church. There are two other small towns on this road in which there is no church. He says, "This certainly seems like a mission field. We want to see churches in all three of these towns before the end of the year. When we come in contact with such conditions we can but wish we were a dozen men."——Atlantic Christian College at Wilson gives an encouraging report. Three young men, C. M. Morton, A. M. Windhorst and J. F. Moore, have given up paying positions that they might prepare to preach the Word.——J. W. McReynolds has started well at Dunn and Wilson's Mills. Our next state convention will be at Dunn in October. J. T. Moore has resigned in the Mill Creek district, and will preach for Macclesfield, Farmville and Dover. C. F. Outlaw will succeed Brother Moore. P. B. Hall reports every department of the church at Kinston in good condition. R. H. Jones has returned from Virginia to the state of his birth. He is with the Ayden and Grifton churches.——At Winston we have increased attendance at the Bible school and prayer-meeting. We feel the time is fast drawing near for our meeting in May with Herbert Yeuell. We made another small payment Feb. 1, and now have reduced our debt to $600.—J. A. Hopkins.

Indian Territory Letter.

The second convention of the northern district of Indian Territory was a success in every way. I visited Haskell and arranged for D. M. Harris, of Wagoner, to hold that mission a meeting. We have just arranged for A. M. Harrol, of Sapulpa, to hold a meeting at Kelleyville. At Ramona I arranged for R. E. Rosenstine, of Bartlesville, to hold a mission meeting at that new and thriving town; also arranged a meeting at Collinsville. In the meantime I spent a part of a Lord's day at Tulsa, a Sunday night at Sapulpa and divided a Lord's day between Bartlesville and another point.

At Tulsa we asked for $100 for Indian Territory missions; raised in cash and pledges $108. We asked for $25 at Sapulpa and raised $60.05. At Bartlesville we asked for $50 and raised $76.02. Sapulpa has not a church property as yet, though they are preparing to build in the spring. Both Tulsa and Bartlesville are inadequately housed, but notwithstanding the fact that these missions are thus in debt and other large obligations are pending, they responded nobly to the appeal for missions in the Indian Territory.

Bro. F. D. Wharton has taken the work at Ada. We welcome Brother Wharton to the Indian Territory. We have few, if any, better towns in this country than Ada, and with it one of the brightest outlooks. Brother Rosenstine has another of our best fields. Bartlesville is in the midst of what is now being confessed to be the greatest oil field in the United States. At Bartlesville I counted 124 oil and gas wells without moving out of my tracks, and was in a valley, also had my vision greatly obstructed by the buildings of the city. There are between 700 and 800 wells in the Osage Nation alone. I mention this because of numerous inquiries concerning the Indian Territory and its resources. If any of my readers are looking to this country and wish to find a city full of life, with fine schools, a growing and wide-awake church, and with a future to it, it would be well to look to Bartlesville and Tulsa.—S. R. Hawkins, Corresponding Secretary.

Oregon.

Fine meetings have been held. At Portland First, 111; Cottage Grove, 111; Hepner, 68; Grant's Pass, 68; Richland, 51; Stayton, 44, and Carlton, 9. Total accessions, 462. Other promising meetings were begun at Pendleton, La Grande, Halfway and Halsey. We regret the resignation of George C. Ritchey, who for three years has been the efficient and beloved minister of the Roseburg church, and goes to do evangelistic work in southern Idaho. Brother Ritchey is a successful pastor and evangelist. It is hoped that he has just been loaned to our sister state for a season in her need.——Grant's Pass has sent in her state offering and has received credit to date for $35.75. Other churches formerly reported have increased their credits. May we not hear from others in a like strain? If all pledges to state work were paid to date and all the churches had responded to the need, as some have done, we could now be out of debt and have no difficulty in meeting current expenses. Brother, are you willing for your church to be on the delinquent list? It will be printed about May 1.——Oregon is in need of about four good recruits to its preaching force. We want only such as have succeeded in their present fields and can furnish recent letters of commendation from the corresponding secretary of the state in which they are now serving. Salaries range from $600 to $1,000.——The work on our mission fields is doing splendidly as a rule, yet there is no field without its problems to solve. Bower is gaining a great victory at Grant's Pass. The writer had the privilege of serving as evangelist for 22 days in the recent meeting there, which had been begun by Brother Bower, and ended with the above-named results and the entering of some 37 to 40 new homes. Bower says little, but makes up for it in work.——Last year 43 churches gave for foreign missions and 15 were on the roll of honor.—F. E. Billington, Corresponding Secretary.

Evolution of the Bell.

Bells, in one form and another, have been known and used from time immemorial. Evolution, however, has made many changes in them, from the tinkling bells of gold and silver—mentioned in the Bible—to the deep-toned resonant and practical bells of to-day.

Since the fifteenth century an alloy of tin and copper, called "bell metal," has been used in all bell-making but it has remained for the Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., of Cincinnati, Ohio, to discover a still better "bell-metal" than tin and copper. The combination is their secret, but we know that an extra quality of fine steel plays an important part. This company makes what is known as the "Blymyer" Bell—and a better, or more musical and resonant bell it would be difficult to find. The cost, too, is far below that of the tin and copper bell, and, therefore, a great inducement to small churches.

"Blymyer" Bells are made in Peals and Singles, and are adapted to all uses. Anyone interested in the purchase of a bell should get full particulars about the "Blymyer" Bell before deciding. The manufacturer will gladly send a catalogue free to anyone on request. Simply address The Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, Ohio.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

Let every auxiliary make arrangements for observing the week of prayer during the week preceding Easter Sunday, on April 15. Distribute blessing boxes, which you may have for the asking, free, and induce each one to make thank offerings for the blessed Easter tide. Do not hesitate to place these boxes in the hands of sisters not members of the auxiliary, for there are many tender hearts that will gladly give to his work a thank offering at this season of sacrifice, and will give it through our board. Call these boxes blessing boxes, for they are intended for thank offerings.

Auxiliaries, officers and sisters, are you looking after the Juniors in your church? Are you proving yourself true mothers to them? Or are you, like some worldly mothers, leaving their spiritual instruction to some "other woman"? Would you miss this privilege of teaching and helping the Juniors to larger things, by failure to visit, to suggest, and to relieve the often disheartened Junior superintendents? Do not neglect so great a duty, my auxiliary sisters, lest your candle be removed and the oversight of these little children be given to more careful hands. Help your Junior superintendent in her preparation for the Easter self-denial offering. The children are always ready to co-operate in anything that is suggested to them. See that their energies are directed toward things that develop and strengthen them in their faith in him. Visit thoughtless mothers and tell them of the work for the children —only you must first be posted on it yourself. Study the "Junior Builders" and the "Tidings" and you may go armed.—Mrs. L. G. Bantz, St. Louis.

Congregationalists Commend Our Meeting.

In our meeting at Pittsfield, Ill., H. A. Davis preached. We were crowded to the utmost, except on stormy nights. Friends were made on every hand. Never has an evangelist so generally enlisted the admiration and love of this community. Members of nearly every church in town were working and praying for the success of the Gospel. Genuine regret was expressed by many Christians of other churches and by non-Christians that the meetings were closing, yet the almost impassable roads made it wise to close. We were assisted during the first two weeks by Sister Brice of Barry, Ill., who is an exceptionally fine soloist. There were 110 who united with us—86 by conversion and 24 by letter or statement. Brother Davis did not invade the Bible school. His appeal was to the mature mind. Seventy-one of the converts were adults; 34 were men. Hundreds all over the country heard by telephone, and the good influences are far reaching. At a farewell service representatives of the different departments of the church work spoke of the "open doors" for the service of the 110 new members. Among them, Mr. Goodrich, a deacon in the Congregational church, spoke as follows: "In behalf of the Congregational church, I would say we are glad to be with you and to praise God with you, and to rejoice with you over the success which has resulted from these meetings, and we most heartily thank Brothers Davis and Spicer for their earnest and untiring labors. These meetings have certainly been a great blessing to this entire community and a benefit and uplift to all who have attended these soul-stirring services. I feel that I voice the sentiment of the Congregational church in saying we truly rejoice with you. In the absence of a pastor for the past six months Brother Spicer has been very helpful to us, uniting with us in the prayer-meetings, and also his church services have been helpful. We would be remiss indeed did we not express our gratitude to him now. In a letter received the past week, Rev. Kent, our coming pastor, wrote he was very glad to hear of the good work going on in this church and he hoped it would reach our church. Surely we should feel deeply interested in each other, 'for one is our Master, even Christ and all we are brethren.' We pray God's blessing may attend Brother Davis wherever he goes. He will be thrice welcome should he again return to Pittsfield." These words indicate the good feeling prevailing here.—W. E. Spicer, Minister.

A Good Meeting in Colorado.

What Leonard G. Thompson calls the greatest meeting with "home forces" ever held in Colorado has just come to an end. It was held in Pueblo by the combined efforts of the Central and Broadway churches and their pastors, J. A. Shoptaugh and the writer. It was to have continued six weeks, three in each church, but it ran through seven weeks. The writer did all the preaching; Brother Shoptaugh did the general work; each church furnished its own music, aided by the other. In the Central Church section we had two choruses of 30 voices, one of adults and one of children, with orchestra. Mrs. Walter Green, for years Brother Harlow's singer, was leader of music. She is a master hand in both solo and chorus work. In the Broadway section Mrs. McCormack, a talented woman of God, had charge of the music. The attendance was fine throughout. Pueblo was stirred as it has seldom been; 145 were added at the Central, the Sunday-school was nearly doubled, the Endeavor Societies, three in number, moved forward with a bound and the finances were greatly improved. L. G. Thompson, state secretary, and E. F. Harris, of Longmont, were present to share the pleasure in the reception of new members. Each person received was presented with a copy of the New Testament. The Central is now the largest church, numerically, in the city and the largest among our people in the state. The membership is 600. The meeting was transferred to the Broadway Church without a break. It was the best in the history of the church. It would have yielded much larger results had not the preacher been called away by critical illness in his family. This was manifest by the addition of 10 at the reception for new members held a week after the meeting closed. The Broadway section brought in fifty-five new members, nearly doubled the membership of the Sunday-school, more than doubled the Christian Endeavor Society, raised the preacher's salary $200 per year and inaugurated a new financial system. The Broadway Church now has about 275 members. It is in position to do a great work. Pastor Shoptaugh is a self-sacrificing, tireless worker. He intends to develop a strong church on the South Side. He will do it. There have been nearly 100 additions to this church since he took the work, nine months ago. We have given the community a sample of what the Lord will do when his people unite in seeking the salvation of men through the Gospel. Not the least among the results of this meeting is the beautiful harmony existing between our churches in the city, the strengthening of the bonds of love between the pastors and the increased respect of the community for our plea and people. Ours was a case of true federation. We thank God and take courage for larger things.—J. H. Mohorter.

Minnesota Ministerial Institute.

The recent meeting of the Minnesota Ministerial Association was held at the Portland Avenue Church, Minneapolis, and was of unusual interest. E. A. Orr gave Bible lectures at each session which were very stimulating, and showed extensive study and research. C. R. Neal, state evangelist, read a good paper on "Growth by Evangelism and Nurture." B. V. Block discussed the intellectual phases of the preacher's work. Baxter Waters read a paper on the church and society. Mrs. A. D. Harmon gave a splendid address, "A Study in Co-Operative Religions." Prof. E. W. Van Akin, of Parker College, a Free Baptist school, was present and gave a lecture, and his genial presence was a great inspiration. One special feature of the institute was an address by Dr. Crandall, pastor of Trinity Baptist Church of Minneapolis, on "Why the Baptists and Disciples Ought to Unite." This address was remarkable for its breadth of spirit, its keen insight into the mission and plea of the Disciples and the relations the two bodies sustain to each other. This contribution was received with great interest and pleasure by representatives from both churches.

FREE TO THE RUPTURED

in the same simple, easy and certain way that a mason bricks up an opening in a wall. When I say cure, I do not mean simply hold, but a Cure that stays cured and does away with the use of all trusses forever. I have cured thousands upon thousands of ruptures and am curing them every day of 30 and 50 years' standing, and have yet to see the case I could not cure. My 25 years' experience and unexcelled facilities enable me to do more for ruptured people than any other living man can possibly do.

To prove to you and your ruptured friends that my Method is a sure Cure for every kind of rupture, I want you to give it an honest test without one cent expense to yourself. Do not send any money. Simply send me the location and size of your rupture, so I can give you special directions for curing it. Remember, there is no operation, no pain, no danger, no loss of time. This remarkable free offer is the fairest ever made. For quick relief and a Radical Cure, address Dr. W. S. Rice, 95 Main Street, Adams, N. Y.

Detroit, Mich.

On March 11 occurred the dedicatory service of the chapel of the Woodward Avenue Christian Church, at the corner of Woodward and Josephine avenues. This event marked the close and climax of two years' planning, praying and working on the part of the Central Christian Church of Detroit, under the leadership of C. J. Tannar. In February, 1904, Brother Tannar offered a resolution calling for the election of a committee to investigate the planting of a new church and Sunday-school. The committee reported in favor of North Detroit. A little later Mrs. E. L. Ford and her daughters, Misses Nell B. and Stella, offered to pay for the lot, provided steps were taken soon, looking toward the early establishment of the work. The lot selected at the junction of Josephine avenue with Woodward avenue, the principal street of Detroit, and corresponding to Euclid avenue of Cleveland, has a frontage of 104 feet on Woodward avenue and of 200 feet on Josephine. It can scarcely be imagined how the committee could have made a wiser choice, for the location is in the very heart of what is rapidly becoming the best residence district of Detroit. The cost of this lot was $6,250. At first a $10,000 chapel was planned for, but as the possibilities of the work became more and more apparent, these plans were later changed to call for the expenditure of at least $20,000 on the building. C. J. Tannar conducted the dedicatory exercises and preached the sermon. The plant cost $26,611.33, of which $19,070.35 had already been paid in cash, leaving a balance to be raised of $7,540.98. It was hardly expected that more than one half of this would be provided for, but when the day was over it was found that only $1,283.59 remained, and there is little doubt that this will all be covered in the next 60 days. Thus the young congregation will be able to start off without any debt whatever to hamper it. The day was a triumph for the Disciples in Detroit, and has opened the eyes of Detroiters once more to the great work being done by the Central Church.

Woodward Avenue Christian Church, Detroit.

The building is of dark red brick, with stone trimmings. It has a deep, roomy, well-lighted basement, containing a kitchen and dining room thoroughly equipped for the future. The main floor consists of an auditorium seating 150 persons, class rooms on either side, and, together with the galleries above, all fitted with sliding doors, the building has a seating capacity of 450. The interior finish is in weathered oak, the furniture all being finished in harmony. A beautiful baptistry opens back of the platform, while the choir loft is at the right. The building is lighted by electricity and heated by steam.

The membership, which will be about 40 at the start, is drawn very largely from the Central congregation and, with the minister, S. G. Fisher, enters into the work with the highest hopes for a long and successful service for God and humanity.

Sioux City, Ia.

For three years the Christian church in Sioux City has been expecting to build a new edifice. The enterprise was begun when W. T. Hilton was called from North Omaha; the old property was sold when he commenced his pastorate, and the congregation met in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium. Brother Muckley assisted the congregation to select a building site in a desirable part of town and lots 71x150 feet were purchased in the central part of the main city, about three-quarters of a mile from the business blocks, and a mile and a half from the edge of the best residence section in the other three directions.

The lots cost the church $5,200, and when the present pastor was called, Feb. 1, 1905, this was all paid but $2,000. This remaining indebtedness was paid during the past year, and a building was erected at a cost of $7,000, which was dedicated by F. M. Rains, March 25. At the morning service nearly $3,800 was pledged, and in the evening enough more was paid and pledged to make the total amount $4,100 even. The weather was very unpleasant. At the afternoon fellowship meeting pastors of the local central churches spoke. B. S. Denny was present and brought a message of good cheer.

The outlook in Sioux City is very good now, and the church expects to enter into an aggressive campaign. It is thought it will grow rapidly; at any rate it is past the experimental stage; it has been a cause of much apprehension to the Iowa Missionary Board. The church will become self-supporting from this time. It has enjoyed an increase in membership of 25 per cent during the past year.—J. K. Ballou.

Streator, Ill.

A very handsome building has just been erected at Streator, and was to have been dedicated on March 11, by Brother F. M. Rains. Unfortunately the weather was exceedingly stormy. Notwithstanding this, however, quite a number of people came from distant points on a special train, and Dean Haggard, of Des Moines, explained the situation, and impressed upon the people the necessity of meeting the obligation of about $11,000 which was still an encumbrance on the building. Some $6,000 were raised, and the Church Extension loan of $5,000 secured. The entire cost of the property has been about $18,000. The dedication itself was postponed for a few weeks. A number of out of town ministers took part in an afternoon service, and at night Evangelists Lockhart and Garmong began a special meeting. The new building is a very different one from that in which the congregation has been worshiping for the past thirty-five years. Charles D. Hougham, who has been the pastor but a short time, imbued his flock with the spirit of progress, and obtained their cordial support in the erection of a new building. The seating capacity of the main auditorium is about 500. There is also a lecture room, pastor's study, two rooms for special Sunday-school classes and two robing rooms. A fine piece of fresco work represents the River Jordan. There are four special stained windows, the others being of opalescent and cathedral glass.

Lyons, Kan.

The new $14,000 church property was dedicated March 18 by F. M. Rains. The call was made for $5,000 to clear the church of debt, and we received $5,423. George E. Lyon, the minister, is serving in his fourth year. The movement to build a larger church was started during the Hamilton and Wilkinson revival a year ago, which resulted in 226 accessions. The first church F. M. Rains ever dedicated was the one out of which we move. He has dedicated over 600 in the 20 years between those two dedications. The prospects are very bright for our cause in Lyons.

Waitsburg, Wash.

The new Christian church at this place was dedicated by D. C. Kellems, of Eugene, Ore. The building is a frame, 100 feet by 62 feet, and will comfortably seat 650 people, but on dedication day there were fully 1,000 people present. The entire cost of the building will be about $13,000. We were successful in raising $3,500 on dedication day, more than enough to free us from debt. It is a splendid structure and the people of Waitsburg are proud of it. The main auditorium will seat about 350 people, has a bowled floor and fine art glass windows. But we are especially proud of the Sunday-school room, which has also a bowled floor and circular pews. It has a gallery, which is partitioned into class rooms. There are seven class rooms on the gallery floor, two robing rooms and pastor's study on main floor. These can also be used for class rooms, making ten rooms available for classes. By rolling partitions one large auditorium can be made. There is a large kitchen and social room in the basement. The present pastorate began about two and a half years ago, and besides the fine building just completed, there have been over 100 additions to the church. Evangelists D. C. Kellems and A. W. Shaffer are assisting us in revival meetings with excellent prospects for a large ingathering.—W. T. Adams, Pastor.

Santa Clara, Ore.

The brethren of Santa Clara, four miles north of Eugene, Ore., have just dedicated their new church building, on which they have been at work since last May. E. C. Sanderson, Dean of the Eugene Divinity School, preached the sermon, after which he raised $220 in a few minutes. This, with $350 from the Board of Church Extension, will leave a small balance. The church was organized in the school house last May, after a very successful meeting held by E. R. Moon, with 40 charter members. Steps were taken at once to secure a church home, $350 being subscribed on the day of organization. The building complete cost a little over $1,200. The congregation feel under obligations to Y. D. Hensill, the architect, who not only donated the plans and specifications, but much valuable time spent in the general supervision of construction. The building is of a modernized Colonial style, shingled down to a concrete foundation, and makes a very pleasing effect. It is 30x46, with an alcove built for the choir loft, and pastor's retiring room. A pastor is needed who could buy a small place and locate permanently in the neighborhood. To such a one the congregation would make liberal terms.—C. J. Hurd, Clerk.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Bethany's New Library

We present herewith an illustration of the new library which Mr. Andrew Carnegie's gift of $20,000 has made possible for Bethany College. That gift was conditioned on the trustees raising an equal amount to be added to the general endowment of the college. Enough money has been raised in cash and good pledges to make it reasonably certain that Mr. Carnegie's promise will be entirely fulfilled. The millionaire will hand out his check for $5,000 at a time, according to the requirements of the college authorities. The building will be constructed of brown pressed brick with stone trimmings. The face brick will be made in Toronto, O. It is proposed to make the other brick in Bethany, within a few feet of the site of the library. All the brick used—constructing the college building and Phillips Hall—were made from the clay excavated from the foundations. The library will be 95 feet long and 45 feet wide. There will also be in the back of the building an 18 foot circular extension, to form a part of the book or stock room. The first floor will be made into a large auditorium or banquet room. It will have connected with it a well equipped kitchen. The auditorium will have a seating capacity equal to the former "Commencement Hall." On the second floor, which will be entered on a level with the ground in front of Phillips Hall, there will be a stack room, large enough to hold 50,000 volumes. There will be in front of this stack room a lobby 18x24 feet and on either side of this a reading room. These reading rooms will be 45x35 feet. The third floor, reached by stairs from a second loboy in front of the first, will be divided into four splendid lecture or class rooms. The building is to be finished in oak throughout, and in all respects will be highly ornamental, as well as serviceable. It will be located about 200 feet in front of Phillips Hall, and will be conspicuous from the pike and all the surrounding country. Our illustration gives a fairly good idea of the exterior of the building. Work will begin in the spring, as soon as the weather will permit, and it is expected that it will be completed in September in time for the opening of next session.

The Litchfield Meeting.

R. H. Fife has been with us 25 days in a meeting which has just closed, with 122 additions; one at the lecture Monday night and two at a baptism service Tuesday night, make 125 since March 1. On the last day of the meeting $3,000 were pledged in a few minutes to remodel and enlarge the church building. This amount will be raised easily to $4,000. The pastor's salary was increased $150 per annum. I have had, at various times and places, the assistance of some of our strongest men; but for complete, all around evangelistic work I have never found a better helper than Brother Fife. The church has been strengthened numerically, spiritually, financially and in every other way. With good weather, good roads and more room for the people the results might have been much greater. Much of the credit for this splendid meeting is due to our singers and our loyal band of workers. The church was active, prayerful and expectant. We will begin work on our new building at once.—M. S. Johnson, Pastor.

Three Wonderful Books!

I announce to all preachers and scholars that I have ready for delivery three of the most remarkable books of modern times. The first is called "The Blue and The Gray," written in argumentative verse, to give the true cause of the war, to show the negro is under a curse, and that giving him the franchise was an infringement of the Bible. The other two books are "Sermons" written to show that original Christianity is the only true religion. To trace God's church from Jerusalem to the present day. To explain and identify all the "beasts" and "harlots" of the Rev. of John. To show that life is the result of organism and begins with a birth in nature and in grace. Many other difficult subjects explained. These books are called: "Diamonds of truth from beginning to end." The author is aware they will do a world of good and is selling the three for $1. No preacher, no scholar, in fact no one, should fail to send for these three books. Address J. A. Cunningham, Tupelo, Miss. References to churches given when wanted.

The New Sewing Machine

Every woman who sews will be interested in the introduction of a machine that is absolutely NEW—the Volo. New not only in name, but new in all its distinctive features—in the unusually wide range of work it does and the wonderful way it performs it.

The Volo does all work perfectly, whether sewing the heaviest cloth or stitching the most delicate fabric; and with ease and noiselessness of operation that will astonish any woman accustomed to other machines. So simply, so strongly constructed that trouble or repairs are unknown. Beautifully finished in rich quarter-oak, finely polished. Though unquestionably superior to any other machine, the Volo sells for $40, a saving of a third.

THE WALK TO EMMAUS.— Luke 24:13-35.

Scriptural Settings: The bruised lower nature, Gen. 3:14-16; The vicarious sufferer, Is. 53; Zaccheus seeking Jesus in the way, Lu. 19:1-10; Entertaining angels unawares, Lu. 24:29-31, 1 Ki. 17:8-24; Saul of Tarsus saw Jesus from the roadside, Acts 9:1-19.

The walk to Emmaus is one of the romantic incidents of sacred story inspiring us to a closer walk with Jesus, that our hearts may also thrill with joy as the final purposes of God are made known to us. And we, too, would commune and pray with him that our eyes might be opened and we should see him as he is.

Every gift of God is an invitation to a greater. He gave those disciples the companionship of Jesus along the highway, and when they claimed it, he gave them his Son to be their guest, to break bread and pray with them. So will it be unto us all—seeking, we shall find ever increasing spiritual gifts and blessedness.

Jesus does not obtrude himself upon us. He walked with those disciples along the highway but would not have presumed upon their hospitality unless they had constrained him. So with us. We meet him in art and literature, in sociology and philanthropy, in human need and the noblest idealism and he is gracious, but he never comes into our inner lives and abides with us in sanctifying presence and power unless we in sincerity invite him and prepare for him.

Some men discourse on the Scriptures and we see battlefields with gleaming blades and garments rolled in blood; others speak with forensic eloquence, and compel admiration of their acumen; some make the Bible the most beautiful piece in the mosaic of the world's sacred literature, but none of them make our hearts burn within us with kindling hopes and fervent love. Jesus doubtless told of the consummation of his earthly ministry, of a world redeemed unto God and the leading home of ransomed hosts who would go no more out forever.

"And beginning from Moses and from all the prophets he interpreted to them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself," reveals one of the secrets of Christ's endurance of all that a world's guilt heaped upon him. He saw his career portrayed in the Bible of his day, and knew that following wilderness trials would be angel ministries, after Gethsemane Pentecost must be, and that being rejected of men only preceded universal coronation. He taught those disciples and us in the fuller Bible of our day to locate ourselves in shadows and in sunlight, to recognize our proper sacrifices and our privileges, how to take our spiritual latitude and longitude, and realize at last the destiny our Father hath ordained for us.

The disciples were as greatly in error as the rabbis concerning the effect of Jesus' death upon his mission. Both thought it the refutation of his divinity. That error, though short-lived, was a source of fiendish delight to the Jews and of infinite gloom to his followers. How pathetic the plaint of Cleopas, "But we trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel!" In this naive confession of disappointment and despair, however, we have convincing evidence of the sincerity and truthfulness of the disciples and biographies of our Lord that justifies their faith's being subjected to this ordeal. Such expressions would not have been admitted into a cunningly devised fable. But we now recognize them as the necessary shadows to the lights of true pictures of those marvelous days, and are as thankful for the doubts as for the faith of the early believers.

The pessimist may say, "Because others have died, I, too, will die." Only Jesus can say, "Because I live, ye shall live also," and point to many wrested from the embrace of death as proof of the potency of his commands, "Awake thou that sleepest!"

Love light flashed from angel eyes toward the eternal throne is neither so bright nor inspirational as Jesus' tears wept by the grave of Lazarus. Let us bottle them in our hearts that, weeping with those that weep, we may bring to them somewhat of the comfort Jesus brought to Mary and Martha of old.

The resurrection of the dead was not the supreme test of our Savior's might. If it be lawful to speak of expressions of omnipotence as differing in degree, we would say that enduing the withered and almost dead souls of men with the power and glory of an endless life was a more signal and splendid achievement.

The Christ does better by us. Around those he raised from the fatal slumber while he was on earth gathered other mourners and they themselves recoiled again in horror from uncanny death. But when he speaks our spirits into the new life neither death nor anything else can ever make us fearful or our friends sorrowful. We are alive forever more.

As Theseus, the Athenian prince, went to Crete on the ship bearing tribute of youths and maidens for the Cretan monster, but went before them into the Labyrinth and destroyed him and freed his countrymen from most galling bondage, so Jesus, our celestial Prince, came to us and went into the labyrinth of the grave and there destroyed "him that had the power of death, that is, the devil, and delivered them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage."

Jesus awakened the ruler's daughter, just fallen asleep; restored the widow's son, being borne to the cemetery; and called Lazarus from the grave in which he had been captive four days, and from which all hope had fled. This illustrates his power in resurrecting us from death in trespasses and sins. He comes to us in our first transgressions with pardon and life; thou, too, who have gone far into desolation, can hear his voice and be guided home; and there are not lacking trophies of his love and power that have been wrested from deep graves where society and even the Church thought were only the utterly incorrigible and utterly doomed. So long as Jesus reigns there is love for the sinner and a power to save.

Nature is very economical; notwithstanding the storms and conflagrations of 6,000 years, nothing has been absolutely lost. The earth weighs as much now as at the beginning. By her own marvelous alchemy she converts the ashes of one fabric into the glow of another. The dead lamb lives again in grass and flower rising above its little grave. Our bodies, likewise, are woven into various forms. But would divine economy so husband our bodies and waste our spirits? Would God thus be "penny wise and pound foolish"? As the painter is greater than the picture, as the song is more valuable than the paper on which it is written, so is the soul more precious than the body and will more surely be saved from annihilation.

JESUS' POWER OVER DISEASE AND DEATH.- Luke 7:1-17.

Memory Verses, 14, 15.

Golden Text.—Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life.—John 11:25.

After setting forth, in the Sermon on the Mount, the fundamental principles of that kingdom of righteousness and spiritual religion which he had come to establish, Jesus, with his recently called disciples and certain others who were attracted by his teaching or grateful for relief through his healing power (Luke 8:1-3) went on another preaching tour through the cities and villages of Galilee. The starting point for this journey was Capernaum. It was apparently quite an extensive tour, as indicated in Luke 8:1, but only a few incidents are reported for us. They are: The healing of the centurion's servant; the raising of the son of the widow of Nain; the inquiry from John the Baptist in prison, and the subsequent discourse suggested by that message, and the anointing of Jesus by the sinful woman in the house of Simon the Pharisee.

The healing of the centurion's servant is remarkable for four things: That it was done at the request of a Gentile; that this Gentile exhibited such unusual humility and faith; that there was no evidence of faith on the part of the principal beneficiary of the miracle, and that the cure was wrought at a distance.

Jesus generally confined his ministry to the Jews. His every utterance shows freedom from narrow Jewish prejudices, and there is abundant evidence that the world-wide spread of the gospel was no afterthought of Paul or any other apostle, but an integral part of his conception of the divine purpose. But as a matter of method, he dealt chiefly with the Jews. The exceptions are rare—the woman of Samaria, the Syrophenician woman, this centurion, few if any others. But the centurion, though a Roman, had learned from the Jews faith in Jehovah and had built a synagogue.

It is notable that this Gentile approached the Master with deep humility and profound faith. He knew himself a sinful man. He put no trust in his official dignity or social position. In the presence of sinlessness he thought only of his own unworthiness. And his faith was equal to his humility, for he believed that the Lord could heal his servant even without coming under his unworthy roof. Humility and faith are companion virtues. They seldom flourish apart.

Usually Jesus required faith on the part of the one who was to be healed. If he had always done so it would be remotely conceivable that the cures could be brought within some naturalistic explanation, for every one now realizes that a strong expectation of cure is often more efficacious than medicine. But vicarious faith lends itself to no such explanation, and there are enough such cases to stand as proof that Jesus' healing power was no ordinary "mind cure," but a truly divine power over nature.

On the next day, as some of the ancient authorities say, or at any rate soon after this incident, Jesus was in Nain, saw the funeral procession and the weeping mother, and gave her back her son. Why should this one broken-hearted mother be chosen for comfort? Did not Jesus know that daily some mother's son goes to the grave, and had he compassion only on this one because he happened to see her? That would have been but a shortsighted and sentimental use of his power. The charity which takes account only of such poverty as happens to confront us individually is a poor and weak charity.

No, Jesus had compassion on all the bereaved mothers of all time, though he does not stop all the funeral processions. He did better than that. He showed us a new meaning of death. He took from it the sting of hopelessness and finality. He showed it to be but an incident of life. He has done for all not less but infinitely more than he did for the widow at Nain in this tender and considerate act.

POND'S EXTRACT
Hamamelis Virginica

has for sixty years been the standard extract of witch hazel and to-day is more popular than ever both with the public and the Medical profession. This has entailed upon POND'S EXTRACT the inevitable penalty of fame:—

Imitation and Substitution

Neither of these however, would be perilous to public health if unscrupulous manufacturers—swayed more by Profit than Principle—did not jeopardize the health and lives of the people by adulterating their common and unidentified witch hazels and offering them through wholesale and retail druggists and department stores as "the same thing" and "just as good" as POND'S EXTRACT.

Not content with marketing an inferior article these manufacturers reached the point at last—in their Greed of Gain—of offering witch hazel fortified with Wood Alcohol (poison) or Formaldehyde (poison) or both, to the imminent peril of all who were deceived into buying and using it.

So rife have these pernicious conditions become that the State Legislatures of New York and Illinois have enacted laws which make it an offence punishable by heavy fine, or imprisonment, or both, to sell any medicinal extract containing Wood Alcohol (poison) or Formaldehyde (poison) unless the bottle containing same be labeled POISON, and other States throughout the Union are taking steps one after another, to the same protective end.

In order, therefore, that the public may be secured against the danger of poisoning by the use of such witch hazels, we are impelled to publish the following

Caution

Witch Hazel is not "the same thing" as POND'S EXTRACT. On analysis of 70 samples of witch hazel, bought of leading wholesale and retail druggists and department stores, 52 contained Wood Alcohol (poison) or Formaldehyde (poison), or both, and not one of the other 18 was up to the required standard of strength. The peril of these poisons may be avoided by the exclusive use of

POND'S EXTRACT

To Consider the Subject.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

I was much interested in an editorial of the issue of March 22, entitled, "Our Conventions and Our Missionary Societies." I like the suggestion that we have a separate meeting some time during the general convention for the purpose of considering the subject of church federation. If this does not seem to be the best time (though it does seem to me, for several reasons, to be the very best time), then at some other time and place; but certainly before the close of 1906. There are not a few who desire an opportunity to freely represent their own views on this subject, having long since grown tired of being misrepresented by the belligerent spirit of certain papers. By all means let us have the meeting and see where we stand. And what is, perhaps, quite as important, let the world know where we stand. I do not see why this should not be made a part of the proceedings of the home society, for nothing more vitally concerns the welfare of all our work than that for which church federation stands. But let us in no way embarrass any of our missionary interests. And if there is the slightest probability that the consideration of this matter by the American Christian Missionary Society will do this, then let us have a separate meeting.

Apply the Test.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

I am almost compelled to say a word about church federation. Certainly these are strenuous times with The Christian-Evangelist, and "The Christian Standard." I think I have read about all that has been written in both of these papers on federation. The thought that I mentioned at the beginning of this discussion has been steadily growing with each successive issue of these two papers, and that is that there is a disagreement as to the meaning of terms. Until there can be an agreement as to what "church federation" really is, I don't see how its discussion can be carried on profitably in these two papers, which are supposed to be exponents of New Testament Christianity.

I find very much to commend in the attitude that The Christian-Evangelist has taken, and then I can't help but concur in many positions that have been taken by "The Standard."

I have seen some things in both of these very excellent papers that had better been left out entirely. We don't want to forget to grow in grace during this discussion. If church federation guarantees perfect freedom of action to the co-operating bodies to be true to what each believes to be its providential mission; and if it will serve to combine their influence and strength in behalf of social and moral reforms; and if it will economize resources by the avoidance of unnecessary overlapping, and care for the neglected and ungospeled masses of our great cities; and by so doing, if it will secure and give visible expression to the Christian unity which already exists, and thus promote in the most practicable way the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for the unity of his followers—then pray tell me, who they are among the Disciples of Christ who are opposed to church federation? I am no prophet, nor yet the son of a prophet, but I will venture to affirm that if the above conditions are all to be met and fulfilled, and if this is to be an authoritative statement of the real nature of church federation—then we will all, "The Christian Standard" included, go in for church federation.

The question still occurs to my stubborn mind, Who shall deliver the goods?

We can not act in this matter all together as the denominations do, owing to the peculiar character of our church organization.

After all, will it not remain for every church to act independently and for each individual Disciple to do as he pleases, in regard to it?

Let us have discussion, but let us be sure that we understand our terms, so that the odium theologicum of having fought a straw man may not be found resting upon our shoulders. L. A. Chapman.

Mechanicsburg, Ill.

[What Brother Chapman says about the use of the word federation in different senses by the two papers mentioned, is obviously true, but there is no excuse whatever for such difference. There is no difference among the friends of federation who have been in its councils and who are in a position to know what its spirit and purpose are, as to its meaning. But the opponents of federation put their own arbitrary meaning into the word and oppose that. They are determined to oppose federation, and hence they must make it mean something they can oppose. This we say of those who have the means of knowing better. No doubt many well-meaning brethren have been deceived on the subject. Brother Chapman says: "If federation means," thus and so, quoting from our statement of what the New York basis actually proposes, "then we will all, 'The Christian Standard' included, go in for church federation." Well, that matter can easily be determined. Let that statement of ours appearing on the first page of The Christian-Evangelist of March 15 be submitted to the executive committee of the national federation movement, for its decision as to whether it is a fair statement of church federation. Will the opponents of federation agree to that? Let Brother Chapman apply the test and see.—Editor.]

A Methodist Minister Approves.

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

Your attitude of broad charity toward all who make up the family of the Lord Jesus Christ is certainly commendable. I congratulate you upon a clearness of vision deplorably lacking in many quarters of your Zion. On the mode, the design and the subjects of baptism, you and I differ most decidedly; and yet I do not doubt that you and I love the Lord, and seek fully to know his holy will, and to unhesitatingly follow the teachings of the revealed Word, and there are several hundred ways in which we are each, in loyal fealty to the Redeemer, building up his cause, notwithstanding our differences, due, no doubt, to circumstances somewhat beyond our control, and to our mutual fallibility of judgment. May God bless you.

Daniel B. Turney,
Polemic Methodist Protestant Church.
Effingham, Ill.

[We thank Brother Turney for his kind expression of approval of at least the spirit of The Christian-Evangelist. We would no doubt differ, as he says, on the subjects he mentions and these differences, as he suggests, are due in part "to circumstances somewhat beyond our control, and to our mutual fallibility of judgment." One of these circumstances, which has kept us from seeing alike, has been the wall of separation, which has kept us apart. Perhaps if we had been working together and praying together and talking over the matters of the kingdom together, studying how to unite Christians and convert the world, we might have seen eye to eye. Brother Turney is, as he signs himself, a "polemic," but we think he will rejoice with us that we are passing out of the age of polemics into that of irenics, and the latter, we have no doubt, will prove more promotive of union than the former. Meanwhile, we are glad to have the confidence and approval of good men in all religious bodies.—Editor.]

"Gunner Have It."

To the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist:

I have read Bro. J. H. Garrison's book on "The Holy Spirit" with interest and benefit. I have also been interested in the discussion it has brought out. This discussion will be profitable to us. I thought I had a pretty clear sermon on the subject. It has caused me to review my sermon, to look up Campbell in the discussion with Rice and Richardson, and given me a determination to study the Scriptural teaching more carefully. Let the discussion go on in the right way, but I would exhort our critics to leave out the personalities and discuss the subject.

The discussion over church federation reminds me of a story:

"One day while Senator Pettus was strolling around the plantation of a friend in Alabama, he chanced upon one of the field hands engaged in a violent altercation with his wife.

"'Come, come!' exclaimed he. 'This won't do—this quarrel must cease right away! Tell me the cause of your dispute; I may be able to settle it for you.'

"The dusky husband, awkwardly doffing his cap to the Senator, replied:

"'Dis ain't no dispute, Senator!'

"'No dispute?' reiterated Mr. Pettus, perplexed.

"'No, sah!' rejoined the husband, convincingly. 'It ain't no dispute! It's jest dis way: I's jest been paid off an' has ten dollahs. My wife here thinks she ain't gunner git it, and I knows she ain't. No dispute at all, sah.'"

That's about the way; the editor of the "Christian Standard" thinks "we're gunner have" federation, and the Editor of The Christian-Evangelist knows we are! "No dispute at all, sah!" And why not leave it that way? All intelligent Disciples co-operate with other religious bodies, some more than others. Many congregations adopted Christian Endeavor, and it has been recognized as the young people's meeting of our churches, but not all congregations adopted it, and those that did were recognized and fellowshiped in other good works. If we carry out our motto, "in opinion liberty," we will let those who want to federate do so, and those who do not will have the privilege of their convictions. Any other position will defeat the very spirit of our plea, when other religious bodies seem to be coming to it.

CORRELL.

Elder Lannes J. Correll was born at Williamsville, N. Y., Oct. 18, 1822, and died at Arnold, Neb., Jan. 22, 1906. In his 18th year he began to wield the "sword of the Spirit." This he did incessantly, uncompromisingly and effectively for 66 years. No less than 3,000 souls were led into the kingdom through his efforts. It was through him that I was rescued from skepticism and induced to enter the ministry. He leaves a wife, two sons and a daughter. He located at Arnold in 1883. He preached the first funeral sermon in that community. He preached his last sermon on his 83d birthday, having for his theme "Can An Old Man Be Useful?" He was a descendant of the French Huguenots on his father's side and of Jean Lannes, Bonaparte's favorite general, on his mother's side. From one ancestry he received the elements of leadership, fortitude and bravery in aggressive fights for cherished principles, yet this military spirit was tempered and modified by the other inherited characteristics of gentleness, humility, kindness and Christian fortitude. Only such a nature could combat and overcome pioneer obstacles and construct a monument of living Christian ideals in the lives of other pioneers. The funeral service was held in the Christian Church at Arnold and was attended by a large concourse of people, the writer conducting the services.

Sarah Ann Eakin was born Oct. 22, 1830, was married to Thomas C. Clark, April 12, 1849, and died Feb. 13, 1906, at Republic, Kan. She was a member of the Church of Christ for 63 years.

McCASH.

Mrs. Martha Ann McCash, born near Cincinnati, O., Aug. 4, 1833; died at Hazel Dell, Ill., Feb. 22, 1906. These two dates measure the earth life of mother—82 years, 6 months and 18 days. She was the oldest daughter of Ruben and Eliza Van Zandt, a cousin on her mother's side of Secretary Seward, and a relative of Governor Van Zandt, of Minnesota. She was married to Isaac S. McCash, April 4, 1840, and confessed Christ in the same year at Carthage, O., under the preaching of Walter Scott. She and father were among the first Disciples in that part of Ohio in the movement to restore the unity of the Church of Christ. Pioneer preachers who visited Ohio in earlier days of the Restoration, and later Indiana and Illinois, found the McCash home a welcome retreat. Among those best known who were entertained were: Walter Scott, the Campbells, Alexander Hall, E. S. Burnett, Love Jameson and Banjamin Franklin. The marital relation of nearly 66 years, always happy, though cumbered with family cares, was blessed of God. She was the mother of 11 children, 7 sons and 4 daughters. One son died in infancy, and the oldest daughter in matured life. In the family mother was the patient, quiet, God-loving queen. She was the embodiment of that love which seeketh not its own. All her children surviving her are followers of the Christ she loved. Father and five sons are ministers of the Word. Their lives and labors are recognized with approval by a large part of the brotherhood. Her children are her contribution to this generation. Mother lived a simple, unpretentious life of faith, with no desire for public notoriety. Her ambition was to rear and educate her family. To this end she suffered pioneer life in Illinois without complaint and deprived herself of comforts to further her aim. She saw the travail of her soul, and felt the joys of satisfaction. Her visible presence is no longer with us; yet that sweet age-chastened face and those gentle eyes will not cease to be real to us as they watch for the heavenly home-coming of loved ones. Children and great-grandchildren have risen up to call her blessed. Near the old home at Hazel Dell, Ill., after a simple, tender funeral service, her body was laid to rest. Blessed memory! Triumphant faith! Glorious hope! Good-by for a few days only. I. N. McCASH.

SMITH.

Sarah A. Smith, the beloved wife of J. N. Smith, pastor of the Christian Church of East Los Angeles, Cal., was called home to her heavenly Father on the night of Wednesday, Feb. 7. Until a few years ago her health was robust. She had borne 12 children, and had lived to see them all grown. She was born in Lewis county, Ky., Jan. 20, 1846, being the oldest daughter of Dr. T. O. Mershon. On Jan. 8, 1864, she was married to J. N. Smith. They moved to Ohio in order that her husband might attend Hiram College. For 42 years she walked by the side of her husband as a faithful wife, a loving mother and a devout, though unassuming, Christian. She stayed at home "by the stuff" while her husband evangelized and did the scattered work peculiar to the minister of those early times in our brotherhood. It has not been the privilege of the writer to ever see a couple more fully one in everything. Their married life was ideal. Mother Smith filled the description of the godly mother described in the Scriptures. She was never happier than when at home with her children about her. As Brother Smith goes about his work with a heart yet bruised by the separation, he will be soothed by her blessed memory, and the sympathy of many hundreds of Christians will come up to him as a precious balm of healing. ## Intermingled.

BY G. S. JUDD.

I kiss my loves in the morning,
  For alas, I may not say
What pitiful separations
  May come ere the close of day.

I know my way is winding,
  And I am wandering down,
That the sun for me is declining
  And the shadows are long and brown.

Sometimes when the wind is sighing,
  There are voices that come to me,
And perhaps, when the shadows thicken,
  I shall fail my loved to see.

And the silence has its voices,
  For the song of memory bells
Comes ringing from the far away,
  And a chastening message tells.

It tells of white hands folded
  O'er a quiet, pulseless breast;
Of a throbbing heart long silent
  In her peaceful, sacred rest.

And my hungry heart is yearning
  For the lovelight in her eye;
Oh, when memory bells are ringing
  How sweet 'twould be to die!

But a kiss recalls me earthward,
  For how could I say "farewell"?
Must I close my heart to the music
  Of this sad, sweet memory bell?

Thus "I halt 'tween two opinions,"
  To wander on, or to stay.
May the dear Lord choose my biding,
  And my time to "fly away."

The Bronze Vase.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

[Mrs. Revore, mother of the twins, Raymund and Rhoda, when dying tells them that there is a secret which may or may not have great influence upon their later lives. The secret is in a letter which is in a tin box in the bank of the town. The box is to be opened and the letter read only if either of the twins makes the other very unhappy. The mother dies, and Raymund and Rhoda are left to the mercy of strangers, their mother's half brother in St. Louis having failed to answer repeated letters from Mrs. Revore. The new minister, Brother Bellfield, takes the children into his already overflowing home. Rhoda has a visit from a mysterious man named Boggs, who claims to have been sent by Mrs. Revore's half brother to find out whether the children know anything of a bronze vase. After much delay it is decided to send Rhoda to an orphan home, and Raymund to Mr. Omer's farm.]

CHAPTER XII.

"Come in!" came Wizzen's voice. Raymund opened the disreputable looking door and Jack, who was close behind, pushed him forward. Rhoda followed the two boys into the one-room cottage. It was the first time any of the children had approached the laborer on the plane of social intercourse, and for a moment he seemed rather strange—that air of friendliness and simplicity which made of the man of thirty-five something of a child, was, for a moment, had to understand. The room, however, was too hot for sharp distinctions. A little round coal stove was charging in one corner of the square, unplastered chamber, wheezing at the dampers and roaring up the pipe. Near the stove sat an old lady of perhaps seventy-five, knitting. She seemed to take great satisfaction in the fire, though the September evening was deliciously warm and fragrant outdoors. Wizzen sat at the extreme corner of the room. They had never seen him in a coat or vest, but now they found him without his black shirt. A thin undershirt of gray stretched like tights across his muscular chest; the sleeves were rolled up above his elbows. His hair, which they now saw unadorned by the glazed cap, was damp with perspiration. In the high temperature he seemed about to burst through his blue trowsers as he squirmed uncomfortably in his chair. Of the three children Jack felt the most at home. With that high and independent spirit that conducted him through a fight per week, more or less, at the public school, he now approached the middle of the room.

The old lady looked up from her knitting, smiled at the children and said to Rhoda, "Don't leave the door open.

"No," said Wizzen, "we don't want to heat up the street, the city might complain of us."

"This is the first fire I've seen," remarked Jack Bellfield. "How do you do, Wizzen?"

"I'm a-dripping at every pore," said Wizzen, hospitably. "Take cheers, friends, all. This is quite an unexpected." Rhoda did not think he had finished the sentence, but Wizzen evidently thought he had, for he continued, "That's Mrs. Weed over there. I'd introduce you, but she's as deef as a post." He then signaled to the old lady that he had a communication to make, and the old lady, reaching down into a basket at her side, drew forth an ear-trumpet. Wizzen walked over to her and shouted at the top of his voice, "Friends of mine!" The old lady nodded to Wizzen and then smiled at the children and said: "Thomas is the best man that ever lived."

"She means me," said Wizzen, "but she gets her words mislaid and picks up the first one that comes handy." The old lady continued, "I hope you don't find it too cold in here, but Thomas knows that when I get chilly there is danger of my getting well."

"She means sick," Wizzen explained, "and she meant hot instead of cold. She knows what she means; she's all right, as bright as a dollar and never complaining. Come over into this corner, children, if you're going to visit me." Wizzen retreated to that corner which offered the greatest distance from the stove, and the others followed him.

"Is Mrs. Weed your grandmother?" inquired Jack, who was always interested in his surroundings, and nearly always able to make himself comfortable among them. Rhoda and Raymund full of the plan of running away were excited and timid about broaching the all important theme.

"Nuck," said Wizzen. "she ain't no kin of mine. Notice how this room is laid off? I say room; but it is three rooms. That bed next to the stove is hern. That's Mrs. Weed's bedroom. See the carpet comes out from under the bed far enough for the old lady to step on before she puts on her stockings. The old lady is desperately fond of heat, and if she don't have it all the time she goes into a bad cold, which I am afraid will at some time develop into a case of grippe, which there is nothing worse. I don't pretend to sit here with the old lady continual, but she gets lonesome and I can stand it a spell and she likes to have me. The old lady is fond of me. This corner where we're sitting, it is my particular corner, though it is but fair to say that the only thing it is particular about is which it is as far from the stove as a corner of this room can be. I put down this oilcloth on my corner that it might be a-cooling of me. Between the two corners is the middle room, with the cook stove, you see, and the dining table and the library." The library was a string of almanacs and papers swinging from a nail in the wall.

Rhoda started to ask him if he couldn't help them run away, but her heart throbbed so violently that she said in a tremulous voice. "Where do you sleep, Wizzen?"

"Out in my wagon," said Wizzen. "When it gets colder I put up the canvas top and there's a place for a stove if I care for to light it, which it is enough, generally, to toast myself here, and then I run and give a dive through the tent-flap and roll up in my blanket and sleep like a king."

"Ah!" said Raymund, sympathetically. "That is what I should like! Oh, Wizzen, I should like that so much! I—" Then he, too, checked himself.

Jack, who was determined not to open the object of their visit, said, "But who is Mrs. Weed, Wizzen? Where did you find her? I never knew anything about her."

"You haven't been in Crawley but about three weeks, have you?" Wizzen returned.

"No," said the minister's son, "but already I know about everybody in the place."

"Mrs. Weed is my mother-in-law," said Wizzen abruptly.

"Oh, Wizzen!" cried Rhoda. "And we never knew that you were married."

"Well," said Wizzen, decidedly, "I was!"

This brought a lull in the conversation which the deaf old lady, appearing to divine, filled with the words, spoken in a hearty, motherly voice, "If I do say it myself, there is no better man than Wizzen. Look how he cares for me and does for me, never thinking about his own comfort. Whenever I get well he has the lawyer come so kind and prompt and every medicine he writes down is sent for immediate."

"She means the doctor," Wizzen explained, "and she means sick. Mighty spry old lady for 75."

Rhoda asked gently, "Did your wife die, Wizzen?"

"I never knowed," said Wizzen, "but knowing her as well as I do, I would say such would not be my opinion. To be candid, children, and to be done with the subject, my wife throwed herself away."

Rhoda was unable to resist another question; "Do you mean in the river, Wizzen?"

"I don't know, Rhoda, which it was, the river or on dry land. It was wherever she was, that I'll go bond for! If she was on the river, it was there; if she was on dry land, it was there. Wherever found, it was there that she throwed herself away."

Rhoda was greatly puzzled, and although she saw the subject was distinctly unpleasant to Wizzen, she found it altogether impossible to restrain one more question: "What did you do, Wizzen?"

"I moved," said Wizzen. "I just hitched up my two hosses and put out; which, if you will excuse me, Rhoda, it is only fair that I should now like to do, for to get away from a subject that makes me welcome a hot stove in preference."

"Oh, Wizzen," cried Raymund, "that is what we want to do; to move; to have your two horses hitched up to-morrow night to carry us away in the night-time! That's what we came here for. They are going to send Rhoda to the orphan home and they are going to take me out to Mr. Omer's farm to work. Oh, Wizzen, we won't be together any more!"

"Oh, Wizzen," cried Rhoda, her reserve gone, "what do you think of that? Raymund and I won't be together by night or day—never—never any more!"

"That's what we're here for," said Jack, in a businesslike tone. "These two want to run off, and I am here to do what I can for them."

Wizzen screwed his eyes, lowered his head and looked at Rhoda just as if he had on his cap, and were trying to see from under the brim. "Just you are going to an orphan home by yourself?" he said.

"All by myself!" said Rhoda, clasping her hands. "Won't you help us, Wizzen? There's nobody else we can go to, to help us away."

"Nobody at all!" Raymund corroborated.

"Now," said Jack Bellfield, "why can't you cover your wagon, and have your horses hitched here to-morrow night, say about midnight? I'll bring Raymund and Rhoda here. You'll take 'em in the wagon and crack your whip. I reckon those two horses of yours can pull it?" he added with a sudden check to his enthusiasm.

Wizzen crossed his legs and slowly rubbed the upper one. "Where'll you go?"

"We want to go out into the world," said Raymund.

"It strikes me," said Wizzen, "that you are already out in the world. What you need to do is to come out of it!"

"What we want," said Rhoda, who did not make much out of Wizzen's remark, though he evidently considered it of much pith, for he rubbed his leg with increased satisfaction, even slapping it several times, "is to go and seek our fortune."

"Oh," said Wizzen; "I never heerd that you had to find one! Are you sure there's one anywhere for you to find? If they is, I don't blame you for wanting to go to seek it. But young people, I can't take you. Look at Mrs. Weed. Can I leave her?"

"Couldn't somebody else take care of her?" Raymund asked dejectedly.

"Nuck. Why, her own daughter throwed her off! Who do you reckon would take her to keep? Now you two twins have had some experience of the willingness of people for to take charge of other people's people. What do you think, yourself? Do you think it likely? No sir-ee! They ain't nobody but me to take keer of the old lady. And I mean to do it, if I melt in the doing of it. The old lady couldn't travel in my wagon; you couldn't keep it hot enough. It would catch afire and that would like enough scare the horses, to say nothing of burning us up. The old lady is cold-blooded. That is what I call it; that is my expression for Mrs. Weed, as to say her blood and flesh, and not meaning her intentions, for her heart is as warm as that husky little stove she's a-neighboring."

"Then there's nothing we can do—nothing!" cried Rhoda in despair. "Oh, Wizzen, it's awful to feel that you can't do anything!"

"I know it," said Wizzen, "I've felt that way myself. There was a time when there wasn't nothing I could do, to make myself satisfied. But here I am to-day, sorter willing to live and move along. It will be that way with you, Rhoda. A dozen years from now, all this trouble of yours won't matter. You'll be married, like enough, and in a big fine house of your own, and maybe me a-whitewashing your fence. Take heart, friends, when you can't move yourself, old Father Time will get you forrids somehow."

When Mother is Away.

The house is such a dreary place when mother is away;
There isn't fun in anything; no matter what you play.
The dolls just sit as stupid, and act so still and queer—
They always say such funny things when mother's by to hear.

The little china tea set looks so lonesome waiting there;
There's no fun playing party and eating only air!
It isn't like the lovely things you most believe you see
Upon the plates and saucers, when mother comes to tea.

There's no use doing up your hair and dressing up in style,
You know it's just pretending, and you're Betty all the while;
You never hear a whisper from the chairs against the wall:
"Dear me, what splendid lady now is coming here to call!"

The pictures in the picture books are never half so fine;
The stories won't come out and talk for any pains of mine;
An hour goes by so slowly, it's almost like a day—
The house is such a lonesome place when mother is away.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Well, I don't know whether this will turn out to be an interesting article, this week, or not. We are moving. I am seated at my typewriter on a sort of island, a very small island of order, in the midst of a sea of carpet-beating, dust-raising, furniture-lifting and voice-hubbub. Felix crouches with me upon my island of rug. He won't purr. I have stroked him in all his favorite places, but his big eyes stare straight before him, and his ears stick back like they do when he comes in out of the rain. He remembers when we moved from Plattsburg, and he knows another hegira (if you will excuse that hard word I won't do it any more—is at hand. Not being a reasoning creature, he doesn't understand we are going into our own house—which is not finished, of course—but he knows we are going somewhere. Little as he has liked this rented house we are about to leave, I expect he'll want to stay here in preference to a new house. We'll have to box him up. If he breaks loose and if any of our readers see him cutting across country—an old gold cat with a tiny nick in his left ear—don't stop him, for he's going back to Missouri.

Goldie Delarnette, Sedalia, Mo., is one of many who is interested in the old-gold captain: "How is Felix since he came to the new climate? I am interested in the Av. S. work. I am an orphan, 12 years old. I send 10 cents for Charlie. I have five brothers. My mother sends 10 cents. She reads The Christian-Evangelist." (Now, they are taking down the stove.) G. Melvin Ledden, Ospur, Ill.: "I am one of the oldest members of the Advance Society. I haven't kept the rules for two or three years, but I am going to begin keeping the rules again to-day." (Splendid example for other old members. It's like old times to have Melvin Ledden back with us. Felix started outdoors, saw the men beating the carpet, and has entreated me to let him go down into the cellar. There he is, skulking, but he won't go near any of the boxes. He remembers the cage in which he came to Bentonville. I don't believe he would go near a box if he knew a nest of mice was in it!) "I wish the members would write of their pets, their Av. S. clubs, their picnics, and what they are doing. I have two particular pets. The cat is a Maltese and lives in the hay-mow. His name is Tom. When he hears me beginning to milk, he comes down from his bed and sits behind the cow, as solemn as a judge. When I am done he runs for his pan of milk. The dog is Teddy" (is he a Rough Rider?) "brown and yellow, and the biggest coward you ever saw. He will bark and growl as if he were as big as a house, until Tom comes up, then he will run as fast as he can." (Good for Tom!) "He sheds his hair on your lap, or under the stove." (No, not on my lap! No shedder ever gets on my lap, Felix or otherwise. I like Felix, but I like him as a cat and not as a nursling babe.) "I would like to see some of the old members write as they used to."

All right, here is one—Donnie Swift, Billings, Mo.: "Vacation has come and I have plenty of time for my Av. S. work. Look out for a fine report before long! I am sorry I didn't begin again on Feb. 11, but I was preparing for our box supper for the close of school. I hope it won't take me 26 weeks to get on the Honor List, as it did Edna Bear. There is a new railroad being built half a mile from our house. The blasting is just awful." (I hope it will blow up the price of your land.) "Are the Av. S. colors blue and old gold?" They are. And now they are dragging something downstairs that sounds heavy and big. I can't imagine what we had upstairs that reminds me so of a dead man being pulled down the staircase in his boots. It's a good thing this page is made up of other people's letters. I know I couldn't think up anything smart in the midst of all this moving. Here is another old faithful guardsman, Ruth Sampsel, Warrensburg, Mo. What kind of a guardsman, you ask? Why, the Av. S. members are guarding their minds from the weak and stunting result of reading nothing but stories, by observing the regular reading of history, poetry and the Bible. She writes: "Here I come with my thirteenth quarterly report. After all, there is nothing in the 'unlucky thirteen' belief. I mean to try for some of the prizes this year. Are they all for the same thing?" (Yes, for the three best kept and most regularly sent or kept reports. Adnah is offered, though if you have already received Adnah, I may send you another book. There! I think something broke that time!) "I don't blame you one bit for not wanting to write over the last chapter of 'A Week With the Woodneys,' on account of the negligence of the editor or some of his assistants." (I hope the editor or some of his assistants will see this and feel as mean as they ought to feel. For fear they overlook the remark, won't some kind friend call it to their attention? Tell them that somebody said they were negligent. And if they ask quickly, "Now, who said so?"—for you know that's usually the kind of a retort you get—tell 'em who. We don't care!) "I like Mace Woodney especially. And I often wonder if Mrs. G. C. D. Woodney accepted Mace's offer to each Jennie how to play the piano at $1.50 a lesson. I hope Grace Winders and James O'Brien won't say anything more about my dear Whitefoot, and how roughly I play with him. If I was not always as kind to him as I might have been, I don't like to think of it." (What an odd name for your little brother, but rather attractive, too!) "He was nearly 3 years old, of a light gray color with a white face and white feet and weighed between 9 and 12 pounds." (I remember all about Whitefoot, now. He was the pet cat.) "He had a loving disposition and we were never angry with each other." (He is evidently dead, children, for the only people who never were angry, are in obituaries.) "He lived at the barn and did not snoop about the house, but was very tame." (Snoop?) "Every evening after supper he went out hunting, but was seldom too late for his breakfast. He has not been seen since Christmas, and as there were a number of hunters out that day, I am afraid some sportsman made a target of him. Our school had to suspend awhile on account of bad weather." (Felix sends his sincerest regrets at the disappearance of Whitefoot.)

Here is a letter from Gerald Dever's mother, North Platte, Neb.: "Perhaps I should remind you that Gerald and I used to belong to the Av. S." (Indeed, we have never forgotten it.) "We keep in touch with the Av. S. by reading the dear, good Christian-Evangelist. Gerald is doing well for a boy of sixteen. He is stock clerk in the general passenger office of the Frisco system at Fort Smith. He was not old enough to give bond, so the superintendent bonded himself for Gerald. He is with my brother and his wife. It is a trial to be separated from my son, but our daily letters keep us close together. My son will soon make glad orphan Charlie's heart by sending him the magazine, 'The American Boy,' for one year, at least. I enclose $1 for Charlie's fund, and $1 for Drusie. It is still my desire to give Gerald a finished education, but don't know that I can; am grateful that he is doing so well." Flossie Davis, Des Moines, Ia.: "I received Adnah as a prize for best Av. S. reports, and thank you ever so much. It is certainly a

The Christian-Evangelist, $1.50, "Our Young Folks," 75c, they span the gamut from childhood to old age, both for $2.

Whether contemplating the purchase of a booklet or a library, whether published in America or abroad, write to us for prices and other information.

Every member of The Christian-Evangelist party to San Francisco last August would like to go to Buffalo on "The Christian-Evangelist Special" next October. Rates will be made known soon as received from the Passenger Association.

The Christian-Evangelist rejects thousands of dollars worth of questionable advertisements boldly appearing in the columns of our contemporaries. It is gratifying to note our readers appreciate this.

"You are certainly right in your endeavor to purge the advertising pages."—E. C. Lunger (Christian minister).

"You lead in many things. Allow me to congratulate you on your position in reference to objectionable advertisements. You are in the right. Yours for a paper clean in its every department."—J. N. Taylor.

Our Board of Directors, all of whom are members of churches of Christ, are determined to keep our columns unpolluted by questionable advertisements. In our circulation department is a good place for our friends to express their appreciation of this policy.

prize worth working for." (Now, you all hear that?) "I have just finished making out my last report. We received The Christian-Evangelist yesterday, and, as usual, I read our part of it first. That Mrs. Omer reminds me of some people I know, and they are very disgusting, indeed. In my opinion 'The Bronze Vase' is the most interesting story we have had since the 'Red Box Clew.' But I don't think you ought to tantalize us as you did when you left Rhoda with the wicked man staring at her. I didn't see how I could possibly wait a week to find out if he kidnaped her. But I survived."

Here is a note from W. R. Warren, Pittsburg, Pa., who wrote me that circular letter asking me if I didn't feel like doing something for missionaries, and if I wouldn't do something: "Good! Maybe I have not 'invested enough time in the perusal of the Advance Society letters,' but I am not convinced that you are incapable of advancing in your work for missions; and I know you agree with me, for if not, you would change the name of the Av. S. I thank you for introducing me to its membership, and feel that I am thereby a sort of dishonorable, honorary member. Possibly I will improve in its good company, as I am a genuine Missourian of the third generation. Heartily yours." (I, too, am a genuine article on a foreign soil. How is your climate up there? It's raining here, and it isn't doing it in any half-hearted, accidental way, either. Rains mighty hard in Arkansas; that's why there are so many rocks. You are quite right about our work for missions. Of course we can advance, and must. Lead on the march! I have just sent a new $5 draft to Drusie from the Av. S. I wish, Mr. Warren, that behind every circular letter that comes my way, I could find as warm and Christian a heart as evidently beats behind yours! What's the matter with Brother McLean? Does he know the Av. S. is in existence? He is always telling us about his missionary work, and we are right in with him, Endeavor Society, Sunday-school and all. Why can't he drop us a line of encouragement to show that he knows the Av. S. is on the earth?)

New Honor List: Flossie Davis, Des Moines (7th quarter, with her mite for our missionary and orphan sewed up in it); Ruth A. Sampsel, Warrensburg, Mo. (13th quarter); Earl R. Brown, Medaryville, Ind. (3rd); Dorothy Brown, (4th); Myrtle M. Brown, (2nd); Mrs. W. A. Mason, Nevada, Mo. (10th, with her periodical mites for Drusie and Charlie); Fern Moore, Cable, Wis.; John Denny, Reede, Mich. (1st, 2nd and 3rd); Lillie Fisher, Dunlap, Mo. (4th); Grace Everest, Oklahoma City (5th). It is now nearly dinner time, but not a sign of dinner, and if I don't get it I don't know who will, as my mother is over at the other house overseeing the putting down of the carpets, my father is upstairs studying up for his sermon, and Felix is in the cellar. I will crowd in one more letter; it is from Mrs. V. L. Gallaher, Danville, Ill.: "I think The Christian-Evangelist the best paper published by our brethren. I have taken good laughs over some of the Av. S. letters." (There comes my mother, so I won't have to get dinner, after all—but pray excuse my mind for wandering.) "I am reading 'The Bronze Vase.' Any one who keeps the rules of the Av. S. would be greatly benefited. I pray God's blessings on both Drusie and Charlie. I send $1.25, the contents of the missionary box of my Sunday-school class. I wish it were three or four times as much. I hope Felix will be better contented when he moves into his own home." Yes, I hope he will not snoop round the house. Two weeks from to-day I have letters of exceptional interest to publish; one tells how an Av. S. of nine neighbor children has just been organized, and another tells how one, after trying in vain to get some friends to join, has taken up the work alone. Also, we have a little more money to report for Drusie and Charlie. In one case an envelope contained more than a dollar. I will tell you, also, if you care to know, what Felix thinks of the new place, and about some music sent by an unsigned friend, whose name, however, I believe I can guess.

BARRELS OF AIR BURNED AS FUEL

New, Remarkable Stove—Ohioan's Great Invention—Consumes 395 Barrels of Air to One Gallon of common Kerosene oil making oil-gas—the New Fuel that looks and burns like gas.

Wood, coal and oil all cost money. ONLY FREE FUEL IS AIR! Unlimited supply—no trust in control. Air belongs to rich and poor alike. We can't burn air alone but see here! Our wonderful stove burns air and gas—very little gas—principally air. Takes its fuel almost entirely from the atmosphere.

A miniature gas works—penny fuel for every family—save ½ to ⅓ on cost—save dirt and drudgery—no more coal or wood to carry—ashes unknown—absolute safety.

SEE HOW SIMPLE! TURN A KNOB—TOUCH A MATCH—FIRE IS ON. TURN AGAIN—FIRE IS OFF! THAT'S ALL.

Astonishing but true—time-tested—proven facts—circulars give startling details—overwhelming evidence.

NO SUCH STOVE SOLD IN STORES—UNLIKE ANYTHING YOU'VE SEEN OR HEARD OF.

Because air is the only free fuel and no trust in control inventors have tried for years to find a way by which properties could be drawn from the atmosphere and used as fuel for general household purposes, thus producing the cheapest fuel obtainable.

To a Cincinnati genius heretofore unknown to fame must go the credit of solving this great question. Understand, you cannot burn air absolutely alone, but this new air generator actually takes its fuel almost entirely from the atmosphere, so much so as to take in 395 barrels of air while consuming one gallon of oil.

The time has come at last when our readers are no longer compelled to continually drudge in hot, fiery kitchens with coal and wood fires so ruinous to health and looks for every family who desires can cook, bake and heat with oil and air gas, the wonderful new fuel which frequently saves from ⅓ to ½ on fuel bills. What a blessing this is to women folks who for the first time in their lives can say, no more coal or wood, nor deadly gasoline to burn and kill, nor smoky oil wick and valve stoves.

Thousands a Week.

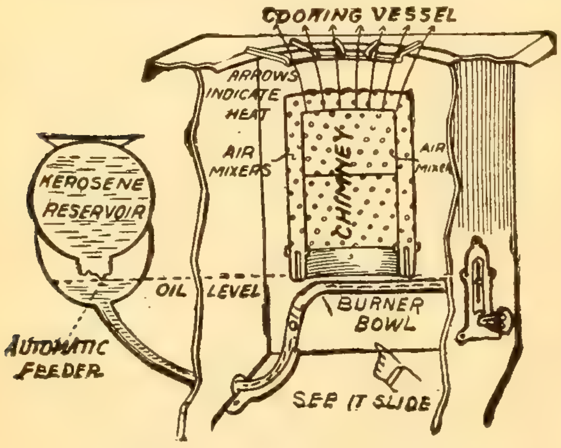
Upon calling at the factory we find that this invention has caused a remarkable excitement all over the U. S.—that the factory is already rushed with thousands of orders, and the Company's representatives and agents are making big profits, as they offer splendid inducements.



SECTIONAL CUT OF GENERATOR.

As will be noticed from the engravings, this oil-gas and air generator is entirely different from any other stove—although its construction is very simple—and durable—last for years—no wick—not even a valve, yet heat is under perfect control—no leaks, nothing to close or clog up.

Your hand upon a knob—a turn to right or left, the oil is automatically fed to a small steel burner bowl or open trough, when it is instantly changed into gas, which is drawn upwards between two red-hot perforated steel chimneys, all the while drawing in about one barrel of air to every large spoonful of oil consumed, making quick, intense heat, which is condensed into a small space for cooking or distributed through oven for baking.

Every drop of fuel consumed—goes into heat—making hottest gas fire—nothing wasted—requires no pipes or flue connections—use it anywhere about the house, office, or store—move it about as often as you like.

This invention has been fully Protected in the U S. Patent Office, and is known as the Harrison Valveless, Wickless, Automatic Oil Gas and Air Generator, the only one yet discovered that consumes the carbon and by-products of the oil.

The extremely small amount of kerosene oil that is needed to produce so large a volume of gas makes it, we believe, the most economical fuel on earth, and the reason for the great success of this generator is based on the well-known fact of the enormous expansiveness of oil gas when mixed with common air.

Kerosene oil from which oil-gas is made is sold by all grocers—buy as consumed—as you would for a lamp—gallon lots or two—let pennies do the work of dollars and save the difference. At last humanity is blessed with a cheap fuel that makes no dirt, ashes, soot—removing forever the greatest nuisance that women folks ever suffered.

What a pleasure to just turn the knob—touch a match—a beautiful gas flame appears—hottest fire—always ready—day or night—on or off at will—self-regulating—no more attention—could anything be more perfect?

It generates the gas only as needed—simple, handsome, durable, easily operated, and another feature is its perfect safety.

Not Dangerous Like Gasoline

Which is liable to explode at any moment, causing fire, loss of life and property. This stove is so absolutely safe it won't explode and if a match were dropped in the oil tank it would go out.

This Oil-Gas and Air Generator does any kind of cooking that a coal or gas range will do—invaluable for kitchen, laundry, summer cottage, washing, ironing, canning, picnics, camping, and by placing an oven over the burner splendid baking or roasting can be done.

Combination Cooking & Heating Stove

Another important feature is the invention of a small Radiator which placed over the burner makes a desirable heating stove for cold weather, so that it is adapted for any time of the year, and many people do away with the ordinary stoves entirely by using this stove with radiator for both heating and cooking.

While at the factory in Cincinnati, the writer was shown thousands of letters from customers who were using this wonderful oil-gas stove, showing that it is not an experiment, but a positive success and giving splendid satisfaction, and as a few extracts may be interesting to the readers, we reproduce them:

L. S Norris, of Vt., writes: "The Harrison Oil-Gas Generators are wonderful savers of fuel—at least 50 to 75 per cent over wood and coal."

Mr H. Howe, of N. Y., writes: "I find the Harrison is the first and only perfect oil-gas stove I have ever seen—so simple anyone can safely use it. It is what I have wanted for years. Certainly a blessing to human kind."

Mr. E. D. Arnold, of Neb., writes: "That he saved $4.25 a month for fuel by using the Harrison Oil-Gas Stove; that his gas range cost him $5.50 per month, and the Harrison only $1.25 per month."

J. A. Shaffer, of Pa., writes: "The Harrison Oil-Gas Stove makes an intense heat from a small quantity of oil—entirely free from smoke or smell—great improvement over any other oil stove. Has a perfect arrangement for combustion—can scarcely be distinguished from a natural gas fire."

Mr. H. B. Thompson, of Ohio, writes: "I congratulate you on such a grand invention to aid the poor in this time of high fuel. The mechanism is so simple—easily operated—no danger. The color of the gas flame is a beautiful dark blue, and so hot seems almost double as powerful as gasoline."

Mrs. J. L. Hamilton, writes: "Am delighted—Oil-Gas Stoves so much nicer and cheaper than others—no wood, coal, ashes, smoke, no pipe, no wick, can not explode."

Hon. Ira Eble, J. P., of Wis., writes: "Well pleased with the Harrison—far ahead of gasoline. No smoke or dirt—no trouble. Is perfectly safe—no danger of explosion like gasoline."

Charles L Bendeke, of N. Y., writes: "It is a pleasure to be the owner of your wonderful Oil-Gas Stove—no coal yard, plumbing, ashes or dust. One match lights the stove and in 10 minutes breakfast is ready. No danger from an explosion—no smoke no dirt—simply turn it off and expense ceases. For cheapness it has no equal."

Agents Are Doing Fine—Making Big Money

WONDERFUL QUICK SELLER.

Head & Frazer, of Tex., write: "Received stoves yesterday and have already disposed of them. Enclose order for $81.00. Rush—we need them now. Sell like hot cakes. Prospects very bright. Sold 50 stoves in our own town."

J. H. Halman, of Tenn., writes: "Already have 70 orders."

C. W. Workman, of Ohio, writes: "Sold 15 to 18 stoves the last week."

J. C. Waterstraw, of N. Y., writes: "Am having wonderful success getting orders. Been at it 4 days and received 33 orders."

B. L. Huested, of Mich., writes: "Been out one day and sold 11 stoves. They sell themselves."

This is certainly a good chance for the readers to make money.

Thousands of other prominent people highly endorse and recommend oil-gas fuel and there certainly seems to be no doubt that it is a wonderful improvement over other stoves.

The writer personally saw the Oil Gas Stoves in operation—in fact, uses one in his own home—is delighted with its working and after a thorough investigation, can say to the readers that this Harrison Oil-Gas Stove made by the Cincinnati firm is the only perfect burner of its kind.

It is made in three sizes, 1, 2 or 3 generators to a stove. They are made of steel throughout, thoroughly tested before shipping—sent out complete—ready for use as soon as received—nicely finished with nickel trimmings, and as there seems to be nothing about it to wear out, they should last for years. They seem to satisfy and delight every user, and the makers fully guarantee them.

HOW TO GET ONE.

All the lady readers who want to enjoy the pleasure of a gas stove—the cheapest, cleanest and safest fuel—save ⅓ to ½ on fuel bills and do their cooking, baking, ironing and canning fruit at small expense should have one of these remarkable stoves.

Space prevents a more detailed description, but these oil-gas stoves will bear out the most exacting demand for durability and satisfactory properties.

If you will write to the only makers, The World Mfg. Co., 7053 World Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio, and ask for their illustrated pamphlet describing this invention, and also letters from hundreds of delighted users, you will receive much valuable information.

The price of these Stoves is remarkably low, only $3.00 up. And it is indeed difficult to imagine where that amount of money could be invested in anything else that would bring such saving in fuel bills, so much good health and satisfaction to our wives.

DON'T FAIL TO WRITE TO-DAY

For full information regarding this splendid invention.

The World Mfg. Co., is composed of prominent business men of Cincinnati, are perfectly responsible and reliable, capital $100.000.00 and will do just as they agree. The stoves are just as represented and fully warranted and sent to any address.

Don't fail to write for Catalogue.

$40 00 Weekly and Expenses.

The firm offers splendid inducements to agents and an energetic man or woman having spare time can get a good position, paying big wage , by writing them at once and mentioning this paper.

A wonderful wave of excitement has swept over the country, for where shown, these Oil-Gas Stoves have caused great excitement. Oil-Gas fuel is so economical and delightful that the sales of these Stoves last month were enormous and the factory is rushed with thousands of orders.

Many of the readers have spare time, or are out of employment, and others are not making a great deal of money, and we advise them to write to the firm and secure an agency for this invention. Exhibit this stove before 8 or 10 people and you will excite their curiosity and should be able to sell 5 or 8 and make $10.00 to $15.00 a day. Why should people live in penury or suffer hardships for the want of plenty of money when an opportunity of this sort is open?

1809 CENTENNIAL PROPAGANDA CHURCHES OF CHRIST 1909

: : : GEO. L. SNIVELY : : :

Looking Toward Pittsburg.

Among other good works to be accomplished to a noteworthy extent by Disciples before our Centennial are the burning of hundreds of church mortgages and the building of even more new church homes. Jacksonville, Ill., where R. F. Thrapp ministers to one of our oldest, largest and most fruitful congregations, will, on April 29, dedicate a beautiful house of worship erected at a cost of $65,000. Imposing church edifices are not so often evidences of ecclesiastical pride as dilapidated ones are proofs of religious indifference. The world believes we would not enshrine our God, whom we sincerely love, in a structure discreditable to our resources. Give the Jacksonville idea wide currency; let us fill pages with reports of new houses dedicated and church debts liquidated before 1909.

Grand Old Missouri.

There are more churches of the New Testament type in Missouri than in any other state of the Union. It is one of the few states having more congregations known simply as churches of Christ or Christian churches than are designated by any one denominational name. It is one of the great strongholds of this Restoration movement with which we are identified, and should be a source of great inspiration to Disciples everywhere.

An earnest effort is being made by the State Board of Missions to secure a permanent endowment fund of $15,000. One generous brother will give one-third of this sum provided the remaining $10,000 are secured by the time of our next state convention. The Christian-Evangelist earnestly hopes that announcement of this sum's being placed at the disposal of our State Board may be made at the Hannibal gathering of our people.

Notwithstanding our comparative strength in this state, there are hundreds of thousands of our citizens who ought to be taught the way of the Lord more perfectly. But how can they be taught without a preacher? We have no more right to ask a preacher than any other Disciple to donate his services to this ministry. They must be sent, and to assure the necessary persistency of effort for the evangelization of this state there should be a permanent fund of such an amount that from its income we might pay the salary of our state corresponding secretary and the expenses of the State Mission Board, so that every dollar contributed to Missouri state missions would go directly to the support of the missionary to the untaught masses of our state. The Christian-Evangelist urges its thousands of Missouri readers to make generous contributions to this permanent fund. Let it be one of the state's contributions to the history of our first century soon to be concluded and fitly celebrated at Pittsburg.

Send to Bro. T. A. Abbott, Kansas City, Mo., a gift or a pledge. It will be gladly acknowledged in these columns. Other states are watching us, and our success will be multiplied in the great pre-centennial money harvest of our brotherhood.

Our Cenntenial League.

Your splendid paper is a great help in our work.—Andrew J. Jones (Minister), Poteau, I. T.

I wish I was able to send The Christian-Evangelist to 500 new readers. God bless the work it is doing.—E. F. Powell, Norfolk, Va.

Please continue The Christian-Evangelist—can not do without it. The Father of Peace be with you.—J. F. Moody (Minister), Malta, O.

I believe The Christian-Evangelist to be of such importance that I can not do without it. Count me your firm friend.—J. E. Chase (Minister), Valparaiso, Neb.

The Christian-Evangelist is a great help to me. The young people borrow it to get the Christian Endeavor topics.—S. J. Ellis, Payson, Ill.

The Christian-Evangelist grows better. The spirit is the kind that must predominate in all our Christian service. Yours for 100,000 by 1909.—Arthur Stout, Marceline, Mo.

I am a preacher and pastor of the church at this place. Am anxious for a spiritual teaching paper. Give it to us and we will help you.—J. Stuart Miller (Minister), Edison, Neb.

I will do what I can to help you get 100,000 subscribers and I hope you will succeed. I think The Christian-Evangelist is worth double the price—Candace Jay, Blakesburg, Iowa.

The Christian-Evangelist is "the paper." Hope to send more names soon. We are preparing for a simultaneous revival here soon.—Jewell Howard (Minister), Amarillo, Texas.

It seems wrong to do without The Christian-Evangelist. Send it along and notify me when my time is up. Long may you live to work for God and humanity.—W. W. Reid, Marion, Ill.

Thanks for your forbearance. I thank God for the spirit of The Christian-Evangelist. May our Lord always keep you as humble and childlike, is my prayer.—Julia Herrall, Ashland, Ill.

Enclosed find $1.50 for my Christian-Evangelist. It is a necessity in my home that I can not well dispense with. It is a great incentive to spiritual growth.—Mrs. A. H. Bedford, Hobart, Okla.

I have been a constant reader of The Christian-Evangelist for twenty-three years. It grows better all the time. I hope you may have all you are asking for.—J. M. Vawter (Minister), Mackinaw, Ill.

I would not like to try to get along without The Christian-Evangelist. Do not stop it until I direct you to. I am grateful for your patience. If thanking you will be worth anything, you have my heartfelt thanks.—Robert G. White.

I thank you for continuing my paper when I failed to renew at date of expiration. The Christian-Evangelist is all right. I trust and pray that Brother Garrison will be spared many years to the brotherhood.—Annie T. Smith, Howard, Kan.

I would not be without The Christian-Evangelist. Its sweet spirit, its loyalty to the "plea," its candor and splendid equipoise and broad magnanimity should be greatly appreciated and admired, and are, by J. Will Walters, (Minister), Niantic, Ill.

Enclosed find $1.50 for my Christian-Evangelist. My little girl calls it The Christian-Evangel, and a Christian evangel it really is. I thank you for your kind words about President Harper. I assure you they were well deserved.—Wm. C. Gunnerson, St. Louis.

Enclosed find $1.50 for The Christian-Evangelist—the best paper in the world. May the Editor and his staff of contributors live many years to cheer, comfort and delight their readers and friends. I should feel lost without it and will expect it to follow me wherever I go.—Lydia Hodler, Bloomington, Ill.

I will do all I can to increase the circulation of The Christian-Evangelist. I would sincerely like to have it in each of the homes of our members, as I fully realize its intrinsic worth and the value of its assistance to me in my work. I will do all in my power to assist in the circulation of your excellent paper, which is improving very much.—C. W. Musgrove (Minister), Mulhall, Okla.

I am glad you are with The Christian-Evangelist. It must be a great pleasure to you to be associated with a paper which honors the brotherhood as The Christian-Evangelist. I wish it were in every home of this congregation. I am going to do my best to get all our members to subscribe for it. I believe The Christian-Evangelist is loyal to the spirit of the Gospel of Christ.—Richard Wallace (Minister), Valdosta, Ga.

I have been a constant reader of The Christian-Evangelist for more than twenty-five years, and believe it to be the best paper published by the brotherhood. I expect to continue to take it as long as I am able to read. The Easy Chair is worth to me more than the price of the paper. May our heavenly Father permit Brother Garrison to occupy the Easy Chair many, many years to come. I will try to increase our list.—W. T. Carrithers, Saunemin, Ill.

The Downfall of Dowie.

John Alexander Dowie is down and out. He has been deposed from his high position as general overseer of Zion, and even excommunicated from the fold. His downfall is the result of a singularly unanimous uprising of his former supporters and lieutenants, headed by W. G. Voliva, whom Dowie made acting general overseer before leaving on a long trip for his health. Voliva and several other high officials of Zion joined in a long telegram to Dowie in Mexico, charging him with hypocrisy, extravagance, misuse of funds, teaching polygamy and other high crimes and misdemeanors. He is warned to "retire quietly," since all the people are on the side of the new administration. Armed with Dowie's power of attorney, Voliva has had transferred to himself, indirectly, all of Dowie's real estate and even the personal property which he left behind. Retiring quietly is not one of the things which the late general overseer of Zion knows how to do, so far as experience up to date would indicate. He never does anything quietly and he never retires at all. Before these lines are in print he will be back in Chicago, and if he surrenders this time without a fight, it will arouse a lively suspicion that he has made off with a few millions for the support of his old age, and that his apparently enforced retirement and excommunication are in reality the result of collusion between him and his successors. It is strangely significant that the stanchest of his former friends, including his wife and son, are among the insurgents. Dowie is, in his way, as remarkable a man as Brigham Young was. He is a very prince among religious fakirs, an original and creative artist. If his excommunication is not a mere trick to which he is a party, we shall see more fireworks before the final occurrence of what the neswpapers will call "the passing of Dowie."

The Church and Labor.

The Presbyterian churches in several cities have been appointing fraternal delegates to attend the meetings of the various organizations of union labor. This step is taken a the invitation of the unions, many of which feel, as most church people do, that there is not enough cordiality and mutual understanding between the church and that part of the laboring world which is commonly and technically called "labor." Rev. Charles Stelzle, of St. Louis, has been a leader in this movement, and at his suggestion the Presbyterian churches of that city recently appointed such a delegate. Some objection was raised on the ground that the church ought not to appear to be taking sides in the contest between capital and labor, but should maintain a neutral position. The answer to this objection is two fold: First, the church ought to take sides if right is on one side and wrong is on the other. The church does not exist for the encouragement of right in the abstract. Its chief hindrance for centuries has been the supposed necessity of maintaining neutral positions. Second, this action is not to be construed as "taking sides" with labor against capital. The saner unionists will deny that their organizations exist for the purpose of waging war upon capital, though, of course, they sometimes feel compelled to do so. But the church's fraternal delegate is only a means of getting information at first hand and coming in sympathetic touch with what is, for good or evil, one of the powerful movements of our time. The church ought also to be willing to send a fraternal delegate to Mr. Parry's Employers' Association, if invited to do so. Such delegates may or may not be able to do much good, but they certainly can not do much harm.

Freight Rebates.

The New York Central Railroad and the American Sugar Refining Company (that is, the sugar trust) have been indicted, respectively, for giving and for receiving secret rebates on freight shipments. The indictments were brought about as the result of investigation following a complaint by Mr. W. R. Hearst. Other prominent eastern roads are also involved and there will probably be more indictments. The disguises which the New York Central and the sugar trust employed to conceal the illicit concessions which were being offered and received, were numerous. The rebates were charged up to trucking and transfer allowances, overcharge returns and payment of claims for alleged damages. All of these subterfuges involve false bookkeeping. One does not like to believe that a road of such standing as the New York Central has descended to such practices as falsifying its own accounts in order to conceal its own illegal acts. Such revelations furnish a strong argument for government ownership and operation of railroads. We can not believe that it is to the advantage of the public for the great concerns to crowd out all of the smaller ones. The survival of the biggest is not always the survival of the best. The big concern has advantage enough over its smaller competitors without the forbidden advantage of cheaper transportation charges. We are still tolerably sure that even the fattest of the trusts must pay 2 cents for every 2-cent postage stamp. The government gives no wholesale rate on postage. Doubtless freight rates would be equally uniform to large and small shippers alike if the government controlled the railroads. This would counterbalance some of the real or fancied disadvantages of government ownership.

The Six-Days' Race.

It used to be the six-days' bicycle race. Now it is the six-days' roller-skate race. Thus does one folly abate only to be succeeded by another. The six-days' race is theoretically a test of endurance. Since endurance is an admirable quality, well worth encouraging and developing, it is shallowly assumed that an endurance test is a good thing. This is not necessarily so, for such a contest may be, and generally is, a test of folly as well. It is folly for a man to injure himself needlessly. It is folly to pay for any victory a higher price than it is worth, and the terrific strain and the accompanying danger of a six-days' race is too high a price to pay for the prize. No one can claim that such a contest is in itself pleasant to the contestants. It is a painful ordeal. The fact that it tests and exhibits one manly quality does not justify it. A contest to see who could hold his hand longest in a flaming torch would also exhibit the manly quality of self-control in suffering, but it would be a poor sort of sport. Still, if the prize were high enough there would doubtless be contestants and there would certainly be eager witnesses. We need some new ideals of sport. One fair and wholesome test of anything that professes to be a legitimate sport is this: Take away the prize, even the intangible prize of the honor of winning, and see whether the game would still attract players. The six-days' race will not stand this test.

The President's Private Car.

A bill was recently introduced in the House of Representatives to appropriate $100,000 for the purchase of a private car for the use of the President of the United States on his official and private journeys. The bill was set aside on a point of order, but may come up again. Such an expenditure will doubtless be objected to by the advocates of Jeffersonian simplicity, but there is much to be said in favor of it. We expect the President to ride on a private car when he travels. Most of us feel that it is not in keeping with the dignity of the nation for its executive head to take his chances of getting an upper berth in an ordinary sleeper, and yet it is financially impossible for the President on his present salary to pay the schedule rate which the railroads charge for private cars. A salary of $50,000 looks like infinity to some of us who have to get along on considerably less, but we have it on the most reliable testimony that that sum is wholly inadequate to meet the expenses of living on the scale which we demand of the President. The present practice is for the President to travel in a private car at the expense of the railroads. This is itself a concession to the notorious inadequacy of the salary, as the ministerial half-rate is an admission of the underpaid condition of the clergy. It would certainly be more dignified for the government either to increase the President's salary to such a point that he can pay his own traveling expenses, or else make provision for meeting them by special appropriation, than to have them paid by the railroads. The government puts a yacht at the disposal of the President for his personal use and provides for its maintenance. Why not a car?

IV. THE PROTESTANT ERA.

1. From Ecclesiastical Despotism to Religious Liberty.

As the darkest hour is said to be just before day, so it proved in this case. In the darkest hour of an apostate church there dawned the morning of a brighter day. There had been intimations of the approaching day for a long time. Here and there a morning star shone out in the darkness and heralded the coming dawn. It is a part of the divine philosophy of things that falsehood and error, reaching a climax of badness, hasten their own downfall. There is an inherent weakness and source of decay in all false and corrupt systems. The moral sentiment of the best men of the world had been rising in revolt against the abuses of the Roman Catholic hierarchy and its corrupt teaching. The spirit of protest was in the air. It needed only a strong personality, imbued with the spirit of reform, to focalize the best religious sentiment of the times, rally about it the elements of reform which had long been in preparation, to introduce the new era. Then came Luther, who proved to be the virile and inspiring personality needed to concentrate the forces of reform and hurl them with tremendous energy against the abuses and errors, both in doctrine and life, of the corrupt church. His coming was no accident. The reform of which he was the leader was inevitable. It was not born out of due time. Like all God's great movements it came "in the fulness of time"—came because it had to come if God's purposes were to be fulfilled in the world.

Protestantism, under Luther's titanic blows, was the dawn of religious liberty after the long night of ecclesiastical despotism. While the iron-hearted reformer refuted many errors in doctrine and denounced with great boldness the moral corruptions which had disgraced the church, his most important contribution to religious reformation was his vigorous assertion of the rights of conscience and the liberty of each believer to think for himself and to act in harmony with his own convictions of duty, holding himself directly accountable to God, and not to priest, bishop, or pope. True, Luther was not always consistent with this principle of individual liberty in allowing to others the same right which he claimed for himself, but when he had suceeded in breaking off the shackles of Rome and in sowing the seeds of religious liberty in the minds and hearts of the people, no inconsistent act of his could prevent the exercise of the sovereign right of freedom of thought and action of an emancipated people. As often happens, this newly-found liberty was abused. Individualism ran to an extreme. On the sacred altar of liberty unity was sacrificed. Better, a thousand times, religious liberty, with its resulting divisions, than the unity of despotism in which human thought was bound in fetters, and in which corruption prevailed.

But one can but regret that Luther saw no way by which liberty and unity could both be conserved. It is not given to any one man, however, be he ever so great, to compass with his finite mind the whole truth as it is revealed in Jesus Christ. "We know in part, and we prophesy in part." Luther never escaped the prevalent idea of the time concerning the union of church and state. He did not hesitate to use force in carrying forward his reformation. He practiced the shrewdest diplomacy in winning the adhesion of kings and potentates to his cause. He did not object to the Romish creed on the principle that it was a usurpation of authority in binding men where God had left them free, but only on the ground that it contained errors which he believed should be eliminated. He felt it, therefore, perfectly consistent with his reformation to assist in fomulating a new creed which in its turn should become a bond of union and a test of fellowship. If only he had been tall enough to see clear over the heads of popes and councils and all the bloody pages of ecclesiastical history, back to the apostolic age, and to urge the kind of union that prevailed in that period, how many confusing chapters of denominational strifes and divisions might have been avoided! But perhaps the world was not ready at that time to return to New Testament Christianity. Other reformers and reformations must come after Luther to prepare even the lovers of Christ to return to the simplicity and unity of the early church. But let us not fail to give Luther credit for the great and heroic work which has left its impress upon all subsequent ages. His aim, let us not doubt, was to build the church in conformity with the Scriptures, to which he constantly made his appeal. It is easy for us, living in the light of a brighter and better day, to see imperfections in the work of the great reformers whom God has used as instruments for the accomplishment of needed reformations in their day. But we do well to remember that we are not only the "heirs of all the ages," but we are the heirs, also, of the religious light and liberty which have come through the self-sacrificing labors and toils of these mighty men of God.

Once the banner of religious liberty was lifted to the breeze and men felt that they could express their convictions without fear of incarceration in prison, or death, all kinds of men began to give expression to all kinds of opinions concerning subjects religious and ecclesiastical, and, strange to say, to urge these opinions and speculations with all the dogmatism and air of infallibility that had marked the utterances of the popes themselves! The student of ecclesiastical history will recall the various types of Anabaptists and anti-pedobaptists which promulgated their peculiar doctrines, and made converts, and the differences which arose bewteen Luther and many of his coadjutors, and a host of theological champions who arose in that time to advocate their respective theories which they regarded as of primary importance. All this, and much else that followed in later years was the inevitable result of placing the emphasis on the intellectual side of Christianity, and the failing to make the proper distinction between faith and theology. It was all a vain effort to make men think alike on speculative questions which had nothing to do with the life or character of men. With all of Luther's intellectual power, he never saw this distinction, so vital to the unity and welfare of the church. Nor did he ever see clearly that the state had one realm and the church another, and that these were to be kept distinct and separate; and that force had no legitimate place in the religion of him who was "meek and lowly in heart," and whose life and doctrine were directly opposed to any such method of extending his kingdom.

But, again, we must remind ourselves that it was not given to Luther, nor to the men of his time, to bring the church all the way from its Babylonish captivity to its ancient and apostolic heritage of freedom and unity. Enough for him and his coadjutors that, with clear vision and heroic courage, they were able to unchain the Bible, reassert the principle of Christian liberty, and inaugurate a movement which others, in after years, should take up and carry forward to a goal that is not even yet realized.

Brother Dungan on Federation.

In another column we print a statement from Dr. D. R. Dungan, of the Bible department of Drake University. We asked Professor Dungan to express himself on this subject, because we think it is due to the brethren to know how their leaders feel about a question that has provoked so much discussion. We regret that Brother Dungan did not address himself to the only questions there are before the brotherhood in relation to federation, namely: Ought we not to co-operate with our brethren of the evangelical Protestant churches, in those things in which we agree, if the way be open to do so with perfect freedom to be true to our own plea and mission? And, does the basis of federation submitted for our consideration by the New York brethren, offer such opportunity for co-operation? In vain have we tried to hold the brethren to these questions. It is wholly unprofitable to be opposing a kind of federation that no one, certainly no one among us, proposes. Unfortunately Brother Dungan has written with a presupposition in his mind as to what the federation proposed is, which has biased his conclusions, just exactly as Professor Foster and other recent writers have written their conclusions about Christianity with the presupposition that the supernatural must be eliminated.

Brother Dungan thinks our churches can not enter into federation with other churches because we have no "synods" or "conferences" to control us. Is it the special prerogative of churches having synods and conferences to express their sentiments on Christian union? If so that was a great omission of the Campbells in launching their movement for Christian union! The fact is, Congregationalists, Free Baptists, Baptists, and other bodies of congregational autonomy, are just as zealous for the kind of co-operation proposed as any other of the religious bodies. They, like the Disciples of Christ, have general gatherings by which they voice the sentiment of their respective bodies, but such expression binds no church or individual. Brother Dungan is quite right in saying that no church or member can be made to federate that does not want to, and that none can be hindered from doing so who want to federate. This fact, however, should be remembered: If any representative assembly of the Disciples of Christ should disapprove the plan of co-operation submitted by the New York conference, it would deprive us of any representation in the council of the Protestant churches of America convened to promote Christian union. If the brethren want to put themselves in that attitude toward the present widespread movement for the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for unity, they can do so, but in doing it, they would be doing what they could to defeat the very object for which we came into existence.

In saying that if the "field-parceling" idea be left out there would be nothing left of federation but "social duck-nodding," Brother Dungan of course loses sight of the vast influence of the leaders of the various religious bodies meeting to pray and consider how we may fulfill our Lord's prayer for unity; and he forgets the darkness of paganism, the neglected and unevangelized masses in our great cities, the problem of the poor, the abominations which curse our civilization, all of which problems await the action of the united churches of America. May the Lord give his divided church a wider vision of the world's need that it may realize the necessity for united action!

Very truly does Brother Dungan say, "The more freely we can associate with the religious world, the better for them and us." This is specially true, however, if we associate with them in Christian work, ministering to the world's needs, rather than in mere "social duck-nodding." Brother Dungan wants to be left "free to use any opportunity granted to teach the whole counsel of God." But is he peculiar in that? Does he not think that those of us who feel it our duty as well as our privilege to join hands with other Christians to do things that can not be done by separate action, believe in "teaching the whole counsel of God," and being true to our convictions of truth? Would there not be a hundred opportunities for impressing our religious convictions on others in brotherly co-operation to where there is one in hostile isolation?

We know Brother Dungan well enough to know that when he has a chance to do good by federation, and remain free while doing it, he will federate. But he will not otherwise. No more will we. So there we are, right together!

IT IS the salvation of very many of us that faith may be mighty, though but as a grain of mustard seed.

"Raised With Christ!"

We have come again to the blessed Easter-tide—the season that stands forever associated with the resurrection of Christ. We stand again in the presence of the open sepulchre and hear the angel saying, "He is not here; He is risen." We catch a vision once more of hurrying disciples, running hither and thither, with the strange, glad message, "He is risen!" Shining angels hover about the scene and become visible to eyes pure enough to see them. Jesus, himself, living and radiant, appears to his disciples, again and again, here and there, singly and in groups, calming their fears, banishing their doubts, and quickening their faith, until one day, on the slope of the Mount of Olives, he was caught up from them as he ascended to his Father, and to our Father, to complete the work of redemption which had brought him to the earth.

It is a glorious scene. It is a magnificent and fundamental fact of our Christian faith. But if it stood alone it would be shorn very largely of its significance and value. It does not stand alone. He rose that we might rise with him in newness of life. "If then ye were raised together with Christ, seek the things that are above, where Christ is, seated on the right hand of God. Set your minds on the things that are above, not on the things that are upon the earth." This is Paul's interpretation of the meaning of Christ's resurrection. In vain did Christ rise from the dead, so far as we are concerned, if we have not been raised with him into that life which is spiritual and therefore eternal. The proof of our having been raised with Christ is in the fact that we are seeking those things that are above, that is, spiritual and enduring things. What are some of these "things that are above"?

To hunger and thirst after righteousness; to seek the kingdom of God—its complete reign within us and over us until God's will shall be done in us as it is done in heaven; to possess the mind and Spirit of Christ; to be willing to suffer with Christ for his truth's sake; to prefer the approval of God to the praise of men; to look not upon our own things only, but also on the things of others; to be willing to be "of no reputation" if by this humiliation we may advance God's kingdom in the world—these are some of the evidences that we have been raised with Christ and have become partakers of the divine nature.

The message from the risen Christ comes with great clearness just now to those of us who are pleading for a united church on the basis mentioned by Paul, when he said, "Other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ." We have been charged, in God's providence, with carrying this gospel of unity and of brotherly love to all the church and to all the world. For this we believe God has raised us up. We are to bear this testimony of Christ's desire and prayer for the unity of believers to the whole world—to the religious and to the irreligious. We have organized in this United States a co-operative movement among the churches of this Reformation to bear this testimony, faithfully and fraternally, to all parts of this great country. This co-operative movement, known as the American Christian Missionary Society, makes its call once a year on all the churches the first Lord's day in May, to present an offering for this work.

If, indeed, we be risen with Christ; if we believe we have a divine message for this age and generation, what better evidence can we give to the world of our faith, and of our loyalty to this great plea, than by responding to this appeal of an organization that has proved faithful to every trust committed to it for funds with which to carry out this mission in our own land, which must be the base of supplies for all our wider movements? We appeal to all the churches, and to all the brethren whithersoever THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST circulates, to lay this duty upon their hearts and consciences, and to make such response as shall enable our home board to greatly widen its operations and to cultivate many neglected fields now calling for laborers. A risen Christ means an aggressive campaign for the extension of his reign among men.

Notes and Comments.

In an address at a banquet in New York City recently, District Attorney Jerome said:

> "Public opinion goes hither and thither, like a ship, but in the long course of time, it is sweet and sane and sound, and will make its port. But it lies on you to see to it that its tacks are no longer than they ought to be."

So we believe. Public opinion among us has always gotten into port, sooner or later, on the questions which have disturbed us; but sometimes the "tack" for some of us has been longer than it needed to have been, and we have remained longer "at sea" than was good for us. Leaders who can help public opinion to "make its port" in a "sweet and sane and sound" condition with the least possible loss of time are gifts from God.

> Beyond a doubt, Satan is the father of that federation scheme, and it seems among the Amercian Christian Missionary Convention advocates, J. H. Garrison is his chief lieutenant.—The Christian Leader and The Way.

"Woe unto you when all men speak well of you."—Jesus.

> We, too, believe that the grand men mentioned by Brother Moore would have rejoiced in an opportunity to appear upon the platform of the New York Conference to present the principles of our plea, and they would have been willing to travel many miles to avail themselves of such a privilege; but no such privilege seems to have been allowed. —Christian Weekly.

That is pretty hard on F. D. Power, H. L. Willett and J. H. Garrison, all of whom addressed the conference. If they failed to "present the principles of our plea" the conference was not to blame for that. But this is in perfect harmony with the misinformation that prevails among the anti-federationists.

Editor's Easy Chair.

"Blessed are ye when men shall reproach you and persecute you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake: rejoice and be exceeding glad; for great is your reward in heaven; for so persecuted they the prophets that were before you." These words of the Master had occurred in the evening lesson. There was a pause after the reading, and one remarked, "It is easy enough to see that it is one's duty to suffer reproach and calumny for Christ's sake, but whence its blessedness?" The reader replied, "The reason is given: 'for great is your reward in heaven.' But it might be well to ask why the reward in heaven for those who encounter and endure reproaches for Christ's sake? There is really the root of the matter. There is always spiritual enlargement to one who is true to the light which God had given him, just as there is spiritual shrinkage and barrenness to the man who refuses to walk in the light which he has received. No one can suffer reproach, realizing that it is because he has said or done what Christ would have him say or do, without feeling a new sense of Christ's nearness and of his greatness." "But the reward is to come in heaven," said another listener. "But one does not have to wait until some future heaven for the reward, for heaven, like eternal life, begins here on earth. The very experience of entering into the fellowship of Christ's suffering prepares the soul for its larger reward and brings it. It is the blessedness of spiritual enlargement which comes from knowing Christ by suffering reproaches for his name's sake."

"Why were the prophets persecuted?" It was a childish voice that asked the question. "It was given to them to see truth more as God sees it than most men of their times. God laid it on their hearts as a 'burden,' to declare the truth which they saw. It was not popular with people who had attained a less spiritual vision of religion. It was exceedingly unpopular with those who were guilty of the very sins which they were moved to denounce—hence these prophets were made to suffer for their loyalty to God. There were false prophets also who prophesied smooth things to please the people, but these were not persecuted. But in time the false prophets were known to be false, and the descendants of those who had persecuted God's true prophets builded their sepulchers. Sooner or later things come to their proper level. It was not the honor, however, that came to the prophets after they were dead that constituted their true reward, but the consciousness, while living, that they were speaking God's truth and doing his will. It was this knowledge which Jesus had that what he did was well pleasing to the Father, that caused him to bear up under the bitter opposition that came upon him. It is no wonder that he uttered a beatitude for those who suffer reproach for his sake. Jesus was willing to make himself 'of no reputation' in order to save men, because he could not speak the truth and be honored by the religious leaders of his time. He expects his followers to imitate his example in this respect."

The "Easy Chair" has been thinking over the evils of isolation. As our readers know, we like occasionally to get away from the busy haunts of men, and draw a little closer to the heart of Nature, and this we believe is helpful. But this is far different from living away from contact with men, and refusing to associate with our fellows. The man who does this soon develops into a "crank." Mountain ranges used to separate people, and those who lived on its opposite sides were enemies. We have often wondered what would have been the fate of this Reformation if it had not been for the unifying influences of our conventions, where the members from different sections of the country meet together, exchange views, sing and pray together and have their hearts drawn out toward the same great aims and objects. Now, one great objection to denominationalism is that it erects barriers, more or less difficult to pass over, between the children of a common father and believers in a common Lord. This has prevented their free intermingling and their mutual assimilation. In later years, these barriers have been more or less disregarded and there has been a freer intermingling of people of different names and creeds. The result is manifest in the removal of a vast amount of prejudice and misunderstanding, and the bringing of Christians much closer together in thought and feeling. Any movement, therefore, that looks to a freer intermingling and closer co-operation of Christians inevitably tends to a destruction of sectarian bitterness and the promotion of that unity for which we plead. It would help mightily to unite all our own churches in closer bonds of unity, if they would join hands in the May offering.

We have long been convinced that isolation is to-day the chief enemy of Christian union. Whatever breaks down isolation builds up Christian union. It is simply impossible for us to meet and mingle with other followers of Christ, and feel the touch of kindred spirits, and realize that they love and serve the same Lord that we do, and are seeking to do his will just as we are seeking to do it, and are as true to their convictions of duty as we are true to ours, and to learn from such contact what we had not realized before, that the things in which we agree are of infinitely more value in the sight of God than the things in which we differ, without recognizing our common kinship and rejoicing in this wider fellowship. Many of us can remember when, in our boyhood, the little neck of the woods in which we lived seemed to be the favored spot of all the world, and we wondered how people lived contentedly elsewhere, but when we became older and traveled about the world a little, we found there were many other regions of the country even more highly favored than ours, and that the sun, and the moon, and stars shone as brightly, and the blue heavens bent as tenderly over other lands as over our own. Our hearts, perhaps, will never cease to beat a little more warmly for that fair spot of childhood than for any other, but it is no longer a mystery to us that very intelligent people may live contentedly elsewhere. Travel and mingling with other peoples, destroyed our provincialism.

But there is one kind of people none of us ever like. They are the over-traveled globe-trotters, who have crossed the ocean so often that they hardly know on which side of it they belong. They deem it a weakness to claim any special love for one flag or country over another. We like better a man who, if he be an American in name, is one in spirit, and believes the American flag to be the most glorious banner that ever floated in the heavens! Nor do we like any better the man who travels about from one church to another so much that he comes to feel and to say that "one church is as good as another." When a man reaches that mental attitude he is not good for much in any church, and if the conversion of the world depended on this class of people it would never be converted. But surely one can love his own family best, and have a deep interest in the welfare of all the families of the neighborhood; and he may love his own country best, and yet not be indifferent to the progress of all other nations. So one ought to love, and will love best, if he be honest, the religious body with which he is identified and the position which it occupies, and yet, at the same time, cultivate unity and fraternity with all others of "like precious faith," and of the same living and abiding hope. This is our Master's will. So let us do.

The federation which is now to the front and which is most pressing in its claims, is the hearty co-operation of all the churches of this reformation in the May offering for home missions. Is there any dissenting vote to this kind of federation? Not among the readers of The Christian-Evangelist, we imagine. Theoretically we are all committed to that principle. Many, however, hold it as a theory merely, and fail to unite with their sister churches in this great work of evangelizing America. But let them make an exception, this year, and put their principle of co-operation into effect. What does our union amount to if we do not co-operate in carrying on the work of the Lord? Effective work in evangelization is the end toward which Christian union looks, according to the prayer of Jesus. The best illustration we can give to the religious world of the benefits of union is for our churches to co-operate with one accord in the evangelization of America and of the world. We have reason to expect that all who believe in the wider co-operation of Christian people, will join in this family co-operation in the May offering for home missions.

What Is the Soul?

By Clerin Zumwalt

The attempts of specialists to define the nature of the soul remind us of the old story of the blind men and the elephant. Their view was limited to the part their fingers touched and therefore the one who felt the tail thought the beast "very like a rope," while the one who touched the leg declared that he was like a tree, and the man who grasped the ear came to the conclusion that there was a decided resemblance between the elephant and a fan.

A similar dispute is being waged to-day among the students and workers who have made a speciality of some one line of knowledge, and seek by means of this to define the human soul. The physicist pleads for his "cell-soul," a soul of matter and force which perishes with the disorganization of the body at death. The orthodox Christian minister pleads for a soul created in heaven and coming, pure and spotless, from the hand of God to the body of the newborn babe. The specialist, whether he be physicist, psychologist, or bishop, is, because of his narrow view of life, totally unfit to give a true definition of the soul. We of the multitude, who have no pet theory of our own to defend, are perhaps best fitted to act as impartial judges, or rather as men of the jury.

To the man of the multitude contradictory beliefs are but the results of differing view points. It is by studying the contradictions of authority that we hope to arrive at a more complete truth. Each is an artist, painting what he can see of the great angel of truth and it is only by piecing together these fragmentary visions that we may see the great whole.

Some of the greatest of physical authorities tell us that the soul is physical—that it develops, or evolves, in the embryo babe and in the growing child; that just as father and mother contribute the germs of your physical body so they also contribute the germs of your soul. Your soul is not a spirit from the hand of God, but is a growth, from the impregnated cell to the complex character of your manhood. You inherit your love of music and art, your taste for literature, and your religious trend, as truly as you do the color of your hair or the shape of your mouth or nose.

Psysically no man is a new or special creation. My friend John Smith is a compound of his father, his mother, and their ancestors. They were white and therefore he is white. Physically he can possess nothing which his ancestors have not given to him. His father has bequeathed to him red hair and he must go through life with red hair in spite of his wishes to the contrary. He can not change the shape of his ears, the size of his teeth, or even the lines upon his thumb.

Spiritual characteristics are as surely inherited as physical. John Smith has inherited with his red hair a fiery temper, with his grandfather's square chin an iron will, and with his mother's smiling eyes a kindly nature, and these characteristics are so well marked that there is no doubt in our minds that they are all inherited. This being true, that small germ cell which was your father's contribution to your physical being, possessed not alone the power of determining the color of your hair or eyes, but the far greater power of determining mental and moral characteristics. The soul of the newborn babe is not sent down from the throne of God, but has been touched and molded by the hands of a thousand thousand ancestors, who have lived and struggled in the long forgotten past, and bequeathed to this new being the crown of their victories and the curse of their defeats. It seems to us, we of the multitude, that the student of the physical and the student of the spiritual have each caught but a partial vision of the great eternal truth. By combining the two we get a fuller view of the soul of man, and find that God the creator dwells with us and in us, and the function of father and mother in the creation of the child rises from the physical plane to the realms of the eternal world. To man is given the power to create an immortal soul, and father and mother walk hand in hand with God. It is fitting that the halo of love should shine around the mated pair, and that the new home should glow with light from the glory-world, for Eden's morn is dawning again to sweet new souls—souls that are born of man and also born of God.

Habit is the physical basis of character. We inherit a tendency to certain habits, others are caused directly by our environment, and still others are acquired by an effort of will. The nature of my habits determines the nature of my character. When I have once formed good habits they are hard to break and my character is comparatively safe. My nerve discharge has formed for itself physical channels in my body. Were all the substance of my body as absolutely elastic as ether is supposed to be I could form no habits for the nerve discharges would have to cut each time for themselves new channels and no form of action would tend to repeat itself. Each time I walked I should have to learn to walk anew, and each time I talked I should have to learn to talk anew. As it is I do not talk; my physical organs talk. My mind does nothing but furnish the thoughts and my trained servants, the vocal organs, do the talking.

Habit is due to physical form. It resides in physical form. But mental habits are as real as habits in the body. The habit of thinking slowly, of getting angry, of loving deeply, may be formed as truly as the habit of snapping the fingers or standing erect. If the soul forms habits it would seem to be physical. A bundle of good habits forms a good character, a bundle of bad habits, a bad character. If goodness and badness is due to habit and habit is due to physical conditions in the human body, then goodness and badness are a matter of physical form. Professor James says: "One has only to consider how quickly consciousness may be (so far as we know) abolished by a blow on the head, by a rapid loss of blood, by an epileptic discharge, by a full dose of alcohol, opium, ether, or nitrous oxide, * * * to see how at the mercy of bodily happenings our spirit is. A little stoppage of the gall duct, a swallow of cathartic medicine, a cup of strong coffee at the proper moment, will entirely overturn for a time a man's views of life, our moods and resolutions are more determined by the condition of our circulation than by our logical grounds. * * * Taking all such facts together, the simple and radical conception dawns upon the mind that mental action may be uniformly and absolutely a function of brain-action, varying as the latter varies, and being to brain-action as effect to cause."

Thus, in the eyes of many of the best physicists, the soul is forever bound to the physical, and because this is so many would tell us that the soul must die with the body and that the artist's inspiring dream and the mother's sacrificial love must perish in the dust and darkness of the tomb; that the victories of the soul are to be lost forever more, and the song of man to become an endless hymn to death. The bishop hurls his anathemas at the physicist and declares his truth to be a lie, and as we listen to the endless discussion we are reminded again of the old story of the blind men and the elephant. It seems to us, we of the multitude, that both bishop and physicist have seen the truth, but that each has seen it only in part. Follow the physical to its limits and you are lost in the eternal, the spiritual. The physicist of to-day, with his radium and his electrons, has found that in an ultimate analysis even solid metals dissolve into mystery. Haeckel tells us that even the simplest cell of the body seems to possess some of the powers of soul, and from this he draws the conclusion that there can be no spirit, while to us the same fact proves that there can be no physical without the supervision of spirit. How, without the supervision of soul, can simple cells develop into the complete man? How, unless the soul is in and through all, can the love of music cross the mighty chasm between father and son? How can the soul wrench the body with grief, convulse it with laughter and mark its brow with care? Every expression of the face is proof of the unity of body and soul. At death all that gave the body its form is gone. The soul has fled, not from some mysterious seat in the brain, but from feet and fingers; from eys, and lips, and brow. The man is gone and nothing is left but his house of clay, which shall soon be powdered and molded again into the form of grass and tree and flower, while the man himself carries the experience of this life into a world of greater opportunity. If the molecule is all there is of life and love, then molecules are but fleeting forms of which life and soul are the substance. We of the multitude still feel the presence of the spirit world and after the physicist has found what matter is, and psychic research has opened the last forbidden door, they will wonder why it was that it took them so long to learn what we have known these many years, and why they did not long ago realize that spirit and substance are one and that matter is but a fleeting phase of boundless and eternal life.

The Empty Tomb

By W. A. Bellamy

I have often thought the most wonderful promise in the Bible is contained in these words: "We shall be like him." Like him, the peerless one, the matchless one, the one altogether lovely, the Counselor, the Prince of peace, the Savior, the Redeemer; like him, he who was indeed the Son of God, the only perfect one who ever lived among men, the highest ideal, the only perfect model even given among men. No wonder then it is said that when we awake in his likeness, we shall be satisfied. Yet, Christian friends, glorious and precious and full of meaning as this promise is, it depends upon the truth of these words, "He is risen."

Risen or not risen, that is the question of the hour. Upon it Christianity stands or falls. Everything hinges upon the resurrection of Christ. If Christ be not risen, then is his character a wreck, his church without foundation, his kingdom a failure. If Christ be not risen, our faith is groundless, our hope a fancy, our preaching vain, our message a mockery. If Christ be not risen the 400,000,000 Christians on the globe to-day have been propagating a monstrous lie and following a mere delusion, a baseless fiction, a cruel deception. If Christ be not risen we are yet in our sins, we have been mocked in our hope, the grave has still its own, death has lost nothing of its sting and terror, Christ becomes the greatest fabrication of the world's invention and we are of all men most miserable. If Christ be not risen we have a base impostor to deal with, a meaningless Bible to explain away and a purposeless ministry that might as well end right now.

If Christ be risen, what then?

Then Christianity is true; Christ is what he claimed to be, redemption on Calvary is a glorious reality and the life beyond the grave is a glorious fact. If Christ be risen, Christ's miracles, Christ's character, Christ's intellect, Christ's divinity are made clear and explainable. He is then indeed the divine Son of God, for upon the divinity of Christ the whole superstructure of our religion is built. But the divinity of Christ is proven by the one stupendous fact of his resurrection.

If Christ be risen, then this is the gladdest time in all the year. As we tread upon earth's green carpet, watch the swelling buds and hear the first songs, we are reminded of the Easter message which is a message of victory over death. This glorious springtime, speaking of life, full, free, rich, throbbing, pulsating and smiling at every genial gleam from the golden sun, brings to mind the precious truth that the soul will have an awakening equally glorious and beautiful. All Nature emerging from the dreary sepulcher of winter, points to the empty tomb of Christ. God, through Nature, is enforcing the message of the angel on that glad first Easter morn when he said, "He is not here; he is risen."

If Christ be risen, it becomes a fact of overwhelming importance and should enlist our most thoughtful attention, for around this truth clusters all that is most dear to the human heart—heaven, everlasting life, the soul's immortality, the future existence of our loved ones.

The empty tomb of Christ must be accounted for. We are told he showed himself alive by many infallible proofs. We want to investigate these proofs. We want our faith strengthened. We want our belief in the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead confirmed and established and vitalized. If he be risen, we will rise. This hope will purify and inspire and lead us to seek those things which are above. If there be no resurrection, the strongest incentive to righteous living is taken away.

An honest explanation of the empty tomb brings us to the conclusion he had risen. All the power of the Roman empire had been called forth to keep that tomb from becoming empty. It was sealed with Cesar's seal and protected by a Roman guard.

How apparent is the lie of the chief priests that the disciples came and stole the body while they slept! These disciples gave their lives on the ground of their faith in Christ's resurrection. No man will give his life for what he knows to be a falsehood. Paul had good reason for saying, "If in this life only we have hope, we are of all men most miserable," for Paul in this life suffered persecution on account of his faith. He was beaten and stoned and shipwrecked, cast into prison, hated by his own countrymen, endured hardships beyond description. If Christ did not arise, why uphold this faith at so great a cost? They had nothing to gain by lying. But Paul lived during the very time of this marvelous event and could substantiate his faith by the testimony of eyewitnesses. He knew in whom he believed. If this life be all, let us eat, drink and be merry. If the dead rise not, what avail all this persecution, suffering and hardship? It is profitless and foolish. Only the risen, living Christ can account for all this courageous martyrdom of the early disciples.

Then again, to account for the empty tomb in any other way than that Christ arose, brings before the skeptics insuperable difficulties. They must give an adequate cause for the existence of the Christian church, with its 400,000,000 believers. They must explain the Christian Sabbath which has existed during all these centuries from the time of that first Easter morning. They must explain the writings of the New Testament with its messages of love and hope and good cheer.

David Gregg puts it thus: "Skeptics, this is our challenge: Here is the empty tomb. How came it to be empty? Produce your theory that will account for the sufferings of the disciples and the wonderful progress of Christianity."

Given a risen, exalted Christ, and from inspired pens will flow a beautiful, thrilling life of Christ; from his empty tomb will be evolved the glorious doctrine of justification and eternal life and glorified souls and resurrected bodies and mansions of light. You can no more get a New Testament out of a dead Christ than you can get these brilliant floral beauties out of a dead and exhausted sun. Men with only a crucified Christ would writhe in agony of despair. There might be a hell in it, but no heaven, no infinite love of God, no immortality of life brought to light. It would be a New Testament of lamentations, of imprecations and denunciations.

Then, again, we can explain Christ's empty tomb as did Mary, "He is indeed risen," because it is not beyond God's power to raise the dead. Why should it be thought a thing incredible that God should raise the dead? God in nature is doing just as marvelous and incomprehensible things as raising the body and giving it a transfigured glory. With the infinite God back of the resurrection its possibility ought never to be questioned by man.

DECAYED STARCH
A Food Problem.

An Asheville man tells how right food did that which medicines had failed to accomplish:

"For more than 15 years," he says, "I was afflicted with stomach trouble and intestinal indigestion, gas forming in stomach and bowels and giving me great distress. These conditions were undoubtedly due to the starchy food I ate, white bread, potatoes, etc., and didn't digest. I grew worse with time, till, 2 years ago, I had an attack which the doctors diagnosed as appendicitis. When the surgeon operated on me, however, it was found that my trouble was ulcer of the pancreas, instead of appendicitis.

"Since that time I have had several such attacks, suffering death, almost. The last attack was about 3 months ago, and I endured untold agonies.

"The doctor then said that I would have to eat less starchy stuff, so I began the use of Grape-Nuts food for I knew it to be pre-digested, and have continued same with most gratifving results. It has built me up wonderfully. I gained 10 pounds in the first 8 weeks that I used Grape-Nuts, my general health is better than ever before, my brain is clearer and my nerves stronger.

"For breakfast and dinner, each, I take 4 teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts with cream, a small slice of dry toast, an egg soft boiled and a cup of Postum; and I make the evening meal on Grape-Nuts and cream alone—this gives me a good night's rest and I am well again." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

THE EVANGELIZATION OF THE WORLD IN THIS GENERATION.

There were just three laughs until the convention was half over.

Can you imagine that in a gathering of over three thousand students that came together from seven hundred colleges and institutes of higher learning? College flags waved and college yells were heard all the way from Montana and California and far away Canada, as train after train picked up a car here, or crowded in another delegation there on the road to Nashville, Tenn. But when the International Student Volunteer Convention was in session there was a seriousness and a quietude that I had never seen in any other large convention and I have had a wide experience. What is the explanation? I can not tell, unless it be that the keynote was struck at the very start. "The possibilities of this convention are limitless," said John R. Mott, austere of face, incisive in manner, and a master of men, as he stepped forward from the platform crowd of one hundred and forty-four missionaries from twenty-six foreign countries, and the one hundred and forty-nine official representatives of ninety-five mission boards and societies, and then he added: "Men and women in forty nations are praying every hour for it. One thing alone can defeat the realization of all for which they pray—sin!" Right in tune with Mr. Mott's really fine plea for the devoted heart and the clean life came Robert E. Speer's analysis of the opportunity of the convention, urging a deliberate cutting loose from all hindrances to yield to the leadership of Christ. Mr. Speer, manly in his inches and breadth of shoulders, is one of the finest speakers in the ranks of the Christian forces to-day. He does not often tell stories, but on this occasion he thrilled his auditors with one that made it hard for any of them to sing again, "Onward, Christian Soldiers!" without a pulling at the heart strings to answer the call made by the convention of missionary secretaries whose meeting occurred just prior to that of the students, for one thousand missionaries annually until twenty-five thousand more have gone into the field. And this would be but one missionary to each twenty-five thousand of the heathen world.

It was in the days of the war. The principal of the school had volunteered and was anxious for some of his pupils to go with him to the front. A little girls learned of this, and pleaded with her brother not to go.

"Harry, are you going to enlist? she asked.

"Yes."

"But you can't. You are only sixteen, and papa will not let you."

In the village church the citizens were assembled. The principal of the school was there, and he called the roll of the pupils. Down the list he went, and boy after boy stepped out to save the Union.

"Keller, Harry!" said the teacher.

"Ready!" came her brother's reply.

"Hundreds of thousands answered this call in the north and in the south," said Mr. Speer, as he drove deep the application with tears in his voice. "There is a call for volunteers for a holy war; are you willing to answer 'Ready' ?"

This was the method—if method it can be called—of developing enthusiasm. There was no claptrap, no funny "asides," no waving of banners, no singing before the sessions, no applause. Yet hundreds of people sat throughout sessions where they could hear nothing but intermittent words. There was a respect for the speaker and a respect for those who could hear him, and there was no running in and out. Only those having tickets could get in till a few moments before the hour for beginning the session, when unoccupied space was quickly filled by many eager applicants. Possibly two thousand students from all over the country had to be refused places at this convention, owing to the limitations of the hall, the actual tickets issued being something over four thousand. When the doors were closed they were not opened for gadabouts. Those folk who merely want to hear a part of some special speech, and then go off to sightsee or to gossip were not present at this convention, as I have seen them at some of the gatherings in our own brotherhood. Even the editors—there were forty-four of them present—were in attendance at every session. So far as I could learn, I was the only representative of the papers published by the Disciples of Christ who was present, and I deplore this fact because I believe some of them need to learn that there are thousands of men and women in the churches who are not the "only Christians" but who have just as great a passion to fight sin and win this world for Christ—even though they do not always see the true and the best way—as many among "us" who would plant "our" flag on a high hill with a big wall around it. Even the son of his father has seemingly forgotten that that father once wrote, "If I understood our position to un-Christianize the whole pedobaptist world I would be compelled to withdraw from my position in the brotherhood with utter disgust." Isaac Errett's memory is very dear to me. He preached my mother's funeral, he buried my only sister.

Some Leaders of the Student Volunteers.

The first illustration is a portrait of S. M. Zwemer, of Arabia. In order come: Karl Fries, Stockholm, Sweden, chairman of the World's Student Federation; Robert Wilder, the first secretary; John R. Mott, chairman of the executive committee; Fennel P. Turner, general secretary; T. H. Sailer, special mission study secretary; Harlan P. Beach, educational secretary; Miss Susie Little and Miss Bertha Conde, of the executive committee, are the ladies.

The narrowest partisan, the bitterest bigot, must surely have been broadened by coming into touch with the devotional spirit and the fraternal regard of these young men and women who have come to realize that the finest offering a man can give to the world is a life copied after Christ and that the life of every Christian must be adjusted to the fact that it is the church's supreme business to make Jesus Christ known to all the world. Were these young people in earnest? It took them just ten minutes by the clock to pledge—not for their churches or organizations, but for their individual selves, and many of them poor students—over eighty thousand dollars to carry on the work of a missionary propaganda among students, while ten thousand dollars additional were subscribed before the convention closed.

And while the secretaries of our Foreign Christian Missionary Society are crying for men to go to the field, and there is hardly any response, two hundred and fifty of these Student Volun-

If All Christians Were Christians* By George L. Bush

Every reason that constrained our Lord in placing Judea and Samaria before the rest of the world, constrains us in placing America before all other countries in our program to-day. America is our Judea in its accessibility and in the preparedness of the people for our message. This is our base of supplies for the world's evangelization. The gospel light has always shined out of the east upon the west. Westward the divine empire takes its way until the whole earth shall become subject to our king. The gospel no less than the constitution follows the flag of our country. The growing greatness of our country makes the plea for "Home Missions" stronger with each setting sun. America will surely dominate the world, and when the church converts America the conversion of the world is assured. Josiah Strong has well said, "He does most to make the world Christian who does most to make America Christian."

All souls are precious in the sight of God, and should be with us, but the conversion of a typical American is worth more to the church at the present time than that of a man from any other nation. His possibilities and opportunities are greater, he develops faster and can give the better service. The neglect of "Home Missions" is an open violation of the plainest maxims of economy in the administration of a most sacred trust. This is the ripest field in the world. Last year our home missionaries averaged sixty-six additions each, a record without parallel in modern evangelism. The most of this great field is mission ground for us. Let us look toward the north, the east, the south and the west, and see the fields white already unto harvest. From the mountain tops of state conventions in every quarter of this homeland our secretaries have viewed this promised Canaan. This is why they come to us with appeals so insistent and so urgent to help "Home Missions to the front." Our missionaries have gone through the land and gathered a few clusters of grapes from the various fields for our inspection and approval. They bring no evil report against the people of the land; they are united in urging us to go up and possess these states and territories for Christ. They report many of the walls very low and the giants not so warlike as in the days of our fathers. Whether it be in Portland, Maine; Monroe, La.; Mobile, Ala.; Battle Creek Mich., or Beaumont, Texas, success ever crowns the efforts of our faithful workers. With such an inviting field, and with the assured results of sixty and one hundred fold, our duty is plain, urgent and imperative. No wonder that our leaders are grieved over the church's lack of vision and slowness of heart to believe their report!

Do we still love our country and our flag? Do we value aright our civil and religious liberties? The only hope for the perpetuation of these precious emblems and ideals is in the triumph of the gospel of Christ. The future of our country is in the hands of its citizens; and the character of this citizenship depends upon the fidelity of the church. No man who loves his country and desires its welfare can be indifferent to this work.

We must show unfaltering loyalty to and untiring zeal in the propagation of the plea of our fathers. I am still profoundly impressed with the idea that we have a two fold message, one to the world, and a second message to a divided church. There is a tendency in some quarters to vaporize about "a spiritual and invisible union," and to excuse existing external divisions. Some ministers seem to have no definite message, and go from one pulpit to another with perfect ease and ready adaptation. They deal in meaningless platitudes and glittering generalities. They substitute modern ethics for the ancient gospel. They plead for an indefinite "larger hope," and are content in seeking to build up an invisible "Holy Catholic Church, of which every loyal believer in his personality is considered a visible representative." A noted bishop thinks, "it would be vastly better to have two or three new denominations organized," than to have "the union of all denominations in one great visible church, called by the same name, subject to the same government." Under such conditions it is hardly time for us to abandon our plea for Christian union. The time is ripe for calling the attention of the apologists for denominationalism to Paul's prayer for the saints in Corinth, "Now I beseech you, brethren, through the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye all speak the same thing, and that there be no divisions among you; but that ye be perfected together in the same mind and in the same judgment." This looks very much like a plea for "visible and external union." Paul unsparingly rebuked their divisions over Cephas, Apollos, and himself. Such divisions should still be rebuked. Denominationalism is a sin against the word of God, it disturbs the peace of the church, it is a stumbling-block at home, and causes confusion abroad. Our Savior's prayer for the union of all those who believe in him, must be "beaten in and burned into the conscience" of every adherent of every denomination. The entire income of this board could be wisely expended for several years in a great crusade for Christian union. This plea should be carried into the strongholds of the denominational churches by men whose ability will compel attention and whose spirit will win acceptance. The army of God divided into warring camps, wearing party names, teaching conflicting doctrines, and administering the ordinances differently, is an appeal that ought to mightily move those who have the grandest plea since the times of the apostles!

Next to the indifference of the church, come the divisions in the body of Christ as a barrier to the world's evangelization. It is an inexcusable waste of men and money. The Master recognized the necessity of the unity of all who believe on him, as a condition of the world's conversion. The world will not believe in the face of a divided church. This opens up for us a great field for strenuous endeavor. Our country has some 80,000,000 souls. About 28,000,000 are members of our more than three hundred denominations. Only 1,230,000 stand for

> "No book but the Bible,
> No creed but the Christ,
> No plea but the Gospel,
> No name but the Divine."

This great plea of the fathers needs no revision, but tireless, enthusiastic, widespread reiteration. The doors stand open in every direction to its evangel, and it is winning many recruits wherever it is properly presented. Its victories have mightily stirred denominational waters. Thousands of the people are weary of its yoke and ready to cast off its bonds and cords. They are only waiting for some one to lead them into the one fold and to the one Shepherd. It is no time for us to stammer and to falter, but to speak clearly and act promptly. The prospect of union among the various branches of some of the great denominations, should encourage us to press on more vigorously for real and universal Christian union.

What this plea has won in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Kentucky and Iowa, it can and will win in New England, in the new south, in the great north and in the mighty west, if we will only give the "Home Board" the money with which to push it. This board believes in this plea, and these missionaries preach it; but can we hope that 350 workers will do the work that needs to be done? These 350 missionaries did organize 165 churches, and added nearly 17,000 persons to our membership last year. Could we reasonably expect more from these few workers? The board must depend upon the liberality of the churches for the enlargement of this work. "How shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent?" A few years ago, a church in one of our western towns advertised for a minister that could "live on air and ride a stick horse"; there was no application for such a pulpit. The ravens do not feed our modern Elijahs. The church must furnish wings upon which the gospel may fly, and feet upon which it may go. The board can not lengthen the cords until the churches strengthen the stakes.

Of all that I have tried to say this is the sum: The overshadowing need of the hour is the Christianization of the church. All other needs wait upon the realization of this fundamental one. When all professed Christians become consistent Christians, they will be missionary Christians. When all church members are spiritualized they will be liberalized.

FEDERATION — A Symposium

Some Questions on Federation.

The following letter was sent out by the Editors to a number of brethren, and we continue in this issue the publication of their replies.

In view of the discussion which has been in progress among us for some time on the question of the federation of the churches, The Christian-Evangelist desires to publish a symposium on the subject, for the benefit of its readers, and with the purpose of molding public sentiment rightly on this important issue which now confronts us. Will you kindly, therefore, favor us with brief answers to the following questions which seem to us to embrace the points in discussion:

1. Defining church federation as an agreed-upon method of co-operation in those things which the co-operating churches hold in common, and in which each co-operating Christian body has full freedom to be true to its convictions of truth and duty, are we not, as advocates of Christian union, logically committed to the federation movement as the next practicable step in the direction of the fulfillment of Christ's prayer for the unity of his disciples, and as a practical manifestation of the degree of unity which already exists?

2. Do you approve of the Basis of Federation submitted to the evangelical churches of America for their approval, by the late Inter-Church Conference in New York City, as presenting a practicable plan for such co-operation?

By President Hill M. Bell.

I am thoroughly in sympathy with the method of co-operation agreed upon in the Inter-Church Conference in New York city in November. I believe that the Church of Christ is committed to this movement logically, and I am in thorough sympathy with every step that has been taken, so far. I can hardly understand how we are to be faithful to our own movement, if we should reject this basis of federation which has been submitted to the evangelical churches of America for their approval.

By I. H. Fuller.

Allow me to heartily congratulate you on the question of federation. I heard the proposition when submitted at the Omaha convention. I was in favor of it then and am still in favor of it. It is the only logical position we, as a people, have. I write my hearty approval of the basis of federation submitted at the New York conference. I believe the best of the churches of Christ see it thus. May God keep our selfish sectarian spirits out of the way.

By J. W. Lanham.

Yes, and yes, to your questions, and amen to nearly the whole of your symposium. I stand squarely with The Christian-Evangelist, Isaac Errett and the Campbells. The "Declaration and Address" of the Campbells admitted the Christianity of the people to whom the document was addressed. They were supposed to be Christians; otherwise there could have been no Christian union.

But it is said that we should not indorse their sectarianism. Nor should we indorse the sectarianism of some among ourselves, which is not less odious and disgusting than that of others. Let us bear a steady testimony against all sectarianism; among ourselves as well as others. In both cases we can fight it better at short range; the less formal division we have the better.

A distinction is often made between the individual and the organization to which he belongs. It is asserted that persons may be Christians and at the same time belong to sectarian bodies. Then why look altogether at the sectarian element in the churches around us, and not see the elements of goodness, truth and a holy life in these churches? Do not these spiritual treasures far outweigh the mistakes in organization? Do not the Methodist, the Episcopal and even the Catholic churches have a greater amount of good than evil in them? Then, possibly, some of the good brethren who so zealously oppose federation may not be themselves perfectly immaculate.

By D. R. Dungan.

I have been invited to say something on the federation that is occupying so much space in the papers at the present time. But I am certainly not the man to say much on such a theme. As a religious body the Christian church can never enter into it. Bodies which are controlled by a synod or conference may do this, but we are not. Whatever any man may do in this matter it must be regarded as his own affair. If in what he shall do there is no compromise of the Gospel or its claims, he has a right to do so. He may not plan for the best, but he can not be adjudged as evil when he has followed his convictions of truth and duty. Most of us fail in many respects of making the best of our time and influence, but we are not to be peremptorily dismissed from the house of God on that account. If I shall find a man casting out demons in the name of Christ, I shall not forbid his doing so, because he is not following with us. On the other hand, it will be my duty to show him where his influence ought to be used. On the one hand, I must not hinder him from any good he may accomplish, and on the other, I must not fail to show him the good and the right way of the Lord.

If any brother wants to federate just let him federate, but if he does not see that he can accomplish the most good in that way there is no authority to force him into such an arrangement. Paul did not federate with the spirit that caused that damsel at Philippi to announce a great truth. After he would be gone from there he would have left all the disciples largely under the control of that spirit of divination. Missionary boards may parcel off territory between them. But they can not shut any one else out who shall feel that he can do more good there than anywhere else. So, after all, the federation will not amount to much. The field-parceling feature of it might work well if all were regarded as having all the Gospel needed for the salvation and best spiritual development of the people. But all are not so regarded. I will be told that I am talking on another subject, that the field-parceling is no feature of it. If so, I see but little left but a social duck-nodding, rendered more delightful by neighborly religious smiles sprinkled with cologne water. If it is this latter, don't understand me to object to it; I positively like it. Anything, not sinful in itself, that will make religious people more forbearing, and more willing to work together in all things in which they are agreed, will be attended with good results. Under its influence the bitterness that prevents, many times, a hearing of the truth, will be removed. The more freely we can associate with the religious world, the better for them and us.

But just here there is difficulty and danger. Some will feel that the only way to extend the hand to one who has added human philosophy to the simple Gospel, is to shut it up tight first and then extend it with rapid movement. There are others who feel that it is glorious that we are about to be taken into the great sisterhood of churches. I am not in fellowship with either of these classes in their particular views. Please let me love all men, and especially those who are trying to serve the Lord Christ. But leave me free to use any opportunity granted to teach them the whole counsel of God. There!

By Jesse B. Haston.

I am not able to see how a Disciple can consistently answer these two questions otherwise than somewhat as follows:

1. We are. If the preachers of the Disciples of Christ had "met this thing in the road," as it were, the plan having been suggested to each one by some man of his own sort, and appearing, as it actually is, simply as a plan for the cultivation of a better understanding and more effective work with other churches along practical lines, scarcely a public teacher among us would have taken fright on his own motion—so perfectly is the movement in accord with our own animating purposes. Provincialism, narrowness of view and sympathy, is the chief enemy of the Christian spirit. This is likewise the chief opponent of federation.

We have a great message to bear to this modern age of a divided church. We are not getting this message before the Christian world as we might, and ought. In order to teach effectively there must be acquaintance and sympathy between teachers and pupils. Our people as a whole have not been cultivating the necessary acquaintance and sympathy with religious neighbors as such. Federation would, at least, bring us into needed touch with our neighbors.

It is striking to note that, alongside of this movement toward inter-church co-operation, there proceed our own strenuous endeavors toward bringing about "a practical manifestation of the degree of unity which already exists" among ourselves! The two efforts are one at the bottom. The man who lives in the spirit of Christly federation with the brethren of his own communion, will have little difficulty in federating with others. Our "non-progressive," non-missionary contingent naturally oppose federation.

It is unfortunate that any live and sympathetic young minister should give a direction to his career by opposing such a valuable movement, because it can not perhaps be endorsed in all its present details, and so shut himself off from the wealth of association, comprehensiveness of outlook and largeness of influence to which he is so freely entitled by his connection with a vast movement for the union of God's people.

2. I do. This basis for present co-operation is not perfect, but its straightforwardness, marvelously well chosen terms and adaptability to the moment's conditions are more than we could well have hoped.

Irenics and Polemics

By William Durban

Prelude.

This article must, for once, commence with a personal note. Once more I am anticipating the joy of touching the American shore. On April 24 I and my wife sail by the "Carmania" from Liverpool for New York, hoping to remain for about six weeks on American soil. If any of our eastern churches would like a sermon or lecture from an English Disciple, I might be able to serve in that way during May or June. My address will be, "Care of Mr. Hudson Maxim, 698 St. Marks avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y."

Our Bard.

I have to-day received a note of most cheering character from Daniel Hughes, our new minister at the Church of Christ, Liverpool, who is successor to Bro. Ben Mitchell, now in America, formerly a missionary, as was Sister Mitchell, also, in India. D. Hughes is a very remarkable man. I am personally the more attached to him because some of his experiences are closely akin to my own. He was one of my successors at the Baptist church which, many years ago, I had the honor of founding in the beautiful Chester on the banks of the Dee. Just as during my Chester Baptist ministry I learned to know and comprehend the work and principles of the Disciples of Christ, so it has now recently happened in the case of Daniel Hughes. He is no longer a pastor in the Baptist denomination. He is a brilliant preacher, for wherever he has been a Baptist pastor he has drawn great audiences. I have myself sat with delighted appreciation at his feet when visiting Chester. He is a pulpit poet, a typical Welsh orator, a perfect bilingual speaker, preaching with equal facility in both languages, and has won three bardic chairs. This last distinction is a wonderful proof of poetic genius, for such prizes are won only at the Cambrian Eisteddfoddiau by competitors of real genius. Brother Hughes is new to the work in Liverpool, and it is too early to know what may be the result of his undertaking the charge of the work in that magnificent city. But he has on his heart his beloved Wales, and our executive and his church have encouraged him to undertake occasional mission campaigns in the principality. He is there at this moment and writes that large numbers are coming to the meetings. Moreover he has translated for us a tract to begin with, and some thousands of these are being circulated in connection with the campaign. We should go to work in Wales, Scotland and Ireland.

The New Irenics.

I now come to the main topic. There are some new and significant departures in religion and literature, and these affect both America and England. In talking of irenics or policies of peace, I am simply referring to the religious and theological aspects of life. I make no allusion here to the political animus illustrated in this or that international entente cordiale. It is well that certain nations are cultivating mutual amity. I wish all Americans and all Britishers alike would seek to understand each other amicably. I have, after long years of observation, to speak honestly and frankly, come to the conclusion that the British understand and appreciate America far better than Americans understand or appreciate the United Kingdom and its inhabitants. I was once more shocked to read a brutal letter in the literary supplement of "The New York Sun" weekly edition, from a correspondent who, while saying that he was of British descent, and saying so in ostentatious terms, added that he "deeply hated the English." I am grieved to say that this sentiment is too prevalent, and I think that better-minded Americans should protest against it. This, however, is an interlude. I suppose that, as it is published by Putnams, the new volume of Irenic Theology, by Charles Marsh Mead, Ph.D., D.D., will come widely under the notice of readers on both sides of the Atlantic. It is indicative of that important tendency of our time which has a reassuring side, although there is also another side to the question. I note that some critics declare that polemic theology is played out. That is certainly a very rash or very premature judgment. I should not have imagined by the tenacity, for instance, of high churchmen, the recklessness of broad churchmen, the persistence of Socinians, the sustained bigotry of Romanists, the ardent cleaving of Methodism to Wesley's peculiar tenets, the expulsion of Dr. Beet from his professional chair at Richmond College for his liberal views, the disagreement of Canon Henson with Bishop Gore, the deprivation of Mr. Fillingham of his living as rector of Hexton for his active association with Nonconformists, and the appalling passive resistance movement in my own country, that polemic theology was anywhere near being played out. I do not know just what Dr. Mead means. What I seem to perceive is that the polemical drifts and currents are changing their channels. Human thought in every age shifts its channels like the great Hoang Ho river, "China's Sorrow." But in my humble opinion theologians are as polemical in opinion as ever. They are fighting fiercely, for instance, over criticism. Formerly they were in conflict over utterly different subjects of controversy. In my own land we are in for a parliamentary session of fiery politico-religious polemics which will convulse society.

And yet I most gladly admit that at last the irenic spirit is beginning to tell on the old polemical disposition which was truly heartbreaking. The men of peace and good will are more in the front to-day. In past days they have been relegated, or quietly retreated, to the back seats or shady corners of the public arena. But those who advocate federation, who try to bring about union by uniting where this is possible or desirable without unworthy compromise, who will try to see Christianity in those who differ from them conscientiously or mistakenly, are taking many positions in the front rank. The masses of the people have only recently begun to discover that men and women who love peace rather than war, life rather than loud profession, consistent character rather than unscrupulous ability, are of more value to the community than the obtrusive pulpit pugilists, the wild writers about schemes which the writers themselves make no self-denying attempt to carry out, and the brilliant talkers who never do anything. The polemic idiosyncrasy when I was young was fashionable and was admired. Accordingly, many churches discovered that they had chosen miserably incompetent pastors simply on the promise of a few powerful, brilliant, or masterly sermons. Even now this kind of collective folly is not extinct and churches are suffering for it.

Is Theology Impossible.

Dr. Mead holds an extreme view which I would fain hope may not spread. He claims that it is useless to try to compose a complete scheme of theology, because the materials for it are not in existence. He holds that it is disastrous. It has simply given men occasion to call each other fools, the Arminian the Calvinist, and the Calvinist the Arminian. Just there I think very many of us will cordially agree with Dr. Mead. I for one am in fullest sympathy with his idea so far. For I was for many years kept confined in the small Calvinistic tank. In it I swam round and

INSOMNIA

Leads to Madness, if not Remedied in Time.

"Experiments satisfied me, some 5 years ago," writes a Topeka woman, "that coffee was the direct cause of the insomnia from which I suffered terribly, as well as the extreme nervousness and acute dyspepsia which made life a most painful thing for me.

"I had been a coffee drinker since childhood, and did not like to think that the beverage was doing me all this harm. But it was, and the time came when I had to face the fact and protect myself. I therefore gave it up, abruptly and absolutely, and adopted Postum Food Coffee for my hot drink at meals.

"I began to note improvement in my condition very soon after I took on Postum. The change proceeded gradually, but surely, and it was a matter of only a few weeks before I found myself entirely relieved—the nervousness passed away, my digestive apparatus was restored to normal efficiency, and I began to sleep, restfully and peacefully.

"These happy conditions have continued during all of the 5 years, and I am safe in saying that I owe them entirely to Postum Food Coffee, for when I began to drink it I ceased to use medicines." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

As Seen From the Dome

By F. D. Power

Cadiz, our first sight of Spain, is built on the extremity of a tongue of land projecting five miles into the sea, and is surrounded by a wall with five gates, one of which communicates with the isthmus. Seen from a distance off the coast it presents a magnificent display of snow-white turrets rising majestically from the sea. No city, not even Naples, is so attractive as one views it from the deck of his steamer. Every house annually receives its coat of whitewash; and as we approach it we see its most characteristic feature, the marine promenades bringing the city all around between the ramparts and the sea. It has been compared to Venice, the Queen of the Adriatic.

Cadiz is the old Roman Gades. It has ranked among the great commercial cities in days gone by. It goes back to 1150 B. C. and was a Phenician colony, regarded then as the limit of the world. It continued in the hands of the Carthaginians till after the Punic wars, when Spain became a Roman province. Julius Cesar conferred the civitas of Rome on all its citizens 49 B. C., and its citizens under Augustus ranked next to those of the imperial city. Its period of greatest commercial prosperity was in the 17th and 18th centuries, when it was the focus of intercourse between Spain and her colonies, and had the monopoly of traffic with South America. With its 70,000 people it is still an important city, several thousand vessels annually entering the port, and its shipments of Xeres wines alone running up into the millions. In 1868 Cadiz was the center of the revolution that dethroned Isabella.

The city has beautiful squares, promenades and gardens. The Plaza de San Antonia, surrounded by handsome houses, shaded with trees, and with seats of marble, is the principal square, and communicating with it is the principal street, on which are the exchange and homes of the nobles. These houses have open central courts and flat roofs in Moorish style. The Alameda is the favorite resort. One of the most interesting features of every city is its people. Moors and negroes, sailors and soldiers, beggars and priests, beautiful women and proud hidalgos, all sorts and conditions, may be seen in fair Cadiz. Here they make fans and mantillas, gloves, guitars and sweetmeats, and our ladies enjoyed their first shopping in Spain.

The principal public buildings are the two cathedrals, one built in the thirteenth and the other in the eighteenth century; the hospital, Casa de Misericordia; the bull ring, accommodating 12,000; the custom house and the light house of San Sabastian, rising 172 feet from the rock on which it stands. In the Church of the Capuchins, formerly a monastery, is an unfinished picture, Murillo's "Marriage of St. Catherine," the last effort of the great artist, as he met his death by falling from the scaffolding on which he was painting. Murillo is by all odds Spain's greatest painter. Born in Seville in 1617 of very humble parents, at an early age he began to sketch the ragged sunburnt children in the streets and paint pictures from low Spanish life In 1643 he studied in Madrid, and returning to Seville painted his most important pictures for the convent of San Francisco in the first of his styles, "frio," dark with decided outlines. Soult, the French marshal, who, like his master, the Corsican butcher, laid hands on everything in sight, stole these paintings in 1810. After his marriage in 1648 Murillo adopted his "calido," or second style, warm with improved coloring. His "St. Anthony" is an example. This is his most famous, and is in the cathedral at Seville. It is a large canvas, containing many life-size figures. The saint is represented in an attitude of prayer, kneeling with hands outstretched, as if to receive the infant Jesus, who is floating in the air, surrounded by cherubs and angels. The artist has invested the child with a sort of divinity that impresses the beholder with feelings of devotion, as in Raphael's great "Sistine Madonna." The coloring is unique, the shadows transparent, the whole picture flooded with an atmosphere which Murillo alone could paint, and the charm of loveliness and warmth about it is felt, but can not be described. The hands show the mastery of the artist, as in all works of Murillo. On the night of Nov. 4, 1874, a Spaniard cut out the figure of the saint from the canvas and sold it to a German in New York for $250. The Spanish government recovered it in 1875 and restored it to the picture The Duke of Wellington offered $200,000 for that work of the Spanish master.

Murillo in 1660 founded the Academy of Art in Seville and adopted his third style, "vaporosa," misty, vaporous and blending, in which he painted the most magnificent of his pictures. A series of his greatest works was executed for an almshouse outside of the walls of Seville, five of which were stolen by Soult, one of which the French government afterward purchased for $123,000. It is the "Immaculate Conception" in the Louvre. Murillo's greatest subjects were virgins and children. He was called "the painter of conceptions." His greatest example is that picture in the Louvre Gallery. When you go to Paris you want to see three things: the "Madaleine," the "Venus de Milo" and the "Immaculate Conception." It is the embodiment of deep religious mystery and dogma. It is painted with inimitable tenderness and sweetness. Rising in a state of ecstatic beatitude, borne aloft in a golden ether to heaven by a multitude of cherubs, amid clouds, her feet upon the crescent moon, after John's vision on Patmos, the virgin has a holy and ethereal beauty, everything that is lovable and lovely.

About those pictures in the convent the story goes that the artist's wife was a lady of lively temper and elocutionary gifts, for whose weakness in our land the common law once provided in a gallant way a hydropathic remedy. Suspicious of her husband, she determined to make it warm for him by telling the priest. Hearing of her kind intention, he forestalled her by asking of the monks permission to retreat to their cloisters for prayer and meditation. The good fathers welcomed the penitent and during the retreat he was employed with his brush. So shrews may sometimes serve good ends, and some day we shall learn the purpose of flies, mosquitoes and snakes.

Murillo's "Virgin of the Napkin" was painted for the reverend cook of the Capuchins. When about to leave, his majesty called attention to his many favors, for which the artist had made no return. 'Give me a canvas and I will return you a painting," said Murillo. The cook seized a napkin and handed it to him. A few days after he found the charming half-length picture in his cell which is now one of the pearls of Andalusia. The mother is a celestial beauty, the child, with one hand on her bosom, seems pressing himself out of the canvas. Involuntarily you stretch out your hands toward him. The padre on receiving it asked: "Why did you paint the child leaning so far out of the picture?" "He must needs be on the watch, father, if he sees you all observe your vows,"

But Seville is the scene of Murillo's pictures represents a priest with a sleek spaniel at his feet which has been known to call forth a snarl from a living dog as he approached it.

But Seville is the scene of Murillo's triumph. Seville is the capital of the province of Seville, one of the provinces of Andalusia, which was one of the Moorish kingdoms. The Guadalquiver runs through it. It is a region of wine and oil, of oranges and olives. We took a train at Cadiz and passing through this paradisaical land came to the old Moorish capital. It is 62 miles northeast of Cadiz and 355 southwest of Madrid. As Italians say, "See Naples and die," the Spaniards declare, "He that has missed seeing Seville has missed seeing a marvel"; and even the Germans declare, "God gives his favorites a house in Seville." It has from the earliest times been a port and the chief outlet for the wealth of Spain. It was a favorite resort for the wealthy Romans and was Cesar's "Little Rome." Hadrian, Trojan and Theodosius were all born near here. The chief existing Roman monument is the aqueduct on 410 arches, by which water was supplied to the city. Seville is the

Ho, All Ye Faithful Followers of Ananias
GIVE EAR!

A Young Girl said to a Cooking School Teacher in New York: "If You make One Statement as False as That, All You have said about Foods is Absolutely Unreliable."

This burst of true American girl indignation was caused by the teacher saying that Grape-Nuts, the popular pre-digested food, was made of stale bread shipped in and sweetened.

The teacher colored up and changed the subject.

There is quite an assortment of traveling and stay-at-home members of the tribe of Ananias who tell their falsehoods for a variety of reasons.

In the spring it is the custom on a cattle ranch to have a "round up," and brand the cattle, so we are going to have a "round up," and brand these cattle and place them in their proper pastures.

FIRST PASTURE.

Cooking school teachers—this includes "teachers" who have applied to us for a weekly pay if they would say "something nice" about Grape-Nuts and Postum, and when we have declined to hire them to do this they get waspy and show their true colors.

This also includes "demonstrators" and "lecturers" sent out by a certain Sanitarium to sell foods made there, and these people instructed by the small-be-whiskered-doctor—the head of the institution—to tell these prevarications (you can speak the stronger word if you like). This same little doctor conducts a small magazine in which there is a department of "answers to correspondents," many of the questions as well as the answers being written by the aforesaid doctor.

In this column sometime ago appeared the statement: "No, we cannot recommend the use of Grape-Nuts for it is nothing but bread with glucose poured over it." Right then he showed his badge as a member of the tribe of Ananias. He may have been a member for some time befoee, and so he has caused these "lecturers" to descend into the ways of the tribe wherever they go.

When the young lady in New York put the "iron on" to this "teacher" and branded her right we sent $10.00 to the girl for her pluck and bravery.

SECOND PASTURE.

Editors of "Trade" papers known as grocers' papers.

Remember, we don't put the brand on all, by any means. Only those that require it. These members of the tribe have demanded that we carry advertising in their papers and when we do not consider it advisable they institute a campaign of vituperation and slander, printing from time to time manufactured slurs on Postum or Grape-Nuts. When they go far enough we set our legal force at work and hail them to the judge to answer. If the pace has been hot enough to throw some of these "cattle" over on their backs, feet tied and "bellowing," do you think we should be blamed? They gambol around with tails held high and jump stiff legged with a very "cocky" air while they have full range, but when the rope is thrown over them "it's different."

Should we untie them because they bleat soft and low? Or should we put the iron on, so that people will know the brand?

Let's keep them in this pasture, anyhow.

THIRD PASTURE.

Now we come to a frisky lot, the "Labor Union" editors. You know down in Texas a weed called "Loco" is sometimes eaten by a steer and produces a derangement of the brain that makes the steer "batty" or crazy. Many of these editors are "Locoed" rom hate of anyone who will not instantly obey the "demands" of a labor union and it is the universal habit of such writers to go straight into a system of personal villification, manufacturing any sort of falsehood through which to vent their spleen. We assert that the common citizen has a right to live and breathe air without asking permission of the labor trust and this has brought down on us the hate of these editors. When they go far enough with their libels, is it harsh for us to get judgment against them and have our lawyers watch for a chance to attach money due them from others? (For they are usually irresponsible.)

Keep your eye out for the "Locoed" editor.

Now let all these choice specimens take notice:

We will deposit one thousand or fifty thousand dollars to be covered by a like amount from them, or any one of them, and if there was ever one ounce of old bread or any other ingredient different than our selected wheat and barley with a little salt and yeast used in the making of Grape-Nuts, we will lose the money.

Our pure food factories are open at all times to visitors, and thousands pass through each month, inspecting every department and every process. Our factories are so clean that one could, with good relish, eat a meal from the floors.

The work people, both men and women, are of the highest grade in the state of Michigan, and according to the state labor reports, are the highest paid in the state for similar work.

Let us tell you exactly what you will see when you inspect the manufacture of Grape-Nuts. You will find tremendous elevators containing the choicest wheat and barley possible to buy. These grains are carried through long conveyers to grinding mills, and there converted into flour. Then the machines make selection of the proper quantities of this flour in the proper proportion and these parts are blended into a general flour which passes over to the big dough mixing machines, there water, salt and a little yeast are added and the dough kneaded the proper length of time.

Remember that previous to the barley having been ground it was passed through about one hundred hours of soaking in water, then placed on warm floors and slightly sprouted, developing the diastase in the barley, which changes the starch in the grain into a form of sugar.

Now after we have passed it into dough and it has been kneaded long enough, it is moulded by machinery into loaves about 18 inches long and 5 or 6 inches in diameter. It is put into this shape for convenience in second cooking.

These great loaves are sliced by machinery and the slices placed on wire trays, these trays, in turn, placed on great steel trucks, and rolled into the secondary ovens, each perhaps 75 or 80 feet long. There the food is subjected to a long low heat and the starch which has not been heretofore transformed, is turned into a form of sugar generally known as Post Sugar. It can be seen glistening on the granules of Grape-Nuts if held toward the light, and this sugar is not poured over or put on the food as these prevaricators ignorantly assert. On the contrary the sugar exudes from the interior of each little granule during the process of manufacture, and reminds one of the little white particles of sugar that come out on the end of a hickory log after it has been sawed off and allowed to stand for a length of time.

The Post Sugar is the most digestible food known for human use. It is so perfect in its adaptability that mothers with very young infants will pour a little warm milk over two or three spoonfuls of Grape-Nuts, thus washing the sugar off from the granules and carrying it with the milk to the bottom of the dish. Then this milk charged with Post Sugar is fed to the infants producing the most satisfactory results, for the baby has food that it can digest quickly and will go off to sleep well fed and contented.

When baby gets two or three months old it is the custom of some mothers to allow the Grape-Nuts to soak in the milk a little longer and become mushy, whereupon a little of the food can be fed in addition to the milk containing the washed off sugar.

It is by no means manufactured for a baby food, but these facts are stated as an illustration of a perfectly digestible food.

It furnishes the energy and strength for the great athletes. It is in common use by physicians in their own families and among their patients, and can be seen on the table of every first-class college in the land.

We quote from the London Lancet analysis as follows:

"The basis of nomenclature of this preparation is evidently an American pleasantry, since 'Grape-Nuts' is derived solely from cereals. The preparatory process undoubtedly converts the food constituents into a much more digestible condition than in the raw cereal. This is evident from the remarkable solubility of the preparation, no less than one-half of it being soluble in cold water. The soluble part contains chiefly dextrin and no starch. In appearance 'Grape-Nuts' resembles fried breadcrumbs. The grains are brown and crisp, with a pleasant taste not unlike slightly burnt malt. According to our analysis the following is the composition of 'Grape-Nuts': Moisture, 6.02 per cent; mineral matter, 2.01 per cent; fat, 1.60 per cent; proteids, 15.00 per cent; soluble carbohydrates, &c., 49.40 per cent; and unaltered carbohydrates (insoluble), 25.97 per cent. The features worthy of note in this analysis are the excellent proportion of proteid, mineral matters, and soluble carbohydrates per cent. The mineral matter was rich in phosphoric acid. 'Grape-Nuts' is described as a brain and nerve food, whatever that may be. Our analysis, at any rate, shows that it is a nutritive of a high order, since it contains the constituents of a complete food in very satisfactory and rich proportion and in an easily assimilable state."

An analysis made by the Canadian Government some time ago shows that Grape-Nuts contains nearly ten times the digestible elements contained in ordinary cereals, and foods, and nearly twice the amount contained in any other food analyzed.

The analysis is familiar to practically every successful physician in America and London.

We print this statement in order that the public may know the exact facts upon which we stake our honor and will back it with any amount of money that any person or corporation will put up.

We propose to follow some of these choice specimens of the tribe of Ananias.

When you hear a cooking school teacher or any other person assert that either Postum or Grape-Nuts are made of any other ingredients than those printed on the packages and as we say they are made, send us the name and address, also name of two or three witnesses, and if the evidence is clear enough to get a judgment we will right that wrong quickly.

Our business has always been conducted on as high a grade of human intelligence as we are capable of, and we propose to clear the deck of these prevaricators and liars whenever and wherever they can be found.

Attention is again called to the general and broad invitation to visitors to go through our works, where they will be shown the most minute process and device in order that they may understand how pure and clean and wholesome Grape-Nuts and Postum are.

There is an old saying among business men that there is some chance to train a fool, but there is no room for a liar, for you never can tell where you are, and we hereby serve notice on all the members of this ancient tribe of Ananias that they may follow their calling in other lines, but when they put forth their lies about Grape-Nuts and Postum, we propose to give them an opportunity to answer to the proper authorities.

The New York girl wisely said that if a person would lie about one item, it brands the whole discourse as absolutely unreliable.

Keep your iron ready and brand these "mavericks" whenever you find them running loose.

native ground of the bull fight and breeder of the best bulls, and its bull ring accommodates 18,000 spectators. It is a city of squalor and splendor, of beggars and hidalgos. It has the characteristic types of Andalusia, the favored land, where the ancients placed the Elysian fields and gardens of Hesperides, and which we sailed over Atlantis and the Fortunate Isles to behold Its bull fights are the greatest and bloodiest, its women the wittiest and most beautiful, its religious festivals the most expensive and splendid in the world. It has the Gitanos in their glory, and their gypsy dances and fortune telling, love potions and horse trading, fleas and dirt, lying and theft, in perfection.

The aspect of the city is essentially Moorish, the narrow, tortuous streets, fine inner courtyards and many of its buildings. From 711 to 1248 it was in the hands of the Moors and attained great splendor and a population of 300,000. The Giralda Alcazar and Tower of Gold are splendid Moorish memorials, the Alcazar being a rival of the Alhambra. The Giralda stands at the northeast corner of the cathedral. It is a bell tower of ancient origin, 275 feet high, formerly the chief muezzin tower of the mosque that stood upon this site, formerly occupied by the Temple of Astarte. The ascent is by inclined planes like St. Mark's in Venice. It is the finest specimen of the kind in Europe. The vane is a 2,500 weight bronze woman which turns from point to point at the slightest veering of the wind.

Chief among the buildings of Seville is the cathedral. It ranks next in size to St. Peter's, 415 feet long, 298 wide and 150 high to the roof of the nave. It is surrounded by a hundred shafts of columns from the mosque which it succeeded, and is of Spanish pointed gothic. The exterior is disappointing, but the interior is magnificent, a parallelogram with a central dome, 32 immense clustered columns, 93 windows of finest glass by Flemish artists, and a profusion of art and riches on every side, producing an unsurpassed effect of magnificence and grandeur. At the west end of the nave is the grave of Ferdinand, son of Columbus, and at the east end the body of St. Ferdinand, the conqueror of the Moors, which is exposed three times a year. Here in the royal chapel is also a curious life-size statue of the Virgin of carved wood, with movable arms, seated on a silver throne, with hair of spun gold. The organ is one of the largest in the world, with 5,300 pipes. A curious and unique ritual here is a solemn dance by a choir of boys before the altar at the festival of Corpus Christi and of the Immaculate Conception. The architecture and art of Spain are worthy of a great people. It seems to us a decadent nation, but it has a great history, after all, and the world owes it a debt. We have been agreeably impressed with the people. They have been polite and hospitable and friendly in every way. Instead of being unfriendly toward Americans because of the late unpleasantness the people are grateful to us for relieving them of some perplexing and troublesome conditions. The approaching marriage of the young king to Eva of Battenburg is evidently giving them much to think about, and they are not worrying over Cuba and the Philippines. If they only had the right sort of religion this rich peninsula would blossom as the rose. Think of less than 1,000 Protestants in all Portugal and 5,000 in all Spain! This may be read after the March offering, but if it has not been taken in your church take it at once and send it in to open a mission in some Roman Catholic country in which we have not a single mission to-day.

Death is life, just as our daily or momentarily dying body is none the less alive, and ever recruiting new forces is our crape-like, church-yardy word for change, for growth, there could be no prolongation of that which we call life. ## Our Budget —Home Missions May 6.

—Bible School Rally all through April.

—But Bible School rallies and home mission rallies can run right along together.

—There are special reasons why preachers and church officials should lay themselves out to make this May offering the largest we have ever made.

—"But now hath Christ been raised from the dead, the first fruits of them that are asleep."

—A thousand open doors await us where the people are hungering for the gospel of a risen Christ—the gospel of power and of hope.

—It is not a question of our being permitted to go where we wish with the gospel message, but of going where we are wanted and have not been able to go, for lack of men and means.

—"He is not here: he is risen."

—Look not for Christ in the graveyards. He is among the living. He is out in the mission fields. He is wherever men are struggling to redeem their fellow men from sin. He will be with and bless the church that makes sacrifices to send his gospel into destitute fields.

—"Wherefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, for as much as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

—S. W. Crutcher's address is now Braymer, Mo.

—The tenth district Indiana convention will be held at Connersville, April 30 and May 1.

—We regret to learn that Bro. Owen Livengood is sick in a hospital at Columbus, O.

—The new building at Okmulgee, I. T., was dedicated April 1. We hope to give fuller particulars.

—The southwest Missouri convention and ministerial institute will be held at Marionville, May 7-10.

—The church at Garland, Tex., has purchased a fine property for the home of C. A. Chasteen, the pastor.

—W. A. Baldwin, Nebraska state secretary, has changed his address to 541 North Twenty-eighth street, Lincoln.

—The conference for education in the south—a very important meeting—will take place at Lexington, Ky., May 2, 3, 4.

—The convention of the sixth district, Kansas, will be held at Smith Center, April 17-19, for which a fine program has been arranged.

—The letter appearing this week under the title, "As Seen From the Dome," ought to have preceded in order the one that appeared last week.

—Under the leadership of Lee Tinsley the church at Olney, Ill., has taken on new life, the audiences almost filling the capacity of the building.

—D. S. Domer, our preacher at Beaver City, Neb., has just been elected mayor on a temperance and reform platform by a handsome majority.

—Prof. Charles T. Paul finds his health will not permit him to remain as a missionary in China, and he will return to his work as professor of modern languages in Hiram College.

—Failing to secure a permanent pastor, the church at San Antonio, Tex., has recalled D. D. Boyle, who will remain with them for some weeks. J. C. Mason, the state evangelist, has just visited the church.

—It is probable that M. B. Ingle, of Harper, Kan., and H. E. Easton, of Chicago, Ill., who begin a meeting at Kinsley, Kan., April 15, will continue together in evangelistic work.

—The National Benevolent Association has received $100 on the annuity plan from Sister Mary Byram, of California, and a direct gift of $100 from A. W. Jeffress, of Illinois.

—George L. Snively is to dedicate at Keyesport, Ill., the third Lord's day in May. Brother Snively will be glad to undertake this office for other congregations intending to dedicate.

—George A. Miller has just entered upon his 13th year as pastor of the First Christian Church, Covington, Ky. The last year was the best of his ministry. There were 123 additions and over $8,000 were raised.

—The Foreign Society has received another gift of $200 on the annuity plan. This plan appeals especially to those 50 years of age or older. Write to F. M. Rains, secretary, Cincinnati, O., for full information.

—Messrs. Chapman and Chapman, architects, who have made a specialty of church building, are now better equipped than ever to servé all requiring their services. They have just taken new offices at 613 Caxton building, Cleveland, Ohio.

—The Park Church, Newcastle, Pa., W. L. Fisher, minister, becomes a living link in the Foreign Society, and will in the future support its own representative on the foreign field. This is the seventh church in Pennsylvania that has taken this step.

—One of our ministers writes: "Poor Zaccheus! How sad to leave him up a tree!" That was in a "spurious" gospel. But, alas! How many Zaccheuses there are up trees longing for a look at the Savior who is hidden from their view by our divisions and strifes!

—The Central Church, Peoria, Ill., joins the ranks of living link churches and will support a missionary on the foreign field. Harry F. Burns is the minister. There have been 16 new living link churches thus far, and more are expected before the close of the missionary year.

—The church building at Kellerton, Ia., has been totally destroyed by fire. A meeting was to have been held in it by Lawrence Wright. This meeting began on Monday night in the opera house. The brethren are making an effort to rebuild. They had very little insurance on their old building.

—The missionary forces in Marshall county, W. Va., are greatly encouraged over the large gains for foreign missions. The county is the first to become a living link, and it was not thought possible until such men as W. E. Pierce, J. H. Jordan, J. W. Yoho and Percy H. Wilson determined to make it the banner county of the state.

—The eightieth birthday of William Wirt, who has been a staunch and active member of the First Church of Youngstown, O., for sixty-three years, was made the occasion of a special dinner at the home of his son, Senator Wirt, a number of the men of the church participating in the celebration. Brother Wirt is one of the heroes of the faith.

—J. H. Mohorter, Pueblo, Col., writes: "The postman has just placed The Christian-Evangelist in my hand. I write now, before I read another line, to thank you from my heart for your article entitled 'What Ails Us?' How I long to see our people excited over some, or all, of the many questions to which you refer in your admirable article!"

—J. P. Lichtenberger says the Lenox Avenue Church, in New York, has just had a larger audience than it has had in two years past. This is the result of the New York campaign, to which we recently gave some space. Brother Scoville had not at that time reached the city, having been delayed to complete a fine meeting he has been holding at Connersville, Ind.

—At the close of a fine meeting held by L. N. D. Wells for the mission church at Coshocton, Ohio, the question of a new church was considered, when it was decided to undertake this at once. The building will be more centrally located, and on the main street of the city. Any outside help will be much appreciated by the struggling little band. J. N. Johnston is the pastor.

—During the past six months the attendance at the regular services of the church at Buffalo, Mo., has steadily increased, and every department of the work is in a growing condition. There were fifteen additions, $1,117 have been raised, a handsome parsonage has been erected, and other improvements made. As an appreciation of their pastor and his family, the members recently made a handsome present to them.

—The new Central Christian Church at Jacksonville, Ill., will be dedicated on the last Lord's day of this month. F. M. Rains and many old friends, members, and pastors are expected to be present. Russell F. Thrapp, the pastor, extends a cordial invitation to churches and preachers near by to spend the whole day with them. He writes: "At much sacrifice of time, money, and tears, we have erected a temple worthy of the Savior, to whom be praise forever."

—The Anderson people will not let Charles Reign Scoville go. Every time he passes near the city there is a call for him to stop. Closing another great meeting at Connersville, he was induced to make one more farewell address at Anderson on his road to Chicago. He received a great ovation, and there were 20 more additions, making 1,261 the number of actual additions while Brother Scoville was present. He is now in the New York campaign.

—The Board of Church Extension has received three annuity gifts, one of $250 from Oklahoma, another of $600 from friends in Nebraska, and the third from a friend in Ohio. The last is the one hundred and sixtieth gift to the Church Extension fund on the annuity plan. The annuity fund is now nearing $200,000. This fund is used to help build up churches where mission congregations would be compelled to pay from eight to twelve per cent. Write G. W. Muckley, 600 Waterworks Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., for particulars.

—The southeast Missouri convention meets at Bloomfield, April 25-27. J. H. Tiller, corresponding secretary, gives a cordial invitation to all preachers and church members in the district, and to the state mission workers, to attend.

—"Incurable anti-ism." There is a lot of it raising its unlovely head just now. "If all Christians were Christians" there would be more charity and less of the prize-fighter spirit among us. Brother Bush's San Francisco convention address is very much needed just now.

—The work at Fort Collins, Col., is goin ahead under the direction of J. F. Findley, who entered upon the pastorate there the first of this year and has since then organized a ministerial association, a men's meeting, a prayer-meeting and a teachers' meeting. The ladies' aid has been resuscitated, the Sunday-school increased about 40 per cent, provision has been made to pay off the church debt of $300 and improvements on the church property have been made. The Foreign Society's offering this year was doubled.

—Our church at Fayetteville, Ark., has just celebrated the fifty-eighth anniversary of its existence. There was a very large audience, composed of members of the regular congregation and members of the Cumberland Presbyterian church who are worshiping with the Christian church during the erection of their beautiful new edifice. Brother Ragland outlined briefly the history of our church in the city, and made a thoughtful plea for missions, resulting in an offering of over $205. The evening discourse was a plea for humility of character.

—"The Baptist Argus" has changed its form to that of a magazine, and has increased the number of pages to thirty-two, and has adopted a better quality of paper. It is a decided improvement every way. We notice some of its new departments, as "Current Events" and "Notes and Comments," are copied from THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST; but that only shows its good taste. We congratulate "The Argus" on its signs of prosperity. It is one of our most valued exchanges, and we wish it increased prosperity in its new and improved form.

—The report which apeared in our columns of the foreign missionary offering at Newman, Ill., may have misled some readers. It indicated that the apportionment this year was $7 more than was raised last year. This was correct, but the figures of the amount raised this year were not given, as they were not reported to us at the time. We have since learned that the amount raised this year was $42 on an apportionment of $25. Bro. O. L. Lyon is the minister.

—We just learn from a letter from J. W. Monser, of Kansas City, Mo., that his beloved wife, so widely and favorably known among the sisters of Missouri for her devotion to the Cause, is very seriously ill with cirrhosis of the liver. Everything is being done to alleviate her condition that is possible, and we are sure that those who know and love her will not fail to remember her in their prayers.

—There is one kind of letters, a few of which we have received, that we do not appreciate and we may as well be very frank about it. We have tried from the beginning of this discussion to avoid all personalities and treat all opponents with courtesy, to be perfectly fair, and to seek for the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. We do not relish, therefore, letters which indiscriminately class our paper with another as creating discord among the brethren by the unkind and unbrotherly discussion that is being carried on. We are willing to stand responsible for our own sins, but we are unwilling to be charged with the sins of others.

—A minister writes: "In conversation with several of our good people here this afternoon, I was asked to write to you, expressing our regret at the unholy and unseemly controversy in the columns of the ——. If it will bring to your heart a moment of joy and happiness, then I shall be glad I have written you to say that we rejoice with you in the freedom wherewith Christ has made us free, and from our hearts we thank you for the uplifting and inspiring pages of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The unwillingness of your contemporary to state the federation issue as it really is, is to our simple minds base and cruel." We can not quote a tithe of such messages of confidence and cheer that are pouring in upon us from our readers. We can assure them, however, that they are duly appreciated, not alone nor chiefly for any personal vindication, but for the assurance which they give us that at the core our brethren are sound, and desire truth and justice and fidelity to the great object for which we came into existence.

An Ohio State-Wide Evangelistic Campaign.

This is the period of great things in evangelism, and the board of managers of the Ohio Christian Missionary Society, with the advice and approval of W. J. Wright, national secretary of evangelism, has launched the plan of the largest simultaneous evangelistic campaign yet undertaken, which is to be no less than a state-wide simultaneous campaign among all the churches in Ohio, more than 500 in number. It will require all the evangelists of the brotherhood, and many pastors as well, to carry out this campaign successfully. The date has been set for Nov. 15, 1907, to Feb. 1, 1908. This is far enough in the future to give time for thorough preparation and to make it possible to secure the services of practically all the evangelists of the brotherhood, and they will all be needed. The date makes it possible for churches that want a fall meting to have it, and those that want a meeting in January, which is the rule in northern Ohio at least, to have meetings within the specified period, one before and one after the holidays. Churches will be able to lend their pastors for a meeting besides the one held in their own church. If this meeting is held before the holidays he can return and have two or three weeks in which to organize his forces for the meeting to be held at home, and if after the holidays he can organize the new converts and set them to work before going away to hold a meeting in another field.

It ought to be possible to add 10,000 to the Ohio forces in a campaign like this and to lend an impetus to evangelistic work that will affect for better things the Christian world. A permanent committee to have charge of this movement will be appointed at the state convention, in all probability to have its headquarters in the office of the Ohio Christian Missionary Society in Cleveland. Subcommittees will need to be organized in all our principal cities throughout the state. Thousands of dollars will be needed to help weak and struggling churches and to send evangelists into new and desert fields. The committee on management ought to be made the clearing house for securing and employing evangelists and the churches should nominate to the committee the evangelist which they wish to secure. This will simplify correspondence and greatly facilitate the work.

Ohio was the principal field of labor of that indefatigable and enthusiastic evangelist, Walter Scott, and thus in the early days set the pace in the progress of our people. We trust that this new movement will be a record breaker in the accomplishment of great things in the saving of men.

The Business Men's Association of the Christian Church.

The latent interest and enthusiastic participation of two hundred thousand men who are nominal church members, must be thoroughly and permanently aroused and strongly enlisted in the Master's service, if we would reach the goal of our hopes by 1909.

The plans of the Business Men's Association for organization and work in all our church activities among this listless class of men, are now clearly defined and fully set forth in the literature which will be furnished on application to the corresponding secretary.

The executive committee has recently selected an efficient man for this work, who will devote all his time, talent and energies to the establishment of local chapters of the association in all the larger congregations of the brotherhood, and he is now ready to address congregations that are interested and to attend our state conventions in advocacy of this new ministry to the men of the churches.

Under the new conditions and with the support from the consecrated brotherhood that this great work so richly deserves, the Business Men's Association is destined to become one of the leading factors in the upbuilding of the great benevolent, educational and missionary interests of the church, and we earnestly commend the new corresponding secretary and his mission to our great brotherhood.

J. W. Henry, the newly elected corresponding secretary, is a son of that lamented pioneer preacher of the south, Dr. A. C. Henry, of Alabama. He has been an active participant in the work of the church since his boyhood, and his efforts in establishing the cause in his home city, Mobile, have met with marked success. "Obligation comes with opportunity, and inaction is the great license giver to evil"—has been adopted by him as a motto. His office and headquarters are at 773 Aubert avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

The St. Louis Banquet.

As Mr. J. Breckenridge Jones, toastmaster, said, Brother Burns and Brother Carson, who were present at the banquet of the Business Men's Association of the St. Louis church, held at the Planters Hotel last week, had never seen anything like this occasion, although they have been longer identified with the work in St. Louis than almost any one else. It was something of a novelty; a little demonstration, as the chairman put it, that it is consistent to be a good churchman and a "good fellow." So enjoyable was the occasion that Mr. Jones' prophecy will no doubt be fulfilled. He predicted that seeds had been planted that will produce an annual flower, and that the business men, "the ambitiously good and the good ambitious men" of the churches, will meet again in much larger numbers next year in a similar evening of fellowship.

Dr. E. L. Powell, who has cultivated the banquet idea in his church at Louisville so successfully, was the chief speaker of the evening, his theme being "Good Fellowship." He did more than "Worm it along." The elements of good fellowship he found to be democracy and enjoyment. Men, he held, would answer any kind of an appeal that met them simply as brothermen. The chance to grasp their hands as churchmen might follow. Religion, he believed, has to do with our amusements no less than with our church life. Christian men are entitled to all the fun that other people are entitled to. Whatever ministers in a natural, normal way, that will help a man to lay aside the burdens of life is a good thing, but for successful good fellowship each must enter into the atmosphere of the occasion and make his personal contribution to the good time. Dr. Powell went on to speak of good citizenship as a part of religion. A good citizen ought to be a good Christian, but a good Christian must be a good citizen, he declared. Every churchman ought to be active in political affairs was his belief. God could use politics and would use politics for the fulfillment of his purposes. Following a strong plea for the majesty of the law, Brother Powell said that optimism was another element in good citizenship. He believed that our nation is to have its ideals more and more realized until Americanism will be identified with the ideals of the wide, wide world.

J. W. Henry, New Corresponding Secretary of the Business Men's Association of the Christian Church.

Mr. R. H. Stockton made a short talk, expressing his delight at the success of the banquet and his belief that it would accomplish a great deal of good for the churches of this city.

Mr. G. F. Johns, the editor of "The Post-Dispatch," who had, as he averred, been asked to give a ten-minutes' "jolly"—"somewhat diabolical way of limiting the freedom of the press," he regarded it—made a humorous and at the same time a very serious speech. There are so many brands of churches, he declared, that the newspaper man does not know, sometimes, which to choose, but he believed that while the attitude of the press to the churches is not what the churches would perhaps like, seeing that the public "swallows a scandal and only nibbles at a sermon," yet the newspaper men are trying, he believed, to educate the public up to the sermon. The press, he declared, would like to see the churches and the Christian religion a greater power, and with this declaration he set to work to preach a sermon himself, using as a text the question, "Are you Christians first, or business men first?" We have art in the museum, and religion in the churches, he said, but both ought to be in daily life to be effective. As a nation and as individuals, we do not deserve to survive unless we decide questions on the basis of "Is it right?"

J. W. Henry, who has been appointed corresponding secretary of the National Business Men's Association, was introduced, and Dr. J. H. Garrison was called upon unexpectedly to say a few words as a preacher and editor. He answered the suggestion of the secular editor that religious papers were made for some other purpose than selling by stating that religious editors still had some conscience left, and wanted to give the people what they ought to read rather than merely the scandal and other things which they might want to read. He expressed his concurrence in the thought that a great value attached to meetings of a social character like the one they were enjoying. He also mentioned the fact that the men present on this occasion belonged to churches whose peculiar plea was to bring about that union of Christians of which Mr. Johns and other newspaper men had seen the need.

Moving Forward by Moving Backward

The Easter call of the Benevolent Association is a call to move forward by turning backward to Christ. We have been deeply interested in the teaching of Christ and the church. Now there is a growing demand for a return to the spirit and life of the Master and the primitive church. If there is one thing that is made clear by the example and teaching of Christ it is that it is the duty and privilege of his disciples to share each other's burdens, and that they should care for each other in the misfortunes of life. He made such ministry a test of character when he said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

The apostolic church was fully endowed with the spirit of philanthropy from its birth. In the evolution of the organic life of the church the first function for which provision was made was the work of benevolence. The choicest spirits in the infant church were chosen and set apart to carefully look after the comfort and to save Christian widows and their children from the pains of poverty. When James offered a definition of true (pure) religion, he said it was "to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep one's self unspotted from the world." Paul, the first great missionary, never ceased to emphasize this mission of mercy. One of the beautiful fruits of his ministry was the offering made by his Gentile converts to the poor saints in the mother church at Jerusalem. And John, the beloved, who knew the heart of the Master, urges us to "bear one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ."

For a long time the church has neglected this Christlike ministry, leaving it to the secular organizations. The appeal of the suffering multitude has been made without ceasing to the church. At last she is awakening to the fact that her mission in the world is the same as her Lord's. Not since the days of the apostles has the spirit of brotherly helpfulness found such expression as it does today. Hospitals, asylums, orphanages and homes are opening their sheltering doors everywhere. This is one of the most hopeful signs on our religious horizon.

If the church of Christ is to have power in these days when values are to be determined by service, she must emphasize both hemispheres of the Gospel. It is not enough for her to teach the fatherhood of God. She must practice the brotherhood of man. It was the tender, motherly care of the church for humanity in both of its childhoods that touched the heart of the pagan world and won it to Christianity. Do the poor and needy turn to the church as to their best friend? Do friendless children and helpless, homeless old age find the consolation of a practical sympathy in the church? When these questions are answered in the affirmative, then will doubts be dissolved, criticism silenced and the church will be the most popular institution in the world. It is this grace of burden-bearing, sorrow-sharing love that gives charm and abiding worth to all others.

A Suggestion for Bible Schools.

Following a rally of all the Bible schools of the Christian churches in Greater Kansas City, the officers and teachers decided to have a meeting of all the workers in the form of a dinner. Each superintendent received tickets which were sold at 25 cents each and a report was made to the chairman. A reception committee, composed of one member from each of the various Bible schools, was appointed. After a social half hour in the parlors of the church, in which all tried to get acquainted, there followed the dinner and our program, which was as follows:

Bible study, by J. H. Hardin; solo, by Miss Lulu Hayes; Qualifications for Primary Teacher, Mrs. A. A. Buxton; three-minute talks on the subject, How to Impove our School: Quantity, Quality, by the following: Dr. Kate Maginnis, superintendent, Central, Kansas City, Kan.; C. W. McKowan, assistant superintendent, South Prospect; H. H. Borgman, superintendent, Hyde Park; Guy Withers, assistant superintendent, South Side.

Following this the question was asked: "Is this the last, or shall we have future occasions like this, or similar?" It was then unanimously decided that the present committee be retained and two more members added with a view of outlining something for the future and submitting their suggestions to a future meeting. We are better acquainted as common workers in a common cause. We feel that there are other teachers and officers who are facing the same questions we are trying to answer and we feel stronger for this touch of fellowship in the Master's cause.

"The Victory of Faith."

This is the first sermon in a volume of 20 sermons by E. L. Powell, of Louisville, Ky. I have read them all with great interest; first, because of my high personal esteem for the author and preacher; second, because the church for which he preaches was the religious home of my grandparents and other relatives for many years; third, I had heard that the preacher was a little shaky on "hell" and some other fiery questions. Indeed, I had heard that he was on the borderland of infidelity, and, according to his critics, a deserving subject for the "fire and brimstone" which he had spurned. But I have been glad to find, on examination, that he is "essentially orthodox." He believes there is a hell; he preaches against hell; he pleads with men "to escape the damnation of hell"; but he does not "believe in a material hell." He does not think the Scriptures teach that hell is literally or materially a lake of brimstone, a fiery furnace, a bottomless pit, outer darkness, or any such thing. But no matter whether he agrees with the dogmatic theologians who would consign him to "outer darkness" if he does not hold with them, his hell is bad enough to satisfy the most of people, both as to its Scripturalness and severity.

There are 20 sermons in the volume and 19 of them are on other questions, more delightful, if not more interesting, than the one referred to. All the sermons bear the marks of thought and all of them are felicitous in expression. But, like all published sermons, they can not convey, except by personal memory, the flash of the eye, the ring of the voice or the illustrating and emphatic gesture. They are strong enough to give pleasure to study, simple enough to be easily understood and palatable enough for the most of religious appetites. Such sermons can not fail to do good to the real lover of earnest, honest and faithful teaching.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Indian Territory.

Three good men have just been added to our Indian Territory forces, namely, J. W. Crow, Checotah; W. J. Fears, Bokchito, and A. B. Carpenter, Atoka. In the past two years our preachers have increased in the Indian Territory nearly four fold. Several good meetings have recently been held, the weather and other conditions considered: At Wilburton, by J. C. Mullens and Frank Brain; at Wynnewood, by O. M. Thomason; at Sulphur, by K. A. Williams, and at Haskell, by D. M. Harris, all under the auspices of our board of missions. L. B. Grogan has closed a meeting at Marlow, another mission. J. W. Ferrell, of Independence, Kan., recently closed a helpful meeting at Purcell, resulting in reviving that work. O. M. Thomason has been in a meeting with home forces at Davis.

The Church Extension has recently made loans to Muskogee, where George H. Farley ministers, and to Tulsa. Muskogee will rebuild. Tulsa will enlarge their building. The new buildings at Okmulgee and Pauls Valley are nearly ready for dedication. Will J. Slater writes that work has begun on a church building at Stilwell, to cost $1,500. The newly organized church at Claremore is also beginning a building.

T. F. Richardson sends in a good report from Ninnekah and Duncan, where he ministers. He will begin a meeting at Duncan April 25. The work at Hartshorn, under the excellent leadership of J. C. Mullens, is taking on new life, and the outlook is exceptionally good. This is also a mission under the auspices of our Indian Territory mission board, as are Tishomingo and a number of other points.—S. R. Hawkins, Cor. Sec.

The Greenville Meeting.

Our city has always been a stronghold of sectarianism. With a population of 3,500, it supports eight of these churches, demanding the ablest pulpit help of each denomination. It is the home of Greenville College, the single university of the Free Methodist Church, where are supposed to be found the brightest scholars, and where her ministry is educated.

The credit for the ingathering of 140 souls is due to the evangelist, E. E. Violett. Our church has been without a resident pastor for many years; we were even without an organization, the work of the church devolving upon the faithful few, who, determined that the work should not die, remained faithful to the trust committed to them. Moreover our plea has not been held before the people as it should have been; in some instances it has been compromised.

Grasping the situation within a few days, Brother Violett began a series of sermons on "The Plea of the Christian Church," "The Bible Terms of Pardon" and "Godly Living." Within a week the interest was so great that it was found necessary to move to the circuit court room, and yet from this, the largest auditorium in the city, hundreds were turned away nightly Brother Violett's sermons turned the town upside down. Some of the outstanding characteristics met in the religious world by our forefathers had to be met here, and every inch of the way had to be fought. Many anonymous letters were written to Brother Violett, showing him the so-called error of his way, but these he took into the pulpit and handled in such a manner that people could find no escape from the terms of pardon so clearly outlined in the New Testament. Brother Violett's familiarity with the Bible was one of the chief attractions of the meeting.

The membership of our church is more than doubled. We did not get the riffraff, but the very strongest, wealthiest and best people of the city. Brother Violett leaves us with the church organized with a board of four elders and ten deacons made up of the most representative men in the community. In our humble way we upheld Brother Violett's hands and worked with him side by side. The meeting goes into history, considering all the adverse circumstances, as one of the greatest held in our brotherhood.

Tallie Defrees, pastor.

Illinois.

Although these notes have been silent for some time, the work of our Master in Illinois has been moving forward with unusual vigor. Excellent meetings have been held in Camp Point, Clayton, Literberry, Hamilton, LaHarpe, Canton, Petersburg, Monmouth, Gibson City, Pekin, Lincoln, Cisne, Lake Fork, Versailles, Rantoul, Farmer City, Decatur, Walnut, New Bedford, Yorktown, Abingdon, Catlin, Minier, Danville, Pittsfield, Carthage, Elkville, Duquoin, Loraine, Hillsboro, Arcola and in many other places, while others are in promising progress, and others planning for meetings later.

New houses of worship are being erected or have been recently finished at Streator, Pontiac, Armington, Blue Mound, Minier, Bethany, Cairo, Carmi, Keensburg, New Boston, Plymouth, Forrest, Springfield Third Church and Jacksonville. The latter will have the best house in the state, at least of our people. During their erection evangelistic work and engagement in the great enterprises of the church for the most part goes steadily forward. It is right for a church to thoroughly equip itself for work. But a church building is a means, not an end. If the spiritual house does not keep pace with the material house; if spiritual growth and enlarged enterprise does not come with enlarged material equipment, something is wrong.

The following brethren are just getting well into their work in their new fields: E. O. Sharpe, at Winchester; M. S. Metzler, at Bethany; J. G. McNutt, at Sullivan; C. B. Dabney, at Barry; A. L. West, at Carlinville; O. L. Lyon, at Newman; J. L. Thompson, at Decatur; S. E. Sines, at Loami; G. J. Ellis, at Payson; H. S. Mavity, at Old Bedford; Charles Coleman, at Chandlerville; F. L. Peters, at Grayville; C. D. Haskell, at Williamsville; Walter Cline, at Lewiston, and R. L. Newton, at Normal. We trust all these are the beginnings of long pastorates. When a preacher and people agree to work together for the salvation of the people they should treat each other so well that neither would desire a change, but desire to make it a lifetime partnership, and should plan to this end. Long, enterprising, public spirited pastorates make strong churches.

We most cordially welcome to our ministry in Illinois: F. L. Peters, O. L. Lyon and J. W. Kilburn, A. L. West, J. L. Thompson and G. S. McGaughey. We regret to be called upon to give up from our state and from its great work L. T. Faulders, who goes to Wellington, Kan.; L. H. Stine, who goes to Tipton, Ind.; W. R. Lloyd, who returns to Kentucky; Harry E. Tucker, who has taken up the work in Platte City, Mo., and T. L. Young, who has gone to Nebraska. May the Lord bless their labors in their new fields and make them a blessing to many weary souls, and help them to build up great churches. Our loss is the gain of our five neighbor states, to which these men have gone. We pray, not that our great men should not be called into the regions beyond, but that the Lord of the harvest may send more laborers into his harvest. We are dependent upon the Lord for everything, yet he brings his gifts by human hands.

So we have been working hard to build up the college in Illinois, which trains the men for the Christian ministry, as well as training our other children for larger spiritual usefulness in other vocations. Not a day of its past history has been in vain. The Lord has honored and blessed its men, and many thousands have been turned to righteousness through the men it has trained. There is now a splendid student body in college who, under the wise and devoted training of such men as R. E. Hieronymus, B. J. Radford and Silas Jones, must go forth to be mighty men of God, worthy to join the honored alumni of former years.

But the work, the facilities and the student body must be enlarged. To this end during the fall 24 educational conferences were held in various parts of the state. These included two sessions each. The afternoon meeting was informal, followed by an evening address on "Christian Education." We are grateful for the co-operation which was everywhere accorded and to the lecturers who gave such splendid addresses. Those who appreciate the value and necessity of an educated ministry, and especially the necessity for more ministers, we believe will co-operate in the enlargement of Eureka College. This spirit of fellowship and co-operation to this end is growing.

Every church in the state that we could reach in person or by mail was urged to observe Education day. This ought to be a great factor in solving the educational problem. One hundred and fifty preachers promised to see that the day was observed in their congregations. All have not reported yet, but the reports that are in are very encouraging. Some say they found some opposition in their congregations, but missions and benevolences have their opposers. The true and aggressive can not wait until everybody is ready, or no move would ever be made. Some declined to observe Education day because the church was poor, or small, or in debt, or building, or had plenty to do at home. Is this the wise and true spirit to cultivate? Jesus said, "My meat is to do." Nothing makes churches strong more rapidly than to be doing things, especially if they are reaching the ends of the earth by what they do. To have a part in training 50 or 75 preachers of the Gospel who are soon to be scattered around the world proclaiming the unsearchable riches of Christ is an inspiration to any church.—J. G. Waggoner.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

The attendance at the district convention held at Richmond was far below what it should be. Probably the favorite of all the addresses was made by Mrs. Carrie P. Johnson, of Perrin, on "The Day of Opportunity." J. H. Hardin opened the convention and set a high pace, which the women easily maintained all through and which was much appreciated by all. The address by Harry E. Tucker, pastor at Platte City, a new man to the state, was a fitting close to a convention that was so full to the brim of hope and encouragment to all. The splendid women at the head of the district work. Miss Mary Hord and Mrs. B. F. Dougherty, were elected to serve another year. Reports show that not one auxiliary is failing to respond to all calls of the state, and many have reached their apportionments now and have another quarter to pass them. The spirit of the meeting was one of enlargement.—Mrs. L. G. Bantz.

A Sunday in Jamaica.

On the morning of March 18 we were in the mission home of the Kings Gate Church. Looking out of our wide open windows, the blue mountains reared their verdant summits skyward. The little valley surrounding us was bright with blossoming trees and stately palms. In the mission house yard were beautiful roses, delicate corallines, brilliant poinsettias, the stately hibiscus, many tinted crotons and nearly a score of other varieties of blossoms. The church yard and mission house grounds are separated by a blossoming hedge. Sitting at the window, we watched the people gather quietly for the service. For 30 years we had been studying the work and people of Jamaica, and remembering them to our Father. At last, to see those we had been trying to serve meant much to us, and made the hour a sacred one. Going through the side gate by way of the vestry into the chapel, we faced a congregation of nearly 200 people. It had been arranged that Brother Richardson should give the sermon, and that Mrs. Atwater and I should speak briefly at its close. Bro. C. E. Randall, the minister, had the service in charge. Mrs. Randall presided at the organ. Miss Ethel, Mr. Frank and Mr. Aubrey assisted with the music. The singing was hearty, worshipful and musical. When the morning psalm was read responsively it seemed there was not a man, woman or child that did not take part in it. When Mr. Randall read the lesson each one opened his Bible and followed him in the reading of it. When Mr. Richardson gave his text it also was found. We faced the people as they listened to his sermon, and if he has such profound and appreciative attention in his home church he must be very happy. He gave them a message deserving the remembrance we are sure it will receive. There were two confessions, young men from the Sunday-school, and two baptisms. After these and the Lord's supper had been attended to, Mrs. Atwater and I gave our messages of greeting. The service was two hours and a half long, yet no one seemed weary or listless. The greetings were warm and hearty. As soon as dinner was over we went to Samaria, a mile to the north, where Mrs. Randall, Miss Ethel, Mr. Frank and Mr. Aubrey conduct a Sunday-school. Here we found between 60 and 70 bright-faced boys and girls gathered. Mrs. Randall called the roll and there was but one pupil absent, and this because of sickness in the family. Mrs. Atwater and I were asked to take the time usually devoted to the lesson study. In talking to the boys and girls and questioning them we were surprised at the heartiness and correctness of all answers given. Their knowledge of the Bible is most creditable to their teachers, Our drive homeward took us past noble banyan trees, lofty palms, shapely lignum-vitae, bright with beautiful blue blossoms, and mangoes, with widespreading branches and glossy green leaves. Mr. Frank Randall drove us into Kingston, which is four miles south and west of Kings Gate, for the evening service at Duke Street Church, so well known to many of our people in the homeland. Bro. J. J. Handsaker is minister of this congregation, and had arranged for Mrs. Atwater and me to give the evening addresses. The house was full, the singing, Scripture reading and prayers were inspiring. It was easy to speak to a people giving such helpful attention, so to us the service was full of encouragement. Mr. Richordson had spoken here at 9 o'clock in the morning. While we were attending to this service in the evening he was with Mr. J. E. Randall at Torrington, and the members gave us glowing reports of his sermon. The drive home to Kings Gate under the glorious stars was full of quiet joy. Our first Lord's day in Jamaica had been a busy one, but most happy as well. We had found those whom we had gone far to see instructed in the Word of God, growing familiar with its teachings, worshiping in an orderly manner, and evidently reaching forward to the better gifts and graces that ever beckon God's children onward. One of the chief joys of the day was the happy gathering about the table after the return from Kingston. There were in the circle Mr. and Mrs. Randall, Miss Ethel, Mr. Frank, Mr. Aubrey, Allan Burgess and Mrs. Atwater and I. Over a fruit lunch we discussed our happy day, each one in the company rejoicing in the Lord and counting himself happy to have had a part in it.—Helen E. Moses.

Bible School Echoes.

We are glad to give a few echoes from the simultaneous Bible school campaign in Kentucky:

Nicholasville.—We shall devote one service to Bible school work one Sunday in April.—H. L. Calhoun.

Owensboro.—Last Sunday we had 380 in attendance and now we are moving for 500. We have had 92 additions in the Martin family revival here.—R. H. Crossfield.

Covington, Fourth Street.—We contemplate making a special effort in our Sunday-school work during next month, especially along the lines indicated by you. In order to stimulate interest we shall probably enter into a contest with the Newport school for the month. I will preach on the work and this, with preparation for the home offering, will be our peculiar work for April.—J. W. Hagin.

Millville.—I am planning a sermon on Sunday-school work. There will be special work during the campaign.—Henry J. Lunger.

Clifton, Louisville.—We shall be in a protracted meeting during most of April with J. Murray Taylor. Our object for the campaign will be to secure additions from our Sunday-school to the church.—J. S. Hilton.

Hoods.—We can not have much Sunday-school during the month of April on account of bad roads, but we shall make a special effort to get new scholars and to visit old scholars. Our school is a "freeze-out" school, but we begin the first of April.—Miss Emma Meadows.

Baxter.—I am in favor of your suggestions in reference to the Sunday-school campaign in the state. We organized our school last Sunday and have sent for our literature. We are going to make an effort as never before in Sunday-school work.—Mrs. Sarah Howard.

Sonora.—We shall direct our energies toward a home department, new scholars and visiting absentees.—S. M. Vinson.

Gee.—We have had no Sunday-school since last December, but we are going to organize next Sunday. The objects of our campaign are to be: new scholars and more thoroughly prepared lessons.—J. M. Worford.

Latonia.—Your plan to have all the churches devote at least one service to the interest of the local Bible school is an excellent one. I am in perfect accord with you as regards this. Already I have announced that my sermons in April shall be along the lines suggested by you, at least one sermon for each church for which I preach.—P. H. Duncan.

Erlanger.—We are going to make special effort to improve the Sunday-school in every department during the month of April. I shall preach one entire sermon on the work of the Bible school in addition to more or less emphasis every Sunday morning.—L. B. Haskins.

Knoxville.—I will address my churches on the subject of the Sunday-school on the third and fourth Sundays in this month. I hope that you will receive much encouragement in this campaign and that the Sunday-school work will receive a great impetus through the efforts of all interested.—H. P. Manning.

North Pleasureville.—I am in sympathy with the Bible school campaign. Our school will try to improve in "better lessons and more new scholars." We expect to observe all the days and to fall into line.—Charles Greenwell.

Lancaster.—We will observe Bible school day with all the emphasis and earnestness of a well organized church. We have one of the best Bible schools in Kentucky.—F. M. Tinder.

Ministerial Exchange.

One of our strong California churches desires to employ a man who is able to sing in a high-grade quartet, conduct a chorus choir and act as assistant pastor, with special emphasis on Sunday-school work; salary, $900. Only a man of first-class attainments and genuine religious character will be considered.—Grant K. Lewis, Long Beach, Cal.

Ellis B. Harris would like to correspond with ministers of ability, who are willing to work at a sacrifice, for fields in Washington, Idaho, Oregon and Colorado. Kindly enclose postage and recommendations, which will be returned. Address him at Ritzville, Wash.

The church at Tina, Mo., wants a minister at once; young man preferred. Address Miss Lou Boley.

Miss Mayme Eisenbarger, song evangelist, has open dates for spring and summer. Write her at Bethany, Mo.

L. A. Chapman can put churches in Illinois, Indiana or Ohio in correspondence with a minister of good education and experience. Address him at Mechanicsburg, Ill.

James S. Beem, Gilead, Neb., can hold meetings during the spring and summer.

D. Miller, Bellflower, Mo., can hold a two weeks' meeting in every month. Terms: Expenses, entertainment and free-will offering.

John W. Harrison, Waterville, Kan., wishes pastoral work for one or more country churches. A living salary only is asked and an opportunity to do good.

The Brooks Brothers' Meeting at Bloomington, Indiana

DESCRIBED BY THE MINISTER.

The congregation of the Church of Christ, worshiping on Kirkwood avenue, was formed from members that began to meet in the earliest part of the history of the town of Bloomington, Ind. The reformatory ideas thus early took hold of the people. The reorganization took place in 1833. From this the church has grown to its present proportions. J. M. Mathes and Elijah Goodwin were among the earlier preachers. The church has had as ministers and evangelists such men as these and John C. Miller, J. H. McCollough, W. B. F. Treat, in the middle period; A. B. Philputt, W. F. Ross, L. T. Vancleave and T. J. Clark, the present minister, who has served the church for twelve years. Amzi Atwater, one of the present elders, has been with the congregation for more than forty years as minister or elder. The present house, which will hold about 700 people, was built in 1883, but was remodeled five years ago, a Carnegie organ being installed. Three great meetings have been enjoyed by the church during the last six years. One was conducted by A. P. Cobb in 1900, one by R. W. Abberley in 1904, the accessions being respectively 130 and 180.

W. T. and A. K. Brooks.

The greatest of the meetings is that of which it is my purpose now to give an account. W. T. and A. K. Brooks came to us January 27, and in a preliminary meeting on Saturday night began the great meeting which ran into the middle of the ninth week, closing with 583 accessions. At the last meeting Brethren Brooks were with us, we held two services to accommodate the crowds that had long ago outgrown our house. The first service began at 7:15 for outsiders. The house was crowded full. The sermon was short, but earnest, and the invitation was responded to by 25 persons. It closed with several baptisms. The audience was sent away and in ten minutes the house was again packed by the members who were waiting on the outside. The second service was conducted in about the same way, the invitation being responded to by 7 more persons, making 32 for the evening, the largest number for any one day. Among the converts were 140 men counting from 15 years old and upward. Of these 58 were married men. Of this number 34 were joined by their wives. In many cases whole families, including all that were old enough, came into the church. The present membership of the church is about 1,300.

The congregation is now confronted with the serious problem of providing a house equal to the demands of the work. While the old house is not strictly modern in its appointments, it is a good house and for a congregation of 500 or 600 members would be considered first-class. But, like the maiden who has outgrown her frock, we are compelled to meet the demands created by our growth. Some steps have already been taken in this direction. What the final outcome will be the future alone can reveal. Some of the unusual features of the meetings may be of interest.

Three Sunday afternoon communion services were held, to which only the members were admitted. In every case the house was packed to its utmost capacity. The evangelists said that they had never seen such meetings as these were save in connection with our national conventions. They were all deeply spiritual in tone. Another was a Sunday afternoon meeting of a patriotic character for men only, to which the fraternal orders of the city were invited, and a sermon on good citizenship was the special feature. It was a very helpful meeting in every way. A third feature that was unusual was the fact that the last four or five Sunday evening services were so large that the members and children were asked to remain away, and yet the house was packed full and many were turned away. If we had possessed a house holding 1,500 people we could have filled it.

As to the human elements that contributed to the success, I would name discreet advertising, work by the ladies in visiting the homes of the people to extend hearty invitations and to learn of available material, the free reports in the daily papers by the evangelists each day, the splendid music by the choruses and the congregation under the fine leadership of A. K. Brooks, accompanied by special solos, duets and quartets by the leader and members of the regular choir of the church. And last, the faithful preaching by W. T. Brooks, which was plain, simple, earnest, heart-searching, but always gentle; never abusive. One of the men who was brought to Christ said to me: "These men believe in the Gospel which they preach." That, I think, was a great element in their strength in winning the attention and sympathy of the people.

Thomas J. Clark.

The strongest impression from it all left on my mind is that the Gospel of Christ is still the power that God uses to save men when the minister truly believes in it and preaches it in fidelity and love.—Thomas J. Clark.

A Word from the Evangelist.

Some have considered southern Indiana a hard field, but I have been in four revivals in recent years on the southern end of the Monon., viz.: Jeffersonville, Salem, Bedford and Bloomington, and I do not believe there is a better field anywhere than this section of the great state. Our meeting just closed, resulting in 579 additions while the evangelists were present, was remarkable in many ways, and some deductions can be made that will be of value to those who are studying situations in successful churches.

1. Long pastorates are essential to permanent and constant growth. Brother Clark has been leading the work here for twelve years, and has a great and good influence.

2. Long meetings are the kind that count for the most good. We continued nine weeks, and there was a constant increase of interest and power each week, the last night witnessing 32 additions. The treasury had a good surplus every week and the new members pledged $1,600 to the annual current expense fund, and former members increased their pledges to the same sum, making $3,200 increase. Not only so, but the new members will give several thousand dollars to the new church. If all our churches contemplating meetings would plan for a two months' campaign they would reach thousands of adults who are never reached in a short meeting of four weeks.

3. Our people need larger and better church buildings. It will pay us from every view point. We have had to preach here to separate sections, asking all members to stay at home on Sunday nights and at the communion services asking all outsiders to remain away. Our building would not seat over 700.

The Bloomington church is a mighty spiritual force. They will build; they will grow. This revival is but a foretaste of better things to come.—W. T. Brooks.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches for publication in this department. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism" or "by letter."

The Evangelization of the World in this Generation.

teers, the majority of them men, will answer the call of the churches this year. Prior to January 1, 1906, two thousand nine hundred and fifty-three of them had sailed on the King's business. What have the "rank and file" of the churches of Christ to say to this? What does it all mean? As Mr. Mott said, either a revival or a dreadful display of hypocrisy must follow this convention. It means that God is working among the choicest and brainiest of America's young manhood and womanhood. It means a closer union abroad and a closer federation at home, and an ultimate closer Christian union at home. The cry that our particular ensign is in danger will not appeal to the men and women who are going to be the forces during the oncoming years, and who see great continents neglected while the churches are painting old banners and not winning much new territory.

An Introduction of Mr. Thomas Kane.

Mr. Thomas Kane, of Chicago, whose advertisement in connection with the Winona movement, so widely and favorably known, appears in this issue of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, is a type of Christian business man whose tribe we hope to see greatly increased. While engaged in large business enterprises, Mr. Kane finds time and means to devote to public enterprises for the intellectual and moral welfare of the people. The Winona movement, under the able and wise management of some of the leading business men of the country, has had a remarkable success. We take pleasure in introducing Mr. Kane to our readers as a thoroughly reliable Christian business man, who, in addition to his work in connection with Winona, is the author of a number of tracts on the subject of giving which have had a wide circulation as coming from "A Layman." The most widely known is, "What we Owe and How to Pay It." His statements may be taken at par. We have no hesitancy in commending him to the confidence of our readers.

JESUS THE SINNER'S FRIEND.—Luke 7:36-50.

Memory Verse, 47.

Golden Text.—Thy faith hath saved thee; go in peaec.—Luke 7:50.

We are indebted to Luke alone for this incident which none of the other evangelists reports. We could not well spare it from the list of our Lord's words and deeds, for it is in many ways highly characteristic of him.

Simon the Pharisee wished Jesus to dine with him. Jesus was already looked upon with suspicion by the Pharisees, but they had not altogether declared war upon him. He was a distinguished person, and even a self-righteous Pharisee perhaps felt some honor in entertaining the popular teacher. But it was a condescending and uncordial hospitality which did not even trouble itself to provide the ordinary conveniences which courtesy required of an oriental host. Perhaps the spirit of Simon's invitation was akin to that of some modern "entertaining," whose motive is not friendship, but the desire to attract attention and create favorable comment.

A sinful woman entered. In the familiar language of Scripture, the term does not at once convey to us its full force. She was an outcast, of that forbidden caste whose very presence we, like the Pharisee, righteously feel to be a contamination. She had forfeited not only virtue but respectability. Many large sinners contrive to remain respectable, and your Pharisee is never surprised or shocked at the idea of associating with a respectable sinner. But the woman was not respectable. Yet Jesus permitted her to anoint his feet, and did not count her touch pollution.

The Pharisee mentally criticised the Master; first, doubtless, because he was looking for a chance to criticise, and second because he was afflicted with the myopia of self-righteousness and perfunctory religiosity. The self-righteous and self-appointed judges of their fellow men are always shortsighted. Like this Pharisee, they see only sinners where Jesus saw people. They see only breakers of the law, where Jesus, looking deeper, saw human hearts that throbbed with real human emotions. They see the malefactor deserving only contempt, ostracism and punishment, where Jesus saw the penitent, bearing the image of God, defiled but undestroyed.

There is no more important lesson than this that we may learn from Jesus. Men are still men and women still women, even in their sins. To say that a man is a sinner may be true, but it is always an incomplete statement, for it leaves out of account the great human values which still abide in him. If a wicked man were but a personification and instrument of sin, we might better try to destroy than to redeem him. But he is also a spirit in the likeness of God with a worth which not even his sin can destroy.

This is the ground for the passion for souls which all great spirits feel, and for that love of men of which even some people who think themselves irreligious have given proof. Man has a worth, which resides not in the incidentals of his birth or fortune or even of his virtue, but in his essential and fundamental manhood. He is therefore worth saving, and worth loving.

BY THE SEA OF GALILEE.—John 21:1-19.

There is an air of sacred romance about sailing to far lands as heralds of the cross; there is a glory in preaching to eager thousands all would gladly enter into; but after all, the proof the Savior seeks of our love for him is that we feed his sheep and care for his lambs, and no other flocks are dearer to him than surround us day by day.

> "And when I read the thrilling lore
> Of him who walked upon the sea,
> I long, O, how I long, once more
> To follow him in Galilee!
>
> O, Galilee, sweet Galilee!
> Where Jesus loved so much to be;
> O, Galilee, blue Galilee!
> Come sing thy song again to me."

It matters not to what Jesus alluded when he asked Peter, "Lovest thou me more than these?" Men may learnedly argue whether the comparison was between lovers or between Jesus in his poverty and the world with its wealth and laurels, but to us the question comes, "Is Jesus first in your affection and ambition?" With him and the Kingdom first all things are ours, and we are his and all is well forever more.

The right side of the ship was the side on which Jesus told those fishermen to throw the net, regardless of the point of the compass. This should be our guide in all our affairs. The right thing to say and do, the right place to go, the right character to be, are all just where Jesus would have us go, just what he would have us say and do and be, and then our nets shall always be filled with treasures of some precious sort.

Said the Savior: "Go tell my brethren, that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me." Jesus kept the appointment. And wherever he has promised to meet us, there will he be found if we keep the conditions of the appointment. He will meet the rich in the office to help sanctify their wealth; the poor in their need with assurances of love and a heaven after a while; the sinner in his penitent moods to forgive; the aspiring Christian to help him to higher altitudes of faith; the captive in his grave to liberate him and bear him aloft to the Father's house of many mansions.

Meeting Jesus: The shepherds, in wonderment (Luke 2:15-20); Simeon, in ecstasy (Luke 2:25-35); the wise men, with tribute (Matt. 2:1-11); the rabbis, in astonishment (Luke 2:41-47); the common people, with gladness (Mark 12:35-37); the true-hearted, to follow him (John 1:35-51); Zaccheus, to be converted (Luke 19:1-10); Martha and Mary, to be comforted (John 11:1-46); Nicodemus, to acknowledge his divinity (John 3:1,2); Pilate, to pronounce him innocent (Matt. 27:11-24); the disciples, in the mountain, to worship (Matt. 28:16-18); Paul, en route to Damascus (Acts 9:1-9); John, in Patmos (Rev. 1:9-20).

Jesus was wholly void of guile, yet he knew guileful men would assail the fact of his resurrection and seek to destroy all the sweet hopes springing from his open grave. Anticipating this and wishing to thoroughly buttress the faith of his disciples he repeatedly manifested himself to them and amid a great variety of circumstances. Amidst the aroma and gustatory delight of that banquet two senses testified to a superhuman presence. There and at other times they saw and heard him and handled him so they knew he was of flesh and blood and not an apparition. All five of men's senses testify that he lived again after death, and we believe that because he lives, we shall live also.

FOOT COMFORT

Obtained from Baths with Cuticura Soap and Anointings with Cuticura, the Great Skin Cure.

Soak the feet on retiring in a strong, hot, creamy lather of Cuticura Soap. Dry, and anoint freely with Cuticura Ointment, the great Skin Cure. Bandage lightly in old, soft cotton or linen. ### THE LORD'S DAY: HOW TO KEEP IT HOLY.—Luke 6:8-10; Ex. 20:8-11; Rev. 1:9-18.

| S. | Topic. | |

There are yet Patmos revelations of love and grandeur and immortality for all of us who will truly enter into the Spirit on the Lord's day.

Now that spring is making countrysides and city parks so alluring, we Endeavorers should keep in vivid memory that part of the pledge wherein we covenant faithful attendance on all the Lord's day services of our church.

They miss the sweets of Lord's day who regard it as a period of obligation rather than of privilege. Even its prohibitions are steps lifting us up into the realms of what ought to be, where faith, hope and love prevail and joy reigns supreme.

The distinguishing characteristic of the Sabbath was rest, that of Lord's day is worship. The rest that comes to the Christian on this day is that inhering in change of employ rather than in surcease of activity. Most Christians are busier on the Lord's day than on other days, yet they return to secular duties Monday rested and nerved to splendid endeavor. In seeking the Kingdom first they find much besides.

Those of us who labor may well have wholesome fear of the "Continental Sunday." One of the surest penalties of general American godlessness would be our deprivation of this sweet day of rest; for seven days instead of six would stern necessity lash us to our tasks nor allow us greater remuneration. For the sake of tired bodies and jaded minds, if for no higher consideration, we should keep the day sacred and pitch the music of our lives to its moral tone for all the week.

None of God's laws is arbitrary. All are expressions of philosophic principles in harmony with our greatest good. In Moses is found the best system of dietetics known to science. Our physical nature demands its Sabbath rest. Infidelic France would improve (?) the Law by making every tenth day a time of rest, but the wasting vitality of her people revealed they were sinning against themselves as well as against God. Every transgression brings a recompense of reward not simply because the divine commands are violated but because our welfare and happiness are found only in harmony with every word our Lord has spoken.

What wonderful testimony the observance of the Lord's day bears to the resurrection of Jesus! In six days God made the world. He rested on the seventh day and hallowed it. For thousands of years it was the sacred day of Israel. But soon after the burial of Jesus another day takes its place in the calendar of holy days, and when one would ask of his neighbor, "Why this change?" the answer was, "It is the Lord's day." On this day he arose from the dead, and under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, men began to celebrate resurrection day as of greater consequence than the one commemorating the consummation of creation. Had this change been made ages after the alleged resurrection, its testimony had not been so striking, but it began to be made at once, when the presentation of the dead body would have stopped its progress. Skepticism can not account for this historic change of days.

Irenics and Polemics.

round thinking it was the ocean. But one day I made a leap which gave me a look over into the illimitable sea. I could rest no longer, but leaped right over into the glorious expanse of truth and have never gone back.

At the same time, Dr. Mead considers that not only are there not materials for a complete theology, but the materials which exist are contradictory. Now, this sets me wondering what Dr. Mead thinks of the Bible. It seeems to me like asserting that there is no gold in the gold mines of the world, no money in the treasuries, no wheat in a field full of wheat, no fruit on a vine loaded with grapes, no love in the heart of a fond mother. I do not like this kind of sweeping conclusion. It is one of the most dangerous forms of undogmatic assumption. It sets up a fresh phase of the old difficulty in a repellent form. It affects to avoid dogma but really renews it.

Must We Give Up Theology?

Dr. Mead will puzzle many of his American and British readers. He carries, as I think, his pet idea too far. After telling us that we are without material for a complete scheme of theology, and that the materials which exist are contradictory, he reminds us that there are antitheses in theology, in philosophy and in life. He does not claim to have discovered these antitheses. He claims simply to set them forth impartially and unreservedly. There was a time when such an attempt would have been resented from both sides, and assailed both fiercely and successfully. But that time is past. The discovery of antitheses is one of the discoveries of our wonderful age, and a book chiefly devoted to setting them forth theologically is welcome. But I am glad to note that the accomplished editor of "The Expository Times" warns us that there is just one caution to be observed. He admonishes us that we should see to it that in setting one antithesis over against another we do not resolve the knowledge of God into nothing. It would be a poor result if Irenic Theology were to leave us without a theology at all.

Personal.

I conclude this article, as I commenced it, with personalia that may interest some of my American friends. It delights many of us here in England beyond measure to hear that our dearly loved Bro. G. T. Walden is about to sail from Australia for a holiday visit, the first portion of which he will spend here and the latter part in the United States. He is well known in London, where he was highly esteemed as the pastor for a few years at West London tabernacle. There he won a host of friends. He was a pattern pastor, but his native Sydney called him loudly to return. He is also a favorite in certain spheres in America, where he studied for the ministry and did some ministerial work as a very young man.

"A Refreshing Restatement."

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

I have just this very morning finished reading Brother Garrison's invaluable work on the Holy Spirit, and in a very humble way wish to give myself the pleasure of complimenting the author. There is no doubt but what he has rendered our cause an inestimable service if only the book may have wide publicity. The attitude toward the Holy Spirit, hitherto largely made prominent and taught by our people, has been very disappointing. He has given this matter a most refreshing restatement and really from the Scriptural standpoint also. I shall read the book again very soon.

Please send me THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I like your attitude on the question of union, as I was favored with some sample copies lately. F. E. LUMLEY.

Wychwood Park, Ontario.

No Basis of Federation in Oregon.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

To those unduly concerned about the situation in Oregon relative to the federation question, I desire to say that we, in Oregon, have not yet adopted any form of federation. Brother Chalmers McPherson, in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of March 15, says: "If the constitution recently adopted by the Oregon federation of churches is a correct interpretation of that proposed by the New York conference, etc." Fearing that a number of others may have the same impression that Brother McPherson has, I feel a correction should be made in your columns. Let me say:

1. There is no such thing in existence as "The Oregon Federation of Churches." The churches of Oregon have not yet agreed on a basis of federation. So, of course, no constitution has been adopted.

2. The Maine basis of federation was proposed before a committee representing several religious bodies of the state. This basis is eight years old and therefore is not an interpretation of the basis proposed by the New York conference.

3. This Maine basis was strenuously opposed by other religious bodies, notably the Baptist, in joint committee, that our committee, of which I am a member, with Bro. J. F. Ghormley and Bro. Davis Errett, hardly needed to raise any protest. This clearly shows that others are as fearful of some forms of federation as we are.

4. While a number of our preachers in Oregon have expressed themselves to me as favoring some form of federation, there is not one that would consent to the adoption of a basis that would prevent our people in this state from preaching the gospel and planting simply churches of Christ anywhere we wanted to. And I know of no advocate of federation among us who would consent to adopt such a basis.

5. So far as Oregon is concerned, brethren, quiet down. Don't lie awake, fearing that a whole state is going to secede and join the ranks of sectarianism, either inside our own brotherhood or outside.

Portland, Ore. E. S. MUCKLEY.

[And yet many good brethren have almost torn out their hair over the "Oregon Basis of Federation," and have almost torn out our hair because we did not print the proposed basis entire, instead of pointing out its objectionable features as we did, and showing why it could not be adopted. One editor, with a genius for misrepresentation, has insisted that this "Oregon Basis" was the real interpretation of the New York basis, occurring, under it, etc. Now, it appears that it is the old Maine plan of federation, which had been in use eight years in a state where the religious people have scarcely heard of the Disciples! We have said to our critics, "Wait till the churches of Oregon adopt something and we will print it." They have not yet adopted any plan, and when they do we venture to predict it will not contain the features to which we objected. All this ought to make some people feel ashamed, but we are afraid it will not.—EDITOR.]

Federation in France.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

Surely I am not the only reader of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who would wish the Assistant Editor had followed his impulse of relieving his mind on some questions, in spite of all considerations. It would have relieved their own minds, too. One feels "outre" at the way some of our leading papers—(alas, for the blind readers who do not see the heavenly light and have not the sense to quit reading!)—oppose the beautiful movement of federation and bring "opprobre" to our brotherhood. Don't they see they are putting the Disciples in contradiction with their own aim? Is it from our own brethren (?) that the false note must come in the symphony of union of God's people we are supposed to advocate and bring about? One is ashamed to make it known to others, outside the family circle.

I was so enthusiastic at the movement of federation that I sent my beloved CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to Christian friends in France, and continue to do so, that they might know us better—faults and all. But it makes one humble to reveal to outsiders such weakness—unscripturalness—as the article, "Are They Scriptural?" (Feb. 22, p. 242), and the note on the Kansas City preachers. Happily "A Point of Order" puts a little balm on one's ruffled feelings. Would to God all the frightened Disciples would read and understand and join the company of the rejoicing ones! The French Disciple-Baptists are bringing about a movement on the lines of the American federation. There is a splendid awakening in France now that the separation has released the bondage of the Reformed church. Federation and revival have been in the air some time past.

Of course, this is just to release the feelings of a lonely reader, and to convey sympathy and good wishes from an old acquaintance of the old world.

Did Not Unite.

The Congregational church of Mankato, Minn., E. L. Heermance, pastor, invited the Christian church of the same place, the writer pastor, to appoint a committee to meet in joint session with a like committee appointed by themselves to confer with reference to a union between the two churches.

We answered their letter and announced our committee. We left to them the call of the first joint meeting. At the same time the two churches united in calling an open conference on the question of Christian union, to be held in the Y. M. C. A. building, in which all churches and Christians interested were invited to participate.

Each committee put its platform of union in writing and turned it over to the other before the first joint conference. The result was the platforms were not read in the joint committee meeting. The Congregational pastor could not wait for prayer or organization of the joint committee, but at once jumped upon the section on the ordinances and said they would not give up "the right to sprinkle and baptize infants" and that there was no use for further discussion. Our committee replied, "We are here at your invitation, and hold ourselves at your service to meet with you as often and as long as you desire." But the joint meeting thus ended.

In the public conference on union, the Congregational pastor made an address and stated their basis of union. This was answered by an address by the Christian pastor with a statement of our basis of union. Then followed a general discussion in which many took part. Many questions were asked giving us a fine opportunity of making our position understood. This conference was presided over by the pastor of the Presbyterian church. He, all the pedobaptists and the reports in the papers belittled our differences, trying to make it appear that "the form of baptism" was the chasm between us.

Our committee, expressing its disappointment that the effort for union was so easily given up, asked the Congregational committee to meet with us to search the Scriptures with a determination to find a basis of union. They replied: "We do not care to discuss the teachings of the Scriptures, especially on the subject of baptism." Thus ended this effort for union. But great good was done. The spirit of the open conference, which was well attended, was all that could be asked. All the letters that passed between the two committees and the addresses of the two pastors, including the platforms offered, were published in our two daily papers; and the discussion was taken up by the papers of the adjacent counties. It was a great opportunity to get our plea before the public, and we made the best of it.

E. S. ORR.

[The foregoing report of the failure of the two churches above mentioned to unite, illustrates the fact that we have not yet gotten to a point where we can bring about a complete union on the New Testament basis. Probably the members of the Congregational church were actuated by concome so united in spirit that they will see members of the Christian church. What is needed is some method of working together that will not compromise the conscience of either church, until they can learn of each other and of Christ, and become united in spirit that they will see their way clearly to a union of organization. This is what federation proposes to do. It takes Christian sentiment where it is to-day and offers a practicable basis of co-operation, which, so far as we can see, is the best possible method of coming to a better understanding of each other and of the New Testament teaching on the subject of union.—EDITOR.]

Current Literature

"The Plea of the Disciples of Christ".*

This little volume from the pen of W. T. Moore and the press of the Christian Century Company, Chicago, is a valuable contribution to the current literature on that subject. Dr. Moore is a vigorous thinker, and what is quite as important, he has the courage of his convictions. He has long been identified with the religious movement whose position he treats, and had the privilege in his young manhood of sitting at the feet of "the Sage of Bethany," and ought to know pretty well, if any living man does, what our religious movement stands for. In this little volume he gives the public his mature thought on the subject. It is eminently worth reading by the younger generation of Christians who stand committed to this plea.

As even the sun has spots on it, we note some things in the book that seem to us subject to criticism. The volume is hardly "unique" in that it criticises abuses and misconceptions which the Disciples have been guilty of. Every writer, so far as we know, has felt at liberty to do that. Few have done it more discriminatingly than the author of this volume. We regret the frequent use of "Disciple" as an adjective. "Disciple doctrine," "Disciple movement," "Disciple position," we believe to be inadmissible phrases. The author makes a strong defense of the name, "Disciples of Christ," which is quite proper. We would like to see the use of the term "Disciple," as a qualifying term, entirely eliminated from our literature. We believe the author's treatment of the Holy Spirit is inadequate, not so much, however, in stating what the position has been, as stating what it ought to be.

On the whole, it might be said the work is too theological to be a statement of our position, which has been rather non-theological. It is the author's view of the theology that is involved in our fundamental position, and therefore better adapted to didactic use within the body, than a popular statement of our position for those without. It is, however, on the whole, very good theology. Some of the illustrations used are very happy, as that of the boiling point of water; one at least seems to us rather unfortunate, that of the gun, in which baptism takes the place of the trigger. We hope that will be revised out of future editions. The mechanical idea of baptism is too prevalent now, and the author himself is far from intending to favor that view.

But these are mere spots, as we said, on the face of this new luminary, which, in spite of them, emits a steady, true light on the old paths. We welcome the volume and bespeak for it a wide reading. These little criticisms we hope will whet our readers' appetite for it.

God's Choice of Men. By Rev. William R. Richards, D.D. Chas. Scribner's Sons, New York. $1.50 net.

In this book the author emphasizes the fact that God calls men; that he calls all men; that he calls them to a fruitful, willing, free, grateful, generous, personal service. The doctrine of election here presented is quite a swing from the old-fashioned Calvinism.

Tarbell's Teachers' Guide to the International Sunday-school Lessons for 1906. By Martha Tarbell, Ph.D. Pages 637. The Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis. Price $1.25.

This is the first issue of what will probably be a regular annual guide prepared by the present editor. It merits a cordial reception, for in get-up and matter it is superior to anything we have yet seen in the way of a guide to the Bible-school lessons. The author shows wide reading and has culled with great discrimination from the best writers, every extract being duly credited. The original part is also excellent. Leading off with some suggestions to teachers and an explanation of the synoptic gospels, individual lessons for the year on the Life of Christ are presented, the plan being to first give some historic data and follow this with the lesson text, then the explanation of words and phrases, and suggestive thoughts from helpful writers. Light from writers on oriental life is sought, after which there follow some paragraphs on the subject of the approach the lesson, for younger and older people. Lesson thoughts and illustrations from many sources come next, while some sentence sermons bearing on the theme under consideration are wisely selected. The lesson summary is given and subjects chosen for Bible class discussion. Work to be assigned for the next lesson is then suggested and a brief summary of the things of the Biblical narrative between it and the lesson just studied is outlined. The author is scholarly and has produced a scholarly guide, but it is a practical one and ought to be a great help in Sunday-school work.

Religion and Politics. By Rev. Algernon Sidney Crapsey. Thos. Whittaker, New York. $1.25 net.

A series of thirteen stimulating sermon lectures delivered to the congregation over which he is pastor, in the first nine of which are clearly set forth the relations of the church and state from the beginning of the Christian era down to the Reformation and the rise of the national churches. The last four chapters deal with "The Relation of Church and State in the United States," "The Commercialized Church in the Commercialized State," "The Present State of the Churches," and "The American Church-State." These essays, fresh and vigorous, are the product of a mind which possesses in large measure the insight essential to the treatment of such a theme. Religion and politics historically have been associated, and from the very nature of the case can not be dissociated. In fact, for the author, they are one.

Ten Plagues of Modern Egypt. By Isaac Newton McCash, A.M., LL.D., superintendent Iowa Anti-Saloon League, President Iowa Children's Home Society, Des Moines, Ia. With introduction by President J. A. Beattie, A.M., LL.D. Personal Help Publishing Company, Des Moines, Ia. Price $1.

This recent volume from the pen of Dr. McCash, who has been leading the temperance forces in Iowa as superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League, is a timely contribution to the work of modern moral and social reform which is so prominent a characteristic of our times. The book is happily named. The Ten Plagues of Egypt are taken to represent as many of our modern plagues which corrupt our present civilization. The subjects treated are: "Divorce"; "Amusements"; "Municipal Misrule"; "Corrupt Journalism"; "Lynching"; "Social Impurity"; "Our City Carnival"; "Murder—Self, and Others"; "Gambling"; "Intemperance"; with a concluding chapter on the Civic Conscience. In his introduction the author says that "Many favorite gods of the Nile have lost their names, but their spirits have transmigrated and live in modern forms." A trenchant chapter is devoted to each of the subjects named. The book will be found to be an arsenal for facts and arguments in pushing forward the cause of moral and political reform.

One who makes it his business to look into the darker side of our modern life is apt to grow pessimistic, but pessimism is no part of the creed of the author. He believes these evils can be remedied, and points out the remedies. The chapter on intemperance, as might be expected, is a most important one. It should be studied be every one who loves humanity. Truly does the author say: "The liquor business in our land is one of the most alarming things that it is possible to contemplate. Considering its almost unlimited wealth, its unscrupulous methods, its power to corrupt politicians, members of legislatures, even the courts; its persistent evasions of law and order; its contempt for all law, human or divine—we may well tremble for the future stability of the government of this country."

We shall hope to make frequent quotations from this work. The author has rendered splendid service to both church and state in the production of this volume and we could wish that its circulation might reach into the hundreds of thousands.

FERGUSON.

A. J. Ferguson died at his home in Huntsville, Mo., Feb. 24, 1906. He had been a Disciple for over 60 years. The congregation loses one of its men of real merit. The entire town mourns his loss, as he was loved by all. In his long life of 78 years, there is no record of stain. He lived near the ideal life as men seldom live, and passed from earth the admiration of all. There was no phase of our work that he was not interested in. His love for the church amounted to a passion, and his work for it will live on after him. He was buried with Masonic honors from the church he had served so long. J. R. Perkins.

MITCHELL.

Walter P. Mitchell, of Mt. Vernon, Mo., aged 76 years, 11 months and 19 days, died Feb. 20, 1906. He first suffered from la grippe, which developed into dropsy. He seemed to realize from the first that his time upon earth was short and was willing and ready to go. He was a good father and trained his children to travel in the path of truth and justice, regardless of how the world went. He had been a member of the Christian Church for nearly 40 years, and no one stood firmer in the faith. He was a great reader, and his old Bible is sacred to my memory, for it shows how he searched its pages to know the truth. He was born in Grayson county, Ky., in 1829. In 1852 he married Elizabeth W. Parrish. She died within a few years, leaving five children, four of whom are still living—Mrs. Mollie Hart and Mrs. Annie Olliver, of Cross Timbers; W. T. Mitchell, of Centerton, Ark., and Bettie, of Mt. Vernon, Mo. In 1867 he married Margaret W. Parrish, his first wife's sister, who is left a widow, with her three sons—Robert J., Frank and David, all of Mt. Vernon, Mo. In 1881 he moved to southwest Missouri and resided in Lawrence county, with the exception of 18 months spent in Barry county.

MOTT.

A. M. Mott was born in Southport, Chemung county, N. Y., Aug. 28, 1824. In 1845 he settled in Granville, Bradford county, Pa., and on Jan. 1, 1846, he was married to Miss Cynthia Bailey, of Granville, Pa., where they spent over half a century together. On the death of his companion he went to Miami county, Kan., to make his home with his son, Dr. D. V. Mott, of Fontana. He was again married to Mrs. Anna McCluskey, of Louisburg, Kan., Aug. 13, 1903. They lived in Louisburg until March, 1904, when they removed to Fontana. He died at his home March 2, 1906, after only a few days' illness, from pneumonia, at the advanced age of 81 years. He served in the Northern army and was honorably discharged at the close of the war. He became a Christian early in life, and was ordained to the ministry of the Christian Church in 1885. He was pastor of the church at Fontana, Kan., at the time of his death. He leaves a widow, one son and one brother, A. B. Mott, of Myrtle Creek, Ore. The funeral services were held at the Christian Church in Louisburg, Kan., March 3, conducted by T. J. Saunders, of Paola.

SCHOOLEY.

Orlando D. Schooley departed this life at his home in Clay City, Ill., Jan. 28, 1906, in his 68th year. Brother Schooley was born in Stark county, Ohio, in March, 1838. His father, William Schooley, was one of the pioneer preachers of the Western Reserve in Ohio, as well as in southern Illinois, and was an associate with the Campbells in their labors in Ohio. Brother Schooley entered the Lord's service at the age of 9 years. He enlisted in the United States army service for the preservation of the Union, in 1861, and was seriously wounded at the battle of Fort Donelson, Tenn., in 1862. The Confederates picked him up and he remained in the hospital in Nashville a prisoner for some time, and later was honorably discharged on account of the seriousness of the gunshot wound. For over 20 years preceding his death he was a great sufferer through the loss of one eye and paralysis on the right side of his face. He was a faithful elder of the church and taught the highest class in the Sunday-school for 33 years. He sought above all things to emulate Christ in his daily life. Everybody mourns the loss of this grand servant of God, who was an encyclopedia of information on the Bible and general topics. He leaves a wife, one son and two daughters. He was my boyhood uncle.

The Way to Live Forever.*

BY EDITH M. BOSTAPH.

There's a way to live forever
  On this earth of pain and tears,
A way to bless each passing age
  Down the stream of fleeting years.
There's a way of never dying,
  Though this mortal flesh decay,
Though our weary souls are wafted
  By the heavenly hosts away.

There's a way to light the pathways
  To be trod by babes unborn,
On and on through generations
  Till the resurrection morn;
There's a way to brighten firesides,
  Though we sleep beneath the sod;
We're alive, our deeds are living,
  While our spirits rest with God.

Why not live this life unending?
  God has willed it so to be;
Why not serve as gleaming beacons
  Down through all eternity?
Naught to us could be more fitting,
  God's own Son has marked the way;
He will aid and bless each effort
  To bring in the perfect day.

Then, the way to live forever,
  Is to be, to say and do
Just what Christ our Lord has taught us
  All our earthly journey through.
Ever doing deeds of kindness,
  Ever breathing words of love,
Ever bearing others' burdens,
  Till we gain the courts above.

Ever shedding rays of sunshine,
  Ever wiping tears away,
Ever soothing sad hearts, broken,
  Strewing flowers where we may.
Let us then our courses finish
  Ere we soar for worlds on high,
For "to live in hearts of others"
  Is to never, never die.

The Bronze Vase.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis.

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters.

[Mrs. Revore, mother of the twins, Raymund and Rhoda, when dying, tells them that there is a secret which may or may not have great influence upon their later lives. The secret is in a letter which is in a tin box in the bank of the town. The box is to be opened and the letter read only if either of the twins makes the other very unhappy. The mother dies, and Raymund and Rhoda are left to the mercy of strangers, their mother's half-brother in St. Louis having failed to answer repeated letters from Mrs. Revore. Rhoda has a visit from a mysterious man named Boggs, who claims to have been sent by Mrs. Revore's half-brother to find out whether the children know anything of a bronze vase. After much delay it is decided to send Rhoda to an orphan home, and Raymund to Mr. Omer's farm.]

CHAPTER XIII.

When Rhoda and Raymund went back home with Jack Bellfield, all hope of flight or of resistance to the decree of Mrs. Omer was gone. In the despair of her heart Rhoda had expressed to Wizzen her miserable conviction, which was, indeed, the miserable truth: "Then there is nothing we can do—nothing!" For there was ineed nothing that the orphans could do. All things must now be done for them. Of all the good people of the town of Crawley there was not one father or one mother who was willing to receive the children into their homes; some, like Mrs. Walker, had as many children as they could care for; some, like Mrs. Grice, had married off their children, but were not strong enough to undertake the support of two children of twelve years; some, like Miss Glory Aggency, did not understand children, and did not want to understand children. The rest had reasons sufficient to themselves. There was, then, nothing to be done. Rhoda must go to the orphan home in Kansas City; Raymund must go to the Omer farm.

Saturday, the day of separation, came bright and warm, as if to mock the tortured little hearts of the orphans. It seemed that the birds had learned sweet new songs for the celebration of their departure. Many were sorry to learn of Mrs. Omer's decision in regard to the Revore children, but not sorry enough to interfere. Had it not been for Mrs. Omer, their future might still have remained undecided. Mrs. Omer had won her position of "leader," not by accident or by favor. She was a woman of action. The ladies of Crawley might have met during several months to discuss what was to be done; but the leader had done it. It was settled. The train for Kansas City left Crawley about four in the afternoon. At three the large carriage from the Omer farm drew up before Brother Bellfield's, and the horses took fright at the intermediary who was walking the fence. In the excitement that ensued, for the horses required a good deal of soothing and holding, the strain of the situation was somewhat relaxed. However much orphans must be torn from each other's arms, and taken, one to a distant city, the other to a strange farm, the first thing always to be done is to quiet two large bay horses that snort and caper at a little girl falling off a fence. Perhaps the scaring of the horses was the best thing that could have happened; for by the time they had been quieted and the sobbing intermediary had been carried to her mother, it was time for them to start to the station. Mr. Omer, it was explained, would be at the station to drive the horses home; and as it was supposed that Raymund would want to go the train, to see as much of his sister as possible, he would be driven from there to the farm. Accordingly, the orphans were placed in the back seat, where they nestled in each other's arms. Rhoda carried with her a bundle containing a new dress and some things the ladies had made for her, and at Raymund's feet were his school books, his few belongings, and the green umbrella. "Always keep the umbrella," said Rhoda, as she hugged him convulsively, "it and mamma's Bible are all we have that belonged to her." Rhoda was to take the Bible. Brother Bellfield rode with Mrs. Omer on the front seat, while Morton, looking much more melancholy than usual, and Jack who, in honor of the occasion, tried hard not to whistle, walked after the carriage to the station. At the station, they all stood together in a mournful and silent group. Mr. Omer had not yet arrived and the horses had been fastened to a tree some distance from the railroad track. Jack at one time tried to engage Raymund in a wrestling match because he liked his younger friend very much and wanted to express his feelings in the most natural way; but Raymund was too despondent over losing Rhoda to make even a faint-hearted attempt to parry the other's attack. At last, the train rumbled into sight and came snorting up to the platform.

"Rhoda," said Raymund, "you tell the others good-bye first."

"You have been mighty good to us, Brother Belllfield." said Rhoda, grasping his hand.

"Bless your heart, dear," said the minister, "I only wish I could have been of use to you."

"It was of use," said Rhoda, "that you were so kind and friendly all the time."

"Have to hurry!" warned Mrs. Omer.

"Good-bye, Rhoda," said Morton, looking darker and handsomer and more tragic than Rhoda had ever seen him. "I'm going to miss you awfully. It looks like nobody understands me but you. Good-bye, dear Rhoda," and to her surprise he suddenly bent and kissed her. It made her feel strange, and she started rather awkwardly. Morton reddened a little himself, as if he had taken himself by surprise. He added earnestly, "And there's one thing I want you to remember all the time, Rhoda; I want you to remember that you can always count on me!"

"Thank you," said Rhoda very shyly. She had never been shy with Morton before. Of course, the kiss was all right—she was only twelve, and he was quite an old man with a mustache; quite twenty-two years old in fact; but she could not help wondering vaguely how she was to count on him and how much she should count. Perhaps that was a question that would have puzzled even Mr. Merlin Aggency.

"Good-bye," called Jack, who was already retreating toward the carriage, where he meant to have out his farewell wrestling match with Raymund, when the train was gone. He feared if he lingered with the others he would have to shake hands with Rhoda, and maybe she would think that since she had kissed Morton, she ought to kiss him, too, and there would be a lot of "baby-doin's,," as Jack expressed the conventional deportment of society.

"Good-bye," called Rhoda, gazing wistfully after the lithe form and the handsome, merry face. But the next moment Raymund had his arms about her and she forgot everything else but him. They whispered together while the others looked another way, and Brother Bellfield cleared his throat and tried to look stern, and Mrs. Omer cried, "You will lose the train!" Mrs. Omer was already seated in the coach, with her bonnet thrust from the window.

Then Rhoda went on the car and, in fact, all of them boarded the train. Rhoda remembered to send her love to Mrs. Bellfield, who had been obliged to stay at home to receive Mr. Jasper's wife's father and mother, due in a few minutes; and Rhoda sent a kind word to Mr. Jasper, who would have come to the train with the others, had he not been on the eve of finding an opening in the real estate business in the heart of the town. The engine bell began to ring and all hurried out upon the platform. Rhoda stuck her head out to look at Raymund, who stood under her window. She reached down and they clasped hands once more. Then the train quivered and started slowly forward. Raymund waved his handkerchief, and turned away, for Rhoda had cautioned him not to "watch her out of sight for fear of bad luck." Overcome with a sense of desolation that was not the less overpowering on account of the proximity of Mrs. Omer, Rhoda was about to lift her hands to bury her face in them, when the car door was flung loudly open. A man staggered into the aisle, reeling from the motion of the car, and from the unaccustomed speed with which he had come to the station. He hurried to Rhoda's seat, breathing very heavily and perspiring freely from running. It was Wizzen.

Mrs. Omer glared at him in speechless amazement as he grasped the arm of the seat with a hand none too clean, and brushed her gown with a blue trousers-leg which showed streaks of whitewash. "Here, Rhoda," he said, pressing a box into her hand. Before she could say a word he turned and hurried out of the car, slamming the door behind him. The train was now going at a rate fast enough to give the coach a decided rock from side to side, but the laborer leaped to the ground without accident, and the next moment he was out of sight. Rhoda looked down at the box. It was of plain pasteboard, and had once, according to the red label, contained matches. It felt very heavy. She pulled the little pasteboard drawer out, and found that it contained a large silver watch with an open face.

"Oh, oh!" cried Rhoda, with something like a sob, though there was a smile on her face. There was no note in the box, nor anything written upon it. She turned the watch over, and tried to open the heavy lid. She then found that it was not fastened. It had been left purposely unsnapped. Rhoda opened the side and saw that something had been rudely cut in the silver, apparently with a pocket knife. She read, "For Rhody."

"What will you ever do with it?" asked Mrs. Omer, gazing at the large object with contemptuous scorn.

"I will keep it as long as I live!" cried Rhoda. And it occurred to her that life is very strange. She had thought that as soon as the train pulled out of Crawley she would indulge in a long, long cry. And something had happened to bring smiles to her face, and warm her heart! How could she altogether despair while the great silver watch ticked so heartily and throbbed so busily? It almost seemed as if Wizzen were present, trying in his awkward way to comfort her. Thus one of the darkest hours in Rhoda's life was lightened by the generous kindness of a humble friend.

A Lily and a Dream.

For Easter Tide.

By Mrs. Harriet A. Cheever.

Mr. Hiram Burrows was walking dreamily homeward, when his attention was arrested by a bed of crocuses that were blooming away as if almost conscious of their fresh and welcome young lives.

The April day had been uncomfortably warm, and the feeling of lassitude so common in the spring had caused the business man to walk with footsteps that fairly lagged, now that the day's duties were over.

He paused with his overcoat over his arm to gaze for a moment at the cherry blossoms that had caught his eye, and as he did so a swift memory overtook him, making his eyes more dreamy still as he bent them toward the glowing crocus bed.

It is said that to the thoughtful mind something of sadness inheres in the atmosphere and spirit of the spring. Alas, it is doubtless the power of contrast. Life of itself needs cheering; the springtide does not mock at the sterner months just past, but in a subtle way it breathes pensively over—what? Days less bright, perhaps; joys that no springtide ever can recall; hopes that her blossoms can not renew.

As Mr. Burrows regarded the yellow, white and purple blooms, he said softly to himself:

"How mother loved her flowers! How many times have I seen her bending over the straw heaped against the side of the house, where in early spring she would search for the first snowdrop My dear mother! These little flowers bring her so plainly to mind. Well"—the strong man heaved a sigh—"thank God I was able to surround her with all the comforts she could desire for several years before she passed away. Yes, I can see her so plainly bending over the snowdrop bed, then the crocuses, then the hyacinths. Three years since she left me, and it seems but yesterday. By the way"—

He paused as some other recollection suddenly forced itself. Coming from town, and also while striding through the city streets he had almost unconsciously peered at the great majestic lilies rearing their beautiful heads in the windows of the various florists. In the rush and turmoil of business hours they had been merely noticed, not dwelt upon. Now, however, they rose in stately beauty before the man's eyes, and gave him pause, as he slowly realized something of their present significance.

He had been a good son, this man, standing for a brief moment before a bed of springtime blooms, and he had been the son, moreover, of a good and godly mother. Great and perhaps unusual affection had existed between the two.

Early widowhood had thrown the entire responsibility of parentage upon the mother, and most faithfully and lovingly she had reared and cared for her son. He left but one great and fond desire of her heart unrealized. In a good-natured but persistent way he somehow failed to feel or express any leanings toward a direct Christian life.

She did not preach to him, this sagacious mother of a grown-up, intelligent son. No; she just prayed. If daily example and outspoken views on the all-important subject had failed to impress the man as she desired, no discourses or unwelcome pleas were likely to touch him. So she just prayed.

When she passed away so quickly that the man who bade her "good-night" when she retired in her usual health, was roused by the maid early in the morning to hear that "the dear mistress has gone to glory in her sleep," he refused to believe it. Even when he stood beside her, and for the first time in his life missed her dear, fond greeting, he gazed in deep-hearted grief at the beloved and placid face, and said mechanically:

"Mother, speak to me!"

And that was three years ago. "At Easter-lily-time," he soliloquized, "I remember there were those white lilies all about the room at that service we had to have. I noticed so little what was said that I can't recall a single sentence now. But I thought of mother in a pained way when I saw the lilies to-day. I think I always shall. Sunday will be Easter, day after to-morrow. To-morrow I'll buy a bunch of Easter lilies and lay them above her last resting-place, my dear mother!"

Men do not shed tears as easily as women. But Mr. Hiram Burrows really did not see the objects on which his clear eyes rested as he turned from the garden with its vari-colored blooms. The eye of the mind was too busy with its figures, seen with as much inward clearness as were outward forms with the outward eye.

The vision of a sweet-faced woman with love-light in her eyes was before him; he fancied he could hear her voice as, sighing with a sudden longing, he neared his home.

Sunday, and a typical day for Easter day. Mr. Burrows was not in the habit of going to church, so he waited until after the bells had stopped ringing and people were in their pews before going forth to the errand of the morning.

On the mantel, in a tall crystal vase, stood a bunch of rare Easter lilies. They were perfect throughout. The tallest one, of unusual size, was surrounded by its leaves of glossy green, while just below it clustered its sister lilies, pure, shapely and spotless. Through the glass shone the thick green stalks in fine contrast with the flowers.

They looked very sweet, and hopeful in a way, Mr Burrows thougtht, as he placed them on the mound a half hour later. There was an iron chair in the lot, and, the day being warm again for the season, he sat down, and looked around, thinking how beautiful the lilies were, how friendly were the robins, caroling away as if the world were filled only with gladness. Then his eyes rested on the lilies again, and he fell to thinking of his mother.

"She would have been in church at this time," he murmured, "poor mother, she was so devoted to the church, and"—he smiled at the recollection—"she used to throw out so many little hints about how glad she would be if I only attended more regularly. I really used to go quite often to please her. Long time since I've been now," he added, indifferently.

He sat some time longer, then arose and turned away. As he did so, he cast a long, lingering look at the mound and at the lilies resting on it. A deep sigh escaped him as he said softly:

"I hope to meet my mother again; these partings with which earth is full are sad and bitter things, but I hope to meet my dear mother again."

He strolled about for a while, then returned to his home. Naturally, his mother was much in his mind during the day, and more than once he saw in his mind's eye the flowers resting where he had placed them.

The calm day brought a night of calm repose. Somewhere in the solemn night Mr. Burrows thought himself on a most beautiful road. It sloped upward, yet was easy of ascent. On either side were flowers, such beautiful flowers! They carried the idea of a kind of fadeless bloom. The roses unfolded with a grace and sweetness such as he thought he had never seen before, at least he had never noticed such faultless blooms. As he strolled up higher and higher the air became so clear that the sleeping man felt himself growing young again, and now he walked through an avenue of lilies, pure, majestic, shining lilies; white, oh, so white! Azaleas showed here and there, spotless as the snow; ah, but the lilies!

Their fragrance, delicate and delightful, perfumed all the pleasant, easy way, and the avenue up which he was wandering was surely leading to some beautiful mansion which he already could see looming in the distance.

Then, all at once, he was at the entrance to grounds which were simply celestial. Their beauties were indescribable, and in the most natural way imaginable there, just inside the fairy-like enclosure—that was all he could liken it to—stood his mother—his dear, dear mother, so beloved, so longed for! She looked young, surprisingly young, and when he sought the reason he saw that her face was without a wrinkle, without a trace of care, without a suggestion of anxiety or of anything that could possibly hurt or alarm.

With a cry of gladness he stretched out his arms and bounded toward her. But some imperceptible barrier intervened; he could not quite enter that most beautiful place. There was no thorny hedge, no showy bush with prickly edges. No, the charming border, that was all; the charming border between the flowery road and that wonderful place was made up of sunny blossoms, giving forth no hint of power or hindrance. Yet the man could not step over them. And there he stood, his mother smiling, sweet and youthful, in no way perturbed, although her son lingered outside that mysterious border.

Did she fail to understand that he could not quite compass the passage lying so placidly between them? And was the whole spirit and atmosphere of the blessed place such that nothing could grieve or pain her; that nothing could cause anxiety or disquieting wonderment?

It occurred to him to try some other portion of the border. It might be that only at one particular spot he would be kept out.

Ah, mother love was the same dear, constant thing in this perfect place, as elsewhere. For close beside him, only for that mystic border, walked his mother; the smile on her face, the glad welcome in her eyes. He must reach her; must feel the touch of her hands again!

Again he bent forward. No; he could not enter at that point. Then began a baffling, anxious, piteous search for some accessible foot of ground where he could overleap that almost maddening barrier.

Surely, surely his mother failed to comprehend the sorrow of his soul. Yes, it was the sorrow of his soul that was distressing him far beyond any mere physical pain or ailment which he had ever experienced.

Alas, what did it mean! Flowers and sweetness everywhere, and above all a mother's radiant smile, drawing, coaxing, yet all of no avail. He could not enter in!

"How can I learn the way?" he cried, in helpless perplexity. "Who will help me? Who will guide me?"

Afar he heard the church bells, something as he had heard them in the morning of that Easter day.

"Church bells," he murmured, in distress. "I might have learned much from the church, but I can not go back to that now. Having traveled these heavenly roads and reached this place of wondrous mansions and holy blooms, I can not go back to merely common scenes, nor can I leave my mother."

He fell next to wondering at the continued serenity of his mother's face, the peacefulness of her smile.

"She feels sure I will reach her some time," he told himself. "Oh, could I but find the way!"

Then the "place" slowly receded. He tried to keep his eyes upon it, but it faded and faded; the flowers mixed themselves with a vague, mazy mass of other things hard to make out; there came a sense of loneliness, disquietude and unrest; a puff of wind blew a window shade inward with a slight noise and—the man awoke.

He did not shudder nor start. At the moment of waking he knew he had been visited by a vivid dream; that was all; merely a dream; no real barrier had been between himself and his mother; what real barrier could come between them? He was no child to be troubled by a dream.

Yet, he did not sleep again. For despite his own most manly and confident assurance that a dream was but a dream, one thing haunted him.

He had seen his mother, seen her more plainly than he ever had imagined he could see her again this side of heaven. Yet, he could not reach her.

The thought haunted him all the week. On Saturday night he deliberately sat down to argue out the impression with his own soul. Then the distress of his soul recurred to him with extreme clearness, as it existed when standing on this side of the flowery border that he could not pass.

Sunday morning he went to church in answer to the calling bells. Nothing unusual came of it. But he kept on going to church, and by degrees he began to learn and to realize that Jesus Christ died, rose from the dead and went to prepare a place for his followers. For his followers!

How simple, yet how significant. Triflers and idlers could not saunter into Paradise unprepared, easy as it had once seemed.

When another Easter day dawned Mr. Burrows went early in the morning and placed the filial loving tribute of flowers above his mother's last earthly resting place, and he felt a joyous assurance that should he come to her glorious home in Paradise, he would not find an entrance impossible for him.

He had become a follower of his crucified and risen Lord.

The Easter Lilies by the Reading Desk.

BY ANNIE HAMILTON DONNELL.

The minister sighed. The minister's wife held one hand and regarded the five widespread fingers soberly.

"I don't see how I can spare the other hand, Joel," she said, "and I've used up all the fingers on this one. That's the fifth sigh of size that you've sighed! I don't count the little ones.'

Then, of course, the minister smiled, but almost at once his fine, clean face grew grave again. The sixth sigh lurked behind his lips.

"What is it, Joel?"

"Oh, things, Barby, just things." He tried to answer lightly. But she knew it was the old heartaching Thing. She let her mending slide to the floor and leaned toward him till both her firm, warm palms framed his face. "Now," she said, "begin, dear. It begins with a J, doesn't it?"

"With a capital J, Barby."

"I thought so. Well, Joey—what about Joey, dear? The same ache?"

"The same ache, only it aches a little harder to-night," the minister said slowly.

Barbara Sloan's sweet face broke suddenly. This little Joey was hers, too, and the ache was hers. She rose and beckoned to the minister.

"Let's go in and see him, dear," she whispered. "He looks so sweet asleep."

Joey's small, oval face made a faint pink spot on the pollow. One little hand was flung out over the quilts, and the father and mother smiled and nodded to each other when they saw what it clutched.

"He always takes Julius Cæsar to bed," laughed Barbara, softly, through her tears.

They stood a long time looking down at the little face. The old ache ached on in their hearts.

"He looks just like other boys in his sleep, Joel," Barbara whispered. "Other boys' eyes are shut then. Suppose he opened his eyes this minute and looked at us!" she sobbed. "What would you say, Joel?"

"Let us pray," murmured the minister solemnly.

"But he never will—he never will!" the little mother sobbed in her anguish. "Joel Sloan, I call it a cruel thing that for lack of money—just money—we can't give him the one chance for his sight! Think of the people who throw away money—think of them, Joel! Your own people—think of the money your own people will spend for flowers on Easter—flowers for banking each window, costly roses and hyacinths and Easter lilies. Joel, Joel, do you know? It might save our boy's sight!"

Joel Sloan's strongly molded lips trembled like a woman's. His eyes were on the face among the pillows—and the face was so dear to him!

"Yes, Barby, I know," he said brokenly. "It was that made me sigh to-night."

"The flowers, dear?"

"The flowers—and that. To think what they might do for Joey. It is hard to think just a display of flowers could save a little child's sight—our little child's."

Barbara's gentle fingers smoothed his face. "Perhaps might save it, dear," she said. "Only perhaps, you know—we could not be sure. And, Joel, don't say 'just a display of flowers.' I don't like to hear you say it that way—in that tone, dear. I'm sorry I spoke as I did. They are our people, Joel."

"And he is our son," the minister answered.

Back in the bright sitting-room they talked together quietly, the wave of their sorrow calmed a little.

"The flowers are not just for display, really, Joel," Barbara persisted. "The flowers are for the day of his rising, dear—in memory of One they love."

But the minister slowly shook his head. "Barby, I'm afraid there is creeping into our church custom of trimming so profusely for Easter, more of a love for display than real love for Christ. I wish I could think it was for the day of his rising, as you say. But would not one white lily, perfect and true, do that? Does it need a profusion of the costliest flowers, when the money they cost might serve him so much better? No, no; I was not thinking then of Joey. I meant the pitiable poor, dear. A little money might save so many."

"They give away the flowers to the poor and sick after service," murmured the minister's wife, thoughtfully.

"Yes, that helps. That is beautiful. Last year they gave Tim Duggan's sick wife a glorious cluster of lilies. She died the next six months for lack of nourishing food and medicines. The doctor told me afterward."

"Oh, Joel, I never knew!"

"No, dear; I didn't until too late. I only mention it now to prove that our heart is not always in the giving. We should have found out more as to the Duggans' needs. We were too satisfied with bestowing Easter flowers."

The church over which Joel Sloan presided was not perhaps very wealthy, but on Easter there was no more magnificent display found anywhere than in the First Church. People who had little themselves, seemed to vie with one another for a rich display.

More than once the minister had questioned in his own mind this custom his people had fallen into, and more than ever was the subject brought to him when, passing along the street one year just previous to Easter, he had overheard the words from a group of children:

"You won't have near so many Easter lilies as we shall at our church!" To which had been replied, "I guess not; First Church has the most." The words lingered with the minister, and he shook his head slowly as he passed along to his home. "Flowers in profusion," he murmured, "but what of the Christ?"

Now another Easter was at hand, and the effort both the minister and his wife were making to save out of his salary enough for an expensive operation on their blind child's eyes, brougt to both still more sharply the question as to whether it was right to spend so much for flowers in a world where there was such sore need.

"Palms and ferns and roses and the perfume of Easter lilies will be around me as I break the Bread of Life to my people on Easter morning, and down in my heart and in Barby's will be the terrible longing that Joey might be given a chance for sight," he thought, and then strove to drive the subject from him.

A few days before Easter Sunday the chairman of the flower committee passed slowly up the walk to the parsonage. She would consult the minister's wife as to the flowers to be selected. In the open window, with her little blind son in her lap, the minister's wife was sitting. She did not see the one approaching, who stood ready to touch the bell, when a high, childish voice reached her.

"I can almost see Julius Cæsar, mamma—but—I—don't feel certain 'bout his eyes. You said they were black, didn't you, mamma?"

"Very black, Joey."

"An' shiny?"

"As two beads!"

"Black and shiny, but I can't see black and shiny with my fingers, mamma," and even to the listener outside, the wistfulness in the little voice was plain enough. It was too plain to the mother!

"I wish I could see black and shiny, mamma! Your eyes are blue, and so's your ribbon, but they look just the same as if they were black and shiny, when you look at 'em with the ends of your fingers. Why don't they look different, mamma? What makes 'em blue?"

With a sudden sharp wail, the boy lifted the little knit doll on his knee, and hurled it out of the window. It fell on the grass and stared stolidly up with its shiny black eyes at the one standing with her hand on the bell.

"I can't see Julius Cæsar! I don't love him," wailed the child.

The mother caught him to her breast. He was finding out, and she had tried so hard to keep Joey from finding out what he had lost!

"Joey, Joey! You can't see mamma, but you love her, don't you?" she cried.

"Oh, yes, you, mamma! I love you. But it seems as if—seems just as if I could love you a l-i-t-t-l e harder if I could see you, mamma. Your eyes, you know—if I knew what blue was—an' the way your mouth looks when it smiles. An' the love in your eyes, mamma—you can't guess how I want to see how the love looks in your eyes when you bend to kiss me!"

The chairman suddenly caught her breath. She stooped and picked up the doll. She was thinking of the tiny child at home who could see her when she loved him. She thought she could feel his warm little hands against her cheeks. And it came to her as she stood thus, that there had been a rumor of the minister's family wishing to consult a specialist in the hope he could remedy their child's eyesight, but that the expense would be large. It was doubtless the lack of money that was keeping them from carrying out their wish. The clear voice of the child broke in again, and now it was a pitiable wail.

"I want to see you, mamma! I want to see my own mamma!"

What a picture the two made, the child crushed in the arms of the mother, down whose face the tears were raining! And then there came sharp words from the mother, words that told the listener that back of them was fierce agony.

"Joey, listen to mamma," she cried. "Listen hard. Somewhere, a good way off, there is a great, powerful man who can open little boy's eyes—sometimes, Joey, a little way. But you must pay him a lot of money, and papa and mamma haven't saved enough yet. Oh, no, not nearly enough, Joey! But we're doing our best, Joey. Some time we shall have saved enough, and then perhaps—just perhaps—he may open your eyes."

"Oh, mamma! if he should—just a little way! Just far enough to see you! If he'll only open 'em as far as that—oh, mamma!"

It terrified the one upon the step. She had come for advice as to the flowers to be selected for banking the windows and decorations for the church. But she stole quietly away, feeling that it was not a time to intrude. And Barbara, seeing her child's face, would have given much to be able to take back her words. What had she done? What if sight never came to her boy—never could come? Would he ever forget?

"Oh, Lord, make him forget!" she prayed inwardly, crushing the little figure closer to her. "I didn't stop to think—I was crazy. I wanted him to have something to hope for, Lord. Help me to take it back!"

Quietly in her home, the chairman of the flower committee of the church strove to still the beating of her heart. But before her was a child pleading that he might see his mother's face. Was it funds the minister and his wife were waiting for? With a sting the thought presented itself. Then came the remembrance of the Easter fund the church always appropriated for flowers. Often two hundred dollars, sometimes more, was raised. Gradually in the eyes of the one sitting there, dawned a purpose, and quickly she re-donned the hat she had thrown aside, and drew on her gloves.

"It is the time for the blossoming of hope," she murmured, and passed from the room.

When Easter Sunday came, the world was ready. Fresh and clean it welcomed the Risen One's day. At sunrise the birds sang from the tree tops, and the Easter carols poured from tiny throats until they made a jubilee song.

A few hours later, as the bells rang out from the church steeples, Mr. Sloan and his wife, Barbara, walked to church with the little blind son between them.

When, in her own pew, Barbara threw her arms reassuringly around the child whose feet they had guided to the house of God, a strange tenderness came to her, a sense of rest. And as she bowed her head, her heart went out in loving thankfulness for the risen Christ. As she lifted her head, she was conscious of a sweet simplicity in the arrangement of the church—only here and there a bit of green through which the sunshine filtered, and by the reading desk one stately stalk of Easter lilies in all their beauty.

The minister at the reading desk opened the Bible, and a white envelope lay between the leaves. Slipping out the enclosure, his wife saw him glance at a thin slip of paper, then at the words written on the white sheet enclosed with it. His face brightened, his shoulders straightened, and a wonderful look of youth clothed him as he looked out over his congregation.

"My people"—his voice was vibrant, yet tender, and it thrilled his wife to her very heart's core, as she sat with parted lips, her eyes riveted upon him. When had she seen Joel look like that? But her husband was speaking, and she leaned forward.

"My people," he said again, paused slightly, then went on: "I find here a check for five hundred dollars. And written here," and he held up the sheet of white paper, "the words, 'To help Joey see. In memory of the Christ.' God bless you all." He gave a swift glance at Barbara, and then said: "Let us pray."

Is it to be wondered at that when Joey, looking into his mother's loving face, would sometimes cry, "I see the love, mamma, right in the corner of your eyes!" and his laugh would ring out merrily, the mother should catch the boy to her and again and again shower his face with kisses and say, "Our precious Easter gift!" or that the minister, if near, should add, "From a loving people, Barbara, whose hearts held the Christ"?—Young People's Weekly.

BAPTISMAL PANTS.

We handle only the best grade of these goods. They are made in regula- sizes, based on the size of the foot. It is not expected that they shall fit closer- ly, and a variation of an inch or two either way makes no difference. If an exceptional size is wanted it can be made to measure, and will require from two to four weeks' time, and cost one dollar and fifty cents extra. In making to order the measurements necessary are: 1. Size of boot worn; 2. The length of the inside seam of the pants; 3. The hip (not waist) measurement over the pants.

TREASURER'S QUARTERLY REPORT POST-CARD.

So arranged as to enable the Church Treasurer to send a quarterly report of the amount paid in, and the amount due each quarter. These are "time savers," and enable the membership to easily understand, at the close of each quarter, how their account stands. Price, per hundred, postpaid .......... $ .50

UNIFORM PRAYER-MEETING TOPICS

A Topical Leaflet of four pages, containing the list of subjects, with the Scripture references. Per 100 copies .......... $ .25

Topical Outlines is a neat booklet of 32 pages, containing a careful analysis of the Midweek Prayer-Meeting themes selected by the Committee, with copious Scripture References under each subdivision, which will materially assist the Leader and aid the members of the Church in taking an intelligent part in the service. To every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST: For some time I have talked to the subscribers of this publication collectively, through the medium of advertisements. I want now to talk to you individually. While you may not be personally afflicted with your eyes yet there is no doubt whatever but that a member of your family or some dear friend or acquaintance is suffering, and in immediate need of treatment. I want to influence you, if possible, to investigate my treatment, a treatment which has saved thousands from blindness, and which has met with the unqualified endorsement of the press, the pulpit and the general public. I want to bring to your attention especially, the endorsement of Bro. H. C. Hall, president of the company which publishes the Christian Standard, Lookout and Weekly, and the testimonials of such well-known workers as Rev. Chas. A. Young, editor of the Christian Century; W. D. Cree, of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST; Rev. Bruce Brown, Rev. John W. Allen, Rev. Lloyd Darsie, Mrs. (Rev.) S. Rohrer, Mrs. Cana Scott Willard, superintendent of the Bible Study Club, of Bethany, Neb., and numerous other persons with whom you are either personally acquainted or of whom you have heard through their great work. All of the above- named have been in a position to personally speak of the modern methods which I have employed for the treatment of the eye. Until comparatively recently, the most ordinary eye troubles were looked upon with terror and misgivings. Crude and painful methods of treatment were resorted to, and in a majority of all cases, eye surgeons demanded operations of grave danger. No doubt the knife has ruined more eyes than all other causes put together. This so impressed me when I first commenced the study of medicine, that I decided then and there to devote my entire time in an endeavor to improve upon the barbarous and unsuccessful treatments then in vogue. How successful I have been is best attested by the thousands of cured patients scattered over the entire world. Right here, however, I want to impress upon my reader the fact that any one who claims to cure every case of eye trouble, is advertising an impossibility. I claim that the treatments which I employ (the result of my life's labors), are unsurpassed, and I must even say that there are some cases beyond all human help. There are two things to which I particularly attribute my success. In the first place, every case, however trivial, receives my personal attention, and the treatment, if the case is placed in my hands, is under my direct personal supervision until pronounced as cured. The other stepping stone to my success I am quite certain has been equally important. It has been my desire in making a diagnosis of a case to give my honest opinion, and if there is no hope, I candidly say so. You need have no fear, therefore, in referring any case to me for my opinion.

Some physicians, no doubt, have natural ability far above others. The precaution to be observed by individuals contemplating submitting their eyes to treatment, is to select the particular skilled oculist whose treatment in individual cases has been most successful; on the other hand, to avoid the oculist and especially the general practitioner and optician whose plans of procedure require long periods of time in acquiring results that are even doubtful to him. To be able to select the proper course of medication and the particular modification of well-tested procedures of cure in every case presented to be cured, requires tact and special ability that comes from intelligent application, scientifically directed study, natural adaptability, abundance of perceptive capacity to take advantage of modern discoveries, and creative skill to apply them in specialty eye practice, and an unlimited practical experience of years in the management and treatment of eye diseases, together with a thorough knowledge of the general sciences of medicine and surgery. My life-long experience with eye diseases as an eye specialist certainly can not fail to assure all that they will receive most honorable and skillful attention at my hands.

AND WITH ABSOLUTELY NO PAIN.

I am particularly anxious to learn of every case which has suffered unsuccessful treatment or which has been pronounced incurable by physicians or oculists. Do not let your unsuccessful experiments discourage you. Write me a full history of the trouble and I will be pleased to give the matter my personal attention and give you my opinion. THIS OPINION AS WELL AS MY ADVICE WILL COST YOU NOTHING WHATEVER AND WILL NOT PUT YOU UNDER ANY OBLIGATIONS OF ANY KIND OR NATURE. This is a fair proposition. You may rest assured that if I consider your case beyond relief that I will candidly tell you so. I have no false hopes to hold out, neither do I make any promises which I can not fulfill. If later, you decide to place your case in my hands for treatment, you will find my fees reasonable and within your grasp. A moment of your time in writing to me may save you or a friend from a life of darkness.

I have still some copies of the new edition of my book, "DISEASES OF THE EYE, THEIR CURE WITHOUT SURGERY." This book is without a doubt the finest of its kind in the world, and consists of eighty pages, sixty pages of which are devoted to eye diseases. Nearly fifty ordinary diseased conditions are treated in separate chapters, and the book is illustrated throughout with colored plates. The remaining twenty pages are devoted to testimonials from cured patients all over the country. The book is well worth its weight in gold to any one who is suffering with their eyes. Many books of comparatively no value are daily sold for $5 a copy. I offer it to you, however, for the asking. IT IS ABSOLUTELY FREE. Either fill out the attached coupon and return it to me, or mail me your name and address, upon a postal card. DO IT NOW.

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
